The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all necessary expenses, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, purchase of books of reference and periodicals, rent outside of the District of Columbia, traveling and subsistence expenses of officers and employees, and all other necessary incidental expenses not included in the foregoing, to enable the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to collect and compile information regarding the restrictions and regulations of trade imposed by foreign countries, $25,000.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I do so for the purpose of inquiring what has been done under this China trade act. What has been accomplished? What work has already been done?

Mr. SHREVE. The organization is just being completed now. The bureau estimates that the funds will all come back and more, too. This simply provides for the expense of the operations here in Washington. The bureau is very hopeful, and they say this service is very much in demand in China, and people are inclined to take advantage of it at once, and it will be a source of remuneration to the Government.

Mr. DOWELL. What lines of trade have they taken up?

Mr. SHREVE. I do not think the country has availed itself yet of the full opportunity offered here. It is a line of work which has just recently been taken up.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF THE CENSUS.

Salaries: Director, $6,000; 5 chief statisticians, at $5,300 each; chief clerk, $3,300; geographer, $2,400; 14 expert chiefs of divisions, at $2,250 each; private secretary and stenographer to director, $2,100; clerks—60 of class 4, 70 of class 3, 100 of class 2, 200 of class 1, 80 at $1,000 each, 50 at $900 each; skilled laborers—3 at $1,000 each, 1 at $900; 3 messengers, at $840 each; 5 assistant messengers, at $720 each; 5 unskilled laborers, at $720 each; 4 messenger boys, at $480 each; in all, $802,340.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DOWELL. I want to make inquiry about the paragraph at the bottom of page 10. I have not been able to hear how far the Clerk has been reading. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. DOWELL. May I inquire of the chairman of the committee the necessity for all of the expense of $802,340 in this department? For what purpose is it now being used that would require this expenditure?

Mr. SHREVE. This seems to be a necessary requirement of the department that has been determined by actual service running along for a period of years. There is a slight reduction in the expenses of the Bureau of the Census at this time; I think it is about $5,000. That comes about, I think, by reason of the adoption of certain mechanical devices. Otherwise the appropriation is substantially the same as last year.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not simply because it has been "running along," and for no good reason?

Mr. SHREVE. Oh, no. We went into the matter very carefully last year and made a very careful analysis of the situation. We found that there are perhaps more hard-working men employed over there in the Bureau of the Census than in almost any other department.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman explain what they are doing?

Mr. SHREVE. They are working on the tabulation of the various censuses they have to take; for instance, a census of manufactures, over and above what they take every 10 years. Take the question of vital statistics as one illustration; there was $106,000 appropriated for that last year. We have increased that $10,000. Here is an inquiry including hides, sugar, and so forth. Here is another—wealth, debt, taxation. Then here is a census of electrical industries, and cotton, tobacco, fats, and oils, and marriage and divorce. All these things come under that department.

Mr. DOWELL. Is this work done each year, or is it separate work done in different years?

Mr. SHREVE. Under the acts of Congress some of these things come up every two years, as, for instance, the manufactures census. The cotton census comes up every year.

Mr. KING. What good does all this do to the general country? Why not cut out some of these things and save some of this money? That could be done by the leadership of this Congress, and then we could get down to a pre-war condition. There is no attempt to cut down anything. Here are these fellows who sit down over there and compile great masses of figures, and they are published in elaborate reports, and nobody reads them.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I think almost everybody gets every few days a report from the department as to the condition of the cotton industry, for example. Congress passed a law requiring the department to do that, and they are simply carrying out the law.

Mr. KING. I will bet that the gentleman never read one of them.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Far be it from me; I never made a bet with the gentleman. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Commissioner of Navigation to secure uniformity in the admeasurement of vessels, including the employment of an adjuster of admeasurements at not to exceed $2,260, purchase and exchange of admeasuring instruments, traveling and incidental expenses, $3,760.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. After the word "instruments," on page 14, line 23, insert "For purchase and repair of instruments for counting passengers." Then when we arrive at lines 24 and 25 I shall ask to strike out those two lines. The item is very small. The traveling and incidental expenses are $3,760. I do not see why we should add another paragraph to this.

Mr. SHREVE. Well, Mr. Chairman, this is a very small matter. I will say that we have made only a couple of increases in this department. One is $15,000 for the enforcement of the navigation laws, and that money will all come back in the way of fees, and so forth. Another one is in the matter of wireless communication.

We have provided for the purchase and repair of instruments for counting passengers, $250. These instruments wear out. If we allow the amendment offered by my colleague from Pennsylvania we simply reduce the amount in the former paragraph to secure uniformity in the admeasurement of vessels, and we really feel that this sum is not sufficient now. I therefore reluctantly will have to object to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WATSON: Page 14, line 23, after the word "instruments" insert the words "For purchase and repair of instruments for counting passengers."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Commerce to employ, temporarily, such persons as may be necessary, of whom not more than two at any one time may be employed in the District of Columbia, to enforce the laws to prevent overcrowding of passenger and excursion vessels, and all necessary expenses in connection therewith, $10,000.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DOWELL. May I inquire of the chairman of the committee the difference in the employment of the persons in the two paragraphs just read, aside from the one for the District of Columbia?

Mr. SHREVE. The men employed in the enforcement of the navigation laws are usually connected with the ships. A revenue cutter, or whatever they call the ship, will go out and locate in a certain point, and then from that point the boats go out in the vicinity and make an examination as to how the laws are being enforced. Where they find violations of the law, for instance, where a boat is carrying too many passengers and has not on it enough life preservers, and so forth, that matter is handled in a different way. The other matter that the gentleman referred to, as I understand it, is simply a matter of a man who stands on the pier and checks up the people who go on the boat.

Mr. DOWELL. That is $75,000.

Mr. SHREVE. Yes. That is the permanent law.

Mr. DOWELL. The other item apparently is temporary?

Mr. SHREVE. That is during the summer season. I suppose that refers to the excursion business. That applies at the height of the season, when it is necessary to provide for them.

Mr. DOWELL. This is an extra employment?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes. The bill has provided for the same thing for many years.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Wireless communication laws: To enable the Secretary of Commerce to enforce the acts of Congress "to require apparatus and operators for radio communication on certain ocean steamers" and "to regulate radio communication" and carry out the international radio telegraphic convention, and to employ such persons and means as may be necessary, this employment to include salaries of employees in the District of Columbia not exceeding $17,600, traveling and subsistence expenses, purchase and exchange of instruments, technical books, rent and all other miscellaneous items and necessary expenses not included in the foregoing, $139,200.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking my colleague, the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. SHREVE], regarding this appropriation of $139,200 for purposes connected with wireless communication. I see the statement is made in the hearings that there are 564 broadcasting stations in the United States, which shows the growth of this wonderful method of communication. I wish to know just what authority this bureau has for the regulation of radio communication, as to these broadcasting stations?

Mr. SHREVE. This department has had charge of this matter for some time. I am not familiar with the law that was passed in the beginning, but it is undoubtedly a fact that the department would not take up the work without sufficient authorization of law. If the gentleman will notice this appropriation from year to year, he will see that it has been increasing. Last year we found that after the bill had passed the House and before it passed the Senate certain matters of information came before the Department of Commerce which made it absolutely necessary to increase the appropriation at the other end of the Capitol. For instance, there was the interference that was going on. It requires a great deal of tact and skill to prevent interference. The experts who are sent abroad must be real experts in their line and must know how to regulate these instruments and must know how to detect interference.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. May I ask my colleague right there how they regulate communication? Is it through licenses?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes; entirely.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Every broadcasting station must have a license?

Mr. SHREVE. Absolutely.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Is there anything in the complaint I have heard from some sources that there is discrimination in favor of the large electrical companies in allowing them to secure broadcasting licenses rather than the smaller broadcasters?

Mr. SHREVE. No; I think there is nothing whatsoever in that statement. I am sure that any person who desires to use the service will be accommodated in some way.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. How can they all be accommodated where there are only a certain limited number of meter lengths that can be used?

Mr. SHREVE. They try to average it. For instance, if you want to broadcast in your neighborhood and there are several others working on the same meter lengths, you will be allowed a certain number of hours, or certain periods during the day during which you can be accommodated. They can not give a man all-day service, but by making allotments, by parceling the time out in this way they are able to handle the situation quite well under the present wave lengths.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Have there been any cases where a large company would have the entire day for broadcasting?

Mr. SHREVE. Only in a case where a large company might use a wave length requiring such power that nobody else could compete with it.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. What is the wave length in use by the ordinary broadcasting station? Does the gentleman know?

Mr. SHREVE. I am not a scientific man, and I regret that I can not answer that technical question.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHREVE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I think a wave length of 500 meters will carry between Chicago and Washington.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Suppose a broadcasting station in McKeesport, Pa., wants to broadcast on 360 meters and they find that the wave length of 360 meters is already preempted by a large concern and therefore they can not get any time at all. I know my colleague is very familiar with the entire situation, and I ask him what legislation we could pass here which would assure justice to the amateur broadcasters who have done a great deal in the development of this art?

Mr. SHREVE. I would be very glad if my colleague from Pennsylvania would give study to that matter, because there is room for improvement.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. A subcommittee of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries has been working on this proposition ever since the conference was held which was called by the Secretary of Commerce, and the chairman of that subcommittee, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WHITE], has been working on a bill which is practically ready for presentation; but it is a very complicated and difficult subject to handle in such a way as to satisfy everybody. I think it is very clear that the matter of broadcasting can not be left entirely to the whim or wishes of individuals. There must be some regulation, and that is coming.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clerk hire: For compensation, to be fixed by the Secretary of Commerce, of not to exceed $1,600 per annum to each person or clerk in the offices of shipping commissioners, $70,000: Provided, That one clerk may be employed hereunder at a compensation not to exceed $2,200 per annum.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I note in this paragraph an appropriation of some $70,000 for clerk hire. This is the same appropriation that was made last year. I take it that it is a permanent appropriation. May I inquire why these clerks are not placed in the same status as those in the other paragraphs of the bill, and why, if they are permanent employees, they are not classified in this paragraph and the lump sum omitted?

Mr. SHREVE. I will say to the gentleman that, as I understand it, these are purely statutory places. This law was passed some time ago, and we have followed it from year to year. It is just the same thing that we have had. It has been tried and found all right, and it provides for the same number of clerks.

Mr. DOWELL. But the statutory employees are specified in the appropriation bill. This has no specification whatever, and I am doubtful if the gentleman is correct in supposing that these are statutory clerks.

Mr. SHREVE. I think the gentleman is right. This is a lump-sum appropriation. This is for personal services. The clerks are employed in the various cities—Baltimore, Boston, Newport News, New Orleans, Philadelphia, and so forth. They all draw moderate salaries, only $960 a year.

Mr. DOWELL. I understand that; but is there any reason why this bill should not state the salaries that they draw? These are permanent clerks?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Why should not the bill state the salaries that they draw and omit, as far as we can, the lump-sum appropriation?

Mr. SHREVE. I think the gentleman is right about that; and I will say that the committee have been endeavoring to get away from lump-sum appropriations, but we have not been able to dispose of all of them yet.

Mr. DOWELL. Are you doing all you can to get away from it?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Here is a case where you have definitely stated what ought to be paid, and it ought to be specified. Under a lump sum they may pay any sum they please.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They are limited to $1,600.

Mr. DOWELL. Yes; it is limited in a way.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I take it one reason for carrying it in this form is due to the fact that it is desired to leave the number of clerks for each shipping commissioner flexible, in order to permit the Secretary of Commerce to detail a clerk to this commissioner or that commissioner when they are needed and not needed at some other point.

If one is needed here and not needed in another place he can be detailed for that commissioner. I agree with the gentleman as to his opinion of lump-sum appropriations because I think lump-sum appropriations are something that ought to be cut out as far as possible. But the gentleman will notice that this lump sum is safeguarded by limiting the amount that can be paid to a clerk to the sum of $1,600, except one clerk, who can receive $2,200, if the Secretary of Commerce deems it wise.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield that I may ask a question of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. DOWELL. I yield.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if it is not probable that if this were made a statutory provision the expenditure would be very largely increased?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think that is very probable.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If they were permanent employees they would come under the rating so that they could have an increase in salary and eventually you would have a much larger expenditure than you do under this appropriation.

Mr. DOWELL. It is not necessary to make them statutory, but only to designate what they receive.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They are limited to a salary of $1,600.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For apparatus, machinery, tools, and appliances used in connection with buildings or work of the bureau, laboratory supplies, materials, and supplies used in the construction of apparatus, machinery, or other appliances, including their exchange; piping, wiring, and construction incident to the installation of apparatus, machinery, or appliances; furniture for laboratories and offices, cases for apparatus, $75,000.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman of the subcommittee a question. The amount of $75,000 includes appropriations for laboratories for all structural material?

Mr. SHREVE. For the laboratories in Washington. There are different laboratories for various services.

Mr. WATSON. There are several laboratories under the Bureau of Standards making investigations for structural material testing, and so forth. Does the $75,000 cover all of the buildings and apparatus necessary for these investigations?

Mr. SHREVE. All that are enumerated in this paragraph. The gentleman will find in another place there is another item for different kinds of laboratories.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For grading, construction of roads and walks, piping grounds for water supply, lamps, wiring for lighting purposes, and other expenses incident to the improvement and care of grounds, including foreman and laborers, in the District of Columbia, $10,000.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice in this paragraph a provision of $10,000 for grading, construction of roads and walks, and so forth. I would like to ask whether there is a highway construction service in the Bureau of Standards or in the Department of Commerce which occupies itself in building roads.

Mr. SHREVE. I am inclined to think not, but this is what they do do: Out at this splendid institution known as the Bureau of Standards they are working on the roads. The work is done by their own men. The cinders that they produce in the wintertime are used for a base. With their own facilities they make the roads, and they thought with a slight appropriation they would be able to get along and build a new road. With this small appropriation they will get $30,000 or $40,000 worth of roads.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. They really build new roads?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes; they build them entirely themselves, and I think it is a very commendable practice.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. How many departments have the same kind of operation?

Mr. SHREVE. I do not know of any other.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. We have a Bureau of Roads in the Agricultural Department, one in the Indian Bureau for road building, and I think there are a great many others. I did not know but there might be coordination, but the gentleman states that this department is getting 300 cents for every dollar, so I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

During the fiscal year 1924 the head of any department or independent establishment of the Government having funds available for scientific investigations and requiring cooperative work by the Bureau of Standards on scientific investigations within the scope of the functions of that bureau, and which the Bureau of Standards is unable to perform within the limits of its appropriations, may, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, transfer to the Bureau of Standards such sums as may be necessary to carry on such investigations. The Secretary of the Treasury shall transfer on the books of the Treasury Department any sums which may be authorized hereunder, and such amounts shall be placed to the credit of the Bureau of Standards for the performance of work for the department or establishment from which the transfer is made.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice under the Bureau of Standards section there are many investigations and some scientific ones. I would like to inquire if all the men employed to make these investigations, whose names are on the salary list, are experts?

Mr. SHREVE. This is the main office that we are referring to at this time.

Mr. WATSON. I know, but in making these investigations they require experts?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. They are not indicated in the salaries of this list. You employ other men?

Mr. SHREVE. It is absolutely necessary to employ experts in highly technical service.

Mr. WATSON. But the words "personal service" mean extra help.

Mr. SHREVE. Yes; but we keep ourselves within the appropriation. We can not use any more money than is actually appropriated. We get the best help we can under the appropriation.

Mr. WATSON. The bureau employs the men that are named?

Mr. SHREVE. There may be more men or less men, but it must all come within the appropriation that is made.

Mr. WATSON. In making the scientific investigations the bureau employs such men as it desires, providing it does not exceed the amount of money mentioned in the appropriation?

Mr. SHREVE. That is exactly right. For instance, the Navy Department during the war found that they were short of optical instruments. They took the matter up with the Bureau of Standards. In a short time the Bureau of Standards developed a glass which they found to be equal to that of Germany, and as a result they are furnishing nearly all of the glass that is used in the Navy Department. Yet the Navy Department is paying for that, paying sufficiently so that it might be necessary to take on additional experts, but the money is not paid out of this appropriation for the work of outsiders. Of course we do the Government work, but specific matters of that sort are all paid for and must necessarily entail the employment of a large number of people.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF LIGHTHOUSES.

Salaries: Commissioner, $5,000; deputy commissioner, $4,000; chief constructing engineer, $4,000; superintendent of naval construction, $4,000; chief clerk, $2,400; clerks—1 $2,000, 2 of class 4, 2 of class 3, 3 of class 2, 5 of class 1, 7 at $1,000 each, 2 at $900 each; messenger, $840; assistant messenger, $720; messenger boy, $480; assistant engineers—1 $3,000, 1 $2,400, 1 $2,250, 1 $2,000; draftsmen—1 $2,200, 1 $2,000, 2 at $1,800 each, 1 $1,600; in all, $68,290.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 13180) making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. OVERMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE AND LABOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, to ask the chairman of the subcommittee if this item and the items carried under the heading the "Bureau of Lighthouses" is in consonance with the Budget estimates?

Mr. SHREVE. Absolutely.

Mr. HICKS. You do not increase or decrease the amount that the Budget recommended?

Mr. SHREVE. We confine ourselves to the estimates made by the Budget. All through the bill, as near as possible, we confine ourselves to the estimates made by the Budget. They happen to correspond with our own bill of last year, so that we have not only the authority of the Budget but the figures of our own bill last year, which established that the figures are about right.

Mr. HICKS. I am glad to know that there has been no reduction, because I have been under the impression that there has been a little shortage in the funds for the Lighthouse Bureau. This bureau is one of the most important bureaus that we on the seaboard and on the Gulf coast and Great Lakes have in our districts. I know in my own district, which is situated at the northern approach of the city of New York, the Lighthouse Service is of prime importance. Its field work is in the hands of men of courage. Its administration is in the hands of experts. It has come to me a number of times in regard to these light beacons and aids to navigation on Long Island Sound and on the Atlantic, where, because of our immense commerce, the need is great. When we have tried to get them, the answer invariably has been "lack of funds in the appropriation." It seems to me that with the vast merchant marine that we now have, we should not economize in this item which means the salvation of not only the ships but of the people on the ships. I am glad to know that the committee has not cut the items down. I would prefer to have it increased.

I feel that the head of the Lighthouse Bureau, Mr. Putnam, the commissioner, is one of the ablest men we have in the public service to-day, a man of vast experience, well informed, conscientious, a man who is doing his duty as we expect a public servant to do it; and I want to pay my tribute as one who comes from a marine district. I believe all of the marine districts of this country owe a debt of gratitude to Commissioner Putnam.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HICKS. Yes.

Mr. KING. I know that the gentleman has taken general interest in matters of that kind, in the Navy and in navigation. Is it possible that the Budget committee has taken the power out of Congress entirely to say what shall be appropriated for lighthouses, and, if so, do they have any hearings as are held by the committees of Congress on these subjects.

The gentleman used to be an active member of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I would like to inquire wherein the Budget committee has usurped the powers of Congress.

Mr. SHREVE. Oh, absolutely it has not done anything of the kind. The Budget committee is performing an important function, which is all its own, and it is in no way conflicting with the duties of Congress.

Mr. KING. In what way does it investigate about these lighthouses?

Mr. SHREVE. They have made their investigation and made the recommendation in a lump-sum appropriation and said to go ahead and do what we pleased with it. That is what the Bureau of the Budget has said, and we have said no, that we did not intend to let go of the authority and right that Congress has to specify and say where the money shall be expended. It is the policy of this committee to rebuild the whole system. We are going about it gradually. Let me call attention to what we did last year. We provided for an improvement to aids to navigation at the entrance to Delaware Bay, $138,000; for establishing new aids to navigation and for improvements in Alaska, $125,000; and for improving aids to navigation in Calumet Harbor, $66,000; and so on. It is the policy of this committee to keep this service up to the top notch. We were not inclined, however, to place six or seven hundred thousand dollars in the hands of anyone to spend as he might see fit.

Mr. KING. I understood the gentleman to say that every item in the bill was recommended by the Budget.

Mr. SHREVE. Oh, no.

Mr. HICKS. The Budget makes an estimate of what they think a certain amount should be, and it is up to the Committee on Appropriations to have before it men who also testified before the Budget committee as to need for these different items, is it not? Do you bring those men up and question them also?

Mr. SHREVE. I am not in a position to say how the Budget or the Bureau gets this information, but we derive our information from the heads of the various bureaus, from the men in charge, the men who know all about it.

Mr. HICKS. Working entirely independent of the Budget people?

Mr. SHREVE. We are finding out in our own way, and the Budget people work out their own system.

Mr. HICKS. In line with the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] it does seem to me curious that your figures should agree in every instance. If the Committee on Appropriations works along its lines and the Budget along its lines, one would think that once in a while they would not always agree.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They do not agree.

Mr. SHREVE. The Bureau of the Budget had the advantage of the figures of the committee over a year ago.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not think there has been a bill reported here that has not reduced the figures submitted by the Bureau of the Budget on the whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Keepers of lighthouses: For salaries of not exceeding 1,800 lighthouse and fog-signal keepers and persons attending lights, exclusive of post lights, $1,300,000.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This paragraph makes an appropriation and limits the number of lighthouse and fog-signal keepers to 1,800. Is there a decrease or an increase in that number?

Mr. SHREVE. That number remains practically the same as last year.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is the same.

Mr. SHREVE. Of course, there might be an increase or a decrease at any time. A storm might wipe out one of these aids to navigation, and it is somewhat elastic, but in the main it remains the same as last year.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman says it is practically the same and indicates that there will be no reduction unless some lighthouse is destroyed. If that is so, then the number in the next fiscal year will be just the same as the number for this, except in the case of accident or catastrophe.

Mr. SHREVE. We have a table here showing just what they are doing with these men. If the gentleman would like, I can insert it in the RECORD. It covers engineers, assistant engineers, clerks, and so forth. It covers the entire service.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Well, the reduction of one lighthouse keeper or the keeper of the fog signal might be very important in the district I represent. The one dropped might be one in operation now in the district. I would like to know whether it is contemplated to make any reduction?

Mr. SHREVE. Oh, absolutely not. On the contrary, if anything happens it will be an increase. I realize we must necessarily increase this force, and there is nothing going to be dropped or any man lose his position by reason of this appropriation.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. A number were dropped two years ago, and by inquiry at the office I learned it was on account of the decreased appropriation. Those who were to be dropped were not named in the bill or by any action of Congress, and those in charge of the work acted in accordance with their own judgment, and arbitrarily discontinued certain lights and stations; and it happened that a number of them in my district were taken off. I have a district which extends some 150 miles along the shore of Lake Michigan, where there are a number of lighthouse stations. Some which were discontinued it was sincerely thought ought not to have been discontinued; and the gentlemen in charge down town say they would have been continued and in their judgment ought to have been continued, but the amount of money was so reduced they could not continue them.

Now, I wish to say a word on the line just pursued by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] when he says that this Budget proposition has disturbed the rights of the Congress. It seems to me there is not the opportunity there used to be for Members of Congress to reach the first source of supply or recommendation of legislation and appropriation. It is more or less a secret proposition now in the hands of the Budget people, and those who are heard outside of the office of the Budget are exclusively employees of the Government whose duty it is to operate in the business of the Government and expend the money. Those on the outside who are interested have no opportunity whatever to be heard. It is true that sometimes later on——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I ask permission to proceed for an additional five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan? (After a pause.) The Chair hears none.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It is true that in the matter of appearing before the Committee on Appropriations, so far as I have been able to learn, few if any opportunities are given by that committee for the old style hearing which prevailed before this Budget system was adopted.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will yield.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Is it not a matter of fact the present operation of the Budget system, wherein subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations deal with the Budget system instead of specific committees handling certain legislation—as, for instance, river and harbor legislation—is it not a fact that we are practically under the government of the Budget committee rather than the government of Congress? Does it not operate to that end?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It seems to operate in that direction, certainly. It is a sort of close corporation. These gentlemen of the Budget make the investigation and they have practically before them only officials of the department who have to do with the administration of the law and expending the money. There is little opportunity for the old style of hearing by which outside parties or Members of Congress can appear and make a showing and ask for money for the continuation of work at the time in force. It may be that this results in economy, but I do not consider it is real economy merely because appropriations are lower than they were in former years, and I submit in the particular matter of which I am speaking, about light houses and fog signals and Coast Guard stations which have been abandoned, there has been a saving of money as the result of that abandonment. But it is not real economy because those stations have been and now are needed, and there has been no opportunity under the present system to recommend the making of appropriations or for those directly in interest to be heard.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not know just exactly what methods the Bureau of the Budget pursues in reference to determining what estimates shall be submitted to the Congress by the President, but I do know the very efficient Director of the Budget Bureau and I know that he is a fair man, a man of very wide experience in the fiscal affairs of the Government, and I have always understood that the Bureau of the Budget gives full opportunity to anybody who wishes to be heard before the bureau in behalf of any particular estimate or appropriation.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In just a moment. As a matter of fact, the various departments submit their estimates to the Bureau of the Budget, and the director through his experts conducts such investigations as he thinks are necessary to determine whether or not the amounts recommended by the various departments or its bureaus will be required to carry on the activity of the Government in a proper and economical way during the year for which they are submitted. Now, I am quite sure that anybody who wants a hearing before the Bureau of the Budget can get it upon application, and that the director would welcome valuable information. Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LINEPERGER. The gentleman undoubtedly recalls, in the last river and harbor bill, the fact that in spite of the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers and in spite of the River and Harbor Committee, who had given long and considerate study to that bill, the amount was cut from $42,000,000 in round numbers to $27,000,000 and only by appeal of the membership of this House, which appeal was responded to, we got the $42,000,000, the minimum amount necessary to develop the rivers and harbors of this country.

Now, I understand that in the War Department bill, which is to come up in a few days, practically that same thing has happened again, and I understand that such an appeal will again have to be made to the membership of this House. Now, is not that fact indicative, to say the least, that the Director of the Budget is somewhat out of touch with the sentiment of the House on these vital legislative matters carrying appropriations?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I recall, of course, the circumstances to which the gentleman refers, and I will say that I joined him in his effort to increase the appropriation to $42,000,000——

Mr. LINEBERGER. I congratulate the gentleman——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Because I have always heartily favored river and harbor improvements. In reply to the last statement of the gentleman, I do not think that the Director of the Budget, acting as he does for the President of the United States, should take into consideration what he may believe the Congress wants with reference to any particular appropriation. The law creating the Budget system makes it the duty of the President to submit to Congress what he thinks is the proper estimate for the appropriations to be made by the Congress, accompanying his recommendation with a statement of the revenues, and then, if they fail to balance, to offer such recommendations as he may think necessary to make them balance.

Mr. MADDEN. Another thing that should be taken into account is this: The President of the United States, the responsible head of the Government in making the recommendation, is the man who makes it, not the head of the Budget Bureau. When he recommends the activities in which he thinks the Government should be engaged, that recommendation should be taken into consideration.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; and as the gentleman from Illinois says, the President is responsible for the estimates submitted, and therefore should act solely on what is needed and not what Members of Congress may want.

Mr. LINEBERGER. But the gentleman must remember that the President has not time to go into all these matters.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. So far as we are concerned, we only know that the President is the man who submits the matter to us.

Mr. HICKS. We all recognize the eminent position occupied by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] on fiscal matters. I am interested in asking him about some of the details of this matter. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Tennessee be extended three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee may proceed for three additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HICKS. And we all recognize the standing of General Lord and appreciate his qualifications as a fiscal expert. But here is the Department of the Navy, we will say. They want certain things; they want certain amounts of money. When they come before the Budget Committee is opportunity given for those outside of the department to present their case?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. You mean the Budget Bureau?

Mr. HICKS. Yes; the Budget Bureau.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I can not say exactly what method the Budget Bureau follows, but I take it that the director would be glad to get any information he could from any source.

Mr. HICKS. He probably takes only the information that comes to him from the head of a department.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That may be true or not; I do not know just what method he follows in making up his estimates. I assume, however, that he would accept information and be glad to get information in order that the President may make the proper estimate to Congress as to the needs of the various bureaus and departments for the succeeding year, because he is acting, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] says, for the President, and the President is responsible for the estimates submitted.

Mr. HICKS. I recognize that; but where can those outside be heard? Can they be heard by the Budget Bureau, or when these estimates come to the Committee on Appropriations can those outside the departments have an opportunity to present their case anywhere along the line?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am sure the Bureau of the Budget would hear any Member of Congress or anyone else who has information to submit. But when the estimates get to the Committee on Appropriations—and I want to say this particularly to the gentleman from New York and also to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN]—there has never been any curtailment on the part of the Committee on Appropriations in so far as hearings are concerned. The Committee on Appropriations conducts the same kind of hearings and calls the witnesses before it in the same way as formerly in order to establish whether or not the estimates submitted ought to be allowed or whether a different appropriation should be made. If the gentleman will examine the hearings on this bill and other bills he will find that those hearings are as wide and as searching as were the hearings that were conducted by the Committee on Appropriations before the Budget law was passed.

Now, the Committee on Appropriations has adopted—and I am subject to correction on the part of the chairman, who is present, if I am mistaken in my statement—I was about to say that the Committee on Appropriations has adopted a general rule, not rigidly fixed, but a general rule, that it will not report appropriations in excess of the amount estimated by the Budget Bureau. But the gentleman or anyone else who applies for a hearing, anyone who wants a hearing, can come before the Committee on Appropriations in support of a particular appropriation and be heard to the fullest extent. There has been no change in that respect, and no Member of Congress or citizen of the country is cut off from proper hearings before the Committee on Appropriations. And then, after the appropriation bill gets to the floor of the House, as in the instance cited by the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER], the House has the opportunity to increase it if it so desires. So that I do not see that the House is prevented by the Budget law from making such appropriations as the majority of the Members of the House think necessary for any particular activity.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. In other words, the Committee on Appropriations follows exactly the same rule as has always been followed by other committees of this House in gladly hearing anybody from the outside who may come with information.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. What other committee of the House adopts the rule that it will refuse to increase any estimate submitted by the Bureau of the Budget?

Mr. OLIVER. This particular bill illustrates that the gentleman is in error.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. But the gentleman from Tennessee says that they have a rule not to increase the estimates submitted by the Budget.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I said it was a general rule.

Mr. OLIVER. This particular report likewise shows that the committee exercises full discretion, and in some cases has increased the amount over what the Budget has recommended.

The CHAIRMAN (Mrs. HUCK). The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has again expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Madam Chairman, may I have one minute more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Possibly I used the wrong word when I said "rule." It is the general policy of the Committee on Appropriations not to report appropriations exceeding the amount of the estimates, and that is done in the interest of economy; but that does not cut off the gentleman or any other Member of this House from offering amendments, and if a majority of the House wish to increase an appropriation, of course they always have that power.

Mr. MONDELL. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it not true that the primary purpose of the Budget would be defeated unless the Appropriations Committee did proceed on the theory that the estimates of the Bureau of the Budget were not to be exceeded unless there was some special and very compelling reason for exceeding them?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman from Wyoming is clearly correct, and that is one of the reasons which influenced the Committee on Appropriations in adopting this general policy.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman from Tennessee mean that each item recommended by the Bureau of the Budget is to be kept as it is, or does he mean that the aggregate of the appropriation is not to be increased?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I was referring to items of appropriation. As the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] pointed out a moment ago, there are instances in this bill and other bills where, for special reasons, estimates have been increased, and the proposed appropriation is greater than the estimate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has again expired.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I ask unanimous consent, Madam Chairman, that the gentleman's time be extended one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Tennessee be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I should like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], whom we all recognize as an authority on matters affecting appropriations, whether he considers that the theory of the Budget would be upset if the Director of the Budget were to appear directly before the special committees created by this House for the consideration of these different problems, to wit, on matters relating to naval affairs, the Budget officer appearing before the Committee on Naval Affairs, and on matters relating to the Army, the Budget officer appearing before the Committee on Military Affairs, and so on down the line? Does the gentleman consider that the theory of the Budget would be upset by such a proceeding?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman mean to suggest that the Budget officer appear before separate appropriating committees, such as we had under the old rule?

Mr. LINEBERGER. Yes; but with the Budget officer in liaison with those committees?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The Budget officer now appears before the appropriating subcommittees.

Mr. LINEBERGER. The gentleman misunderstands me, I think. Perhaps I have not made myself clear. I am suggesting that the Budget officer appear before the specific committees which report out legislation now.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That matter was thrashed out very thoroughly when the new rule was adopted placing the appropriations under one committee.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Does the gentleman consider that that would upset the Budget?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am not so sure but what it would, for this reason: One great trouble was that there were so many committees, instead of having the appropriations all under one committee. We found duplications occurring every year in appropriations in spite of every effort upon the part of the Members of the House to prevent it; but since the Committee on Appropriations has taken charge of all of these bills it has cut out many of these duplications.

Mr. LINEBERGER. How could duplications occur with the same Budget officer appearing before all of the different committees?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Because with some 10 or 11 different appropriation bills, and with the thousands of items in them, it would be impossible to prevent duplications.

Mr. LINEBERGER. He could certainly keep track of them.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But the appropriations now have been placed under departments, so that any gentleman can in a moment's time ascertain just what each department is carrying for a particular year. Formerly the appropriations were scattered throughout half a dozen different appropriation bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Madam Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee—and I ask the question for the purpose of bringing the answer before the committee—does not the gentleman think that the Budget plan has the universal approval of the people of America?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There is no question about that, and I think it has resulted in the saving of millions of dollars to the taxpayers.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. It has the approval of the people of my country.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Every committee has the benefit of the Budget now. The Budget transmitted to Congress by the President is filed here and is the guide for every committee. Why should the Budget officer go before them?

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. I think the people of the country recognize that this is an honest, earnest attempt on the part of the Government to put the affairs of the Government on a business basis.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Does not the gentleman think this is one of the outstanding accomplishments of the Republican Party?

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. It is the biggest thing that has been done here for many years in the way of business.

Mr. BEGG. It was done by the Republican Congress, was it not?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It was the result of the efforts of both sides of the House.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. The world's biggest business is transacted here in this room, and it is now being transacted on a business basis.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I do not think the gentleman has been here long enough to appreciate how this thing operates.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Perhaps not.

Mr. LINEBERGER. It depends entirely upon the application you give to the Budget law. The vast majority of the Members of this House, I think, are highly dissatisfied with some of the operations of the present arrangement.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. I am not thinking so much what the Members of the House think about it.

Mr. LINEBERGER. They represent the people of the country.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. I am referring to what the people of the United States think.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Is it not the desire of the people to have businesslike methods in the appropriating of their money?

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Nearly all the States have adopted or are adopting the budget system, as well as many of the larger and more progressive municipalities.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. I agree that that is true.

Mr. SHREVE. Madam Chairman, just a word in answer to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN]. I will say that it has been the policy of this committee to hold unlimited hearings. Last year our hearings ran for 31 or 32 days. They covered 900 printed pages of the book that lies on this table. We gave everybody an opportunity to come before us, and many, many Members of Congress did appear. Now, as to the lack of funds for certain aids to navigation referred to by the gentleman, I want to say that it seems rather remarkable that at times when important matters are being considered and appropriations are reduced we are told by the heads of bureaus that there is a lack of money. Now, the bureau head has charge of the money, and he can use the money where he deems it advisable for some meritorious object, and it seems in that case the head of the bureau should be informed. I will say this: I am not sure but there is something growing up in the Government among the heads of departments, a sort of feeling of superiority that they desire to control the situation over and above Congress. If we find that to be true, it may become necessary to do away with the making of more lump-sum appropriations and specifically state just what they are for.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I call the gentleman's attention, in view of the colloquy that has just taken place, to the estimate for the Children's Bureau; that it was raised by the committee $440,000 over and above that of the estimates of the Budget.

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from California will not leave the Chamber. He says that the most important business of the country is being transacted here all the time. Mr. Chairman, I am always glad when a Daniel comes to judgment. I have noticed since I came to serve in this House that the most interesting thing is that it gives to me an opportunity to study the evolutionary process of men who come here and believe that the business of the Government is transacted on this floor. The gentleman from California looks like a business man, a very charming and delightful man, and I hope he will stay here and help us discharge our duty. And I hope he will get relieved of the idea that the Representatives of the American people are incapable of attending to the public business and have to delegate that right to some distinguished functionary or organization, call it the Budget or whatever you will.

Now, I am not deceived about the Budget. You know the pendulum swings to and fro. The other genial gentleman from California reminded his colleague that he had not been here long enough to understand how it works. The time is not ripe, the people have not found out that they bought a gold brick when they got the Budget. Now, I will advise the gentleman from California.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Which one?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. MACLAFFERTY, the gentleman who took the discussion on the floor with unusual seriousness. [Laughter.] I will advise him that he has something else to learn, and that is if there is any credit to be given for the Budget he can not claim it exclusively for the Republican Party.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. If the gentleman will yield, I did not make any such claim; I do not know or care where it comes from.

Mr. WINGO. I discovered that. That is the trouble with some of the American people. Some one told them if they got this Budget system it would relieve them of all their tax trouble, and without looking in the poke they bought the pig and think they have something. That is one of the faults in the operation of popular government. They have the right to do it; they have the right to do as they please, which they do when they send the gentleman from California and myself to Congress. But some Member said it was a great achievement of the Republican Party. I suspect that about as hard work was done in its behalf by the Democratic Members of Congress as by anybody else. A Democratic President recommended it twice. Oh, I know somebody will be popping up like a tomtit on a pump handle and saying that he vetoed it. Yes; he did veto it because a lot of ignoramuses did not know anything about the Constitution, and in the terms of that bill violated the Constitution, and the President had some respect for the Constitution.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. I would like to know if the gentleman from Arkansas is not one of the ignoramuses who voted for the bill which was vetoed?

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman thinks so? Well, if I took the time to correct all of the mistakes of ignoramuses, I would not have time to attend to anything else. [Laughter.]

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Oh, yes; I have been expecting to get a rise from the gentleman from Kansas. [Laughter.]

Mr. TINCHER. Does the gentleman want to include the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. WINGO. Oh, I gave the gentleman from Tennessee an oratorical spanking, and he was so put out that he would not smile at me for a week. But this claim that the Budget is the work of the Republican Party is all "bunk." The people in both parties were told that they would save money, and that was the great thing. Here you were going back to a system which was abandoned years ago because a certain other gentleman from Tennessee, I believe it was, they said had become more powerful than the President of the United States.

A MEMBER. From Illinois, wasn't he?

Mr. WINGO. Well, I was trying to pay a compliment to the gentleman from Tennessee, but whoever it was I remind you that during that time you had the present system when one great appropriation committee made all the appropriations, and the cry went up from all over the land that here was an autocratic committee that would not give the people what they wanted. They said they were going to bring about a reform, so it was put back where it was before. Years after the pendulum swung back, and now the people are told that if you have a Budget, have one big appropriation committee to do it all, the problem will be solved.

Has the millenium come through establishing a Budget? You have a lot more clerks and stenographers on the pay roll, and you have at the head of the Budget one of the finest men in the Nation, and one of the best you can get for the job; but I want to tell you that I have tried it out, time and time again. I started it during the last session of Congress, when I asked the gentleman on the Appropriations Committee about a certain item. He replied to me that he did not know a thing about it, because he was not on that particular subcommittee that had to do with it. I would go to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] or to some of the gentlemen on the other side and ask them about something not before their particular subcommittee, and they would tell me to see So-and-so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. WINGO. From Arkansas, Mr. Chairman, not Kansas.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, the Chair's most natural mistake reminds me of an incident which occurred not very long ago. A very distinguished gentleman in this administration, occupying a very superior place, was at a function one evening and was introduced to one very charming lady from Kansas and another equally charming one from Arkansas. He said, "Now, do you know, I am a little bit confused. Some of you call it Kansas, and some of you call it Arkansas." [Laughter.] That is but an illustration of some of the particular brand of intelligence that you have in some of the departments. I hope the Chairman does not think that I am trying to reflect upon him in any way; but, to get back to the proposition about which I was talking, I have asked Members, practical business men, such as my friend from California [Mr. MACLAFFERTY]—and he looks like a very practical man—questions in respect to certain matters, and I have been told to go and see somebody else. The longer the gentleman from California stays here the more he will be resolved to be guided by common horse sense and less by theory. It is physically impossible for any one committee to absolutely go into every detail that is necessary in every department of the Government, involving $4,000,000,000 of expenditure. I hope my people will let me stay here long enough to see you all go back to the system of having the people's Representatives hold the purse strings, and seeing you divide all of this labor among various committees, so that we can be guided intelligently in appropriating for the various needs of the Government, and know how the funds are to be expended. Oh, of course, I know that some people will say that is heresy to this great god that you worship—the Budget.

Not long ago my little boy came home from school, and he had some questions to answer. One of the questions was, What is the Budget? He asked me, and I told him to take his pencil and that I would dictate the answer to the question. Here is what I told him to write: "Something that everybody is for and that nobody understands."

Mr. Chairman, that is true. Ride on the trains, get into conversation with people there, and hear them talk about the Budget. Frequently I have asked some of them, "Just what do you understand by the Budget?" And the popular theory is that the Budget is something to do what? To meet the failure of popular government to function. They have the idea that the American people's representatives in Congress have not the intelligence to spend the people's money properly, and that we have set up a supermachinery over them called the Budget to decide how much money they should spend for particular purposes. They think that if Congress dares to go behind the findings of the Budget that something is wrong, and they immediately say, "What is that bunch of ignoramuses doing up there on the hill? Have we not a body of business men to decide what they shall spend?"

Mr. Chairman, we have gotten so that we utterly ignore the philosophy of our Government. For one, I have faith in popular government. Whenever an appropriation goes through this House and runs the gantlet of gentlemen on this floor, in ninety-nine times out of a hundred it is a deserving appropriation. It is much easier for a camel to get through the eye of a needle than it is for an unworthy appropriation to get by the committees of Congress and the Committee of the Whole on this floor under the five-minute rule. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to that motion, that it close at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 50, noes 36.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion as amended.

The motion as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lighthouse vessels: For salaries and wages of officers and crews of light vessels and lighthouse tenders, including temporary employment when necessary, $1,650,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. I hope the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. MACLAFFERTY] will not take seriously the spanking that has recently been administered to him by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. Oh, I was not spanking the gentleman; I was caressing him.

Mr. BLANTON. In the usual way of caressing a new Member. That is something that every new Member must expect when he comes here if he takes any part in the proceedings. I want to commend the gentleman from California, with whom I consider it an honor and a privilege to serve, for his action in exercising the right the Constitution of the United States and the people of California have bestowed upon him in sending him to Congress. He has a perfect right to take part in the proceedings. He has a perfect right to be heard. He has a perfect right to extol the Budget. He has a perfect right to call the attention of Congress to and remind the country of the fact that there are people back at home expecting certain things to be done here. I want to say to him that he ought to continue that practice. We need new blood brought into the transactions of the business of this Congress. There is too much of transacting its business by a little handful of men, however able they all are, who fill the big committees. It is understood by some that because we have a Budget, and that the committee is supposed to follow their estimate as a maximum for their appropriations, that everything in economy and retrenchment has been accomplished, but I want to remind the gentleman from California of the fact that no matter how much of the very best talent we have in this country to exert its best efforts in recommending economies through that Budget system, sound in its intent and purposes to save the money of the people, there is but one place after all to save the money and effect economies and that is right here on this floor in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, through action taken by us, when the bills are under consideration under the five-minute rule.

Oh, it is awfully easy for these departments, for the chief and bureau heads, who come before these 35 men who constitute the various subcommittees of the main Committee on Appropriations and bring influence from every quarter of the earth to bear upon them to get what they want.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield? I would just like to say this, if the gentleman will permit me, that there is not a man living anywhere in America, either in the departments or the executive branches or up to the presidency, that has any influence upon the Committee on Appropriations unless that influence is fortified by the facts.

Mr. BLANTON. If that is true, then the laws of human nature have changed. [Laughter.] If the gentleman from Illinois, whom I follow so frequently in his efforts sometimes to save money, has become so cold-blooded that all the human ingenuity of the land can not bring influence to bear upon him on certain questions, then the laws of human nature have changed. Remember the history of the civilian bonus.

Mr. MADDEN. I would say this——

Mr. BLANTON. I can not yield unless I have five minutes more, because I want to let our new friend from California know that there is one Member who has been here for several years behind him in his efforts to get up here and take part in the affairs of this Congress. I want to let him know I am backing him up in it. I have seen this committee bring in this bill with $100,000 increases more than the expenses for these departments during the last fiscal year, and they have not explained to my satisfaction any reason for increasing the appropriations in that amount.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I want two more minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHREVE] in charge of the bill is genial and courteous and we all like him, but he just gets up here and says they saw fit to increase the appropriations over the present fiscal year $100,000, which shows that one department has convinced them, and they put in increases that the Budget committee did not approve of, and I repeat to my friend from California if he expects to save the money of the people, do not depend altogether on the Budget, depend on himself, make his own investigation, look into the necessity of these appropriations, and if he finds out they are not proper, come in here and make a fight against them. Oh, it is a tremendous undertaking to fight a man like our able friend from Arkansas, who is a parliamentarian, a good speaker, with the prestige here of years, but fight him just the same. Stand up here and fight him to maintain your rights. Others will back you up ultimately. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the pro forma amendment. Mr. Chairman, I have refrained from saying anything about the Budget Bureau during all of this discussion, but I want to point out to my friend from Texas and some other gentlemen who entertain the same views that the fact that an appropriation bill carries an amount in excess of that estimated by the Budget Bureau does not necessarily convict the Appropriations Committee of extravagance. In some instances it is essential to the proper administration of governmental activities that it be done. When it is necessary I am glad that it is done. I know that I have taken the position on the subcommittees upon which I serve that whenever a representative of a department desires to present a case for an appropriation in excess of the amount estimated by the Bureau of the Budget he should be allowed to present his case, because even though the Committee on Appropriations should refuse to appropriate an amount in excess of the Budget estimate the House of Representatives has the final decision as to the amount of the appropriation, and the only way in which you can intelligently decide that question is for the department head to be permitted to present his case and then you read the hearings and learn the facts. I have never agreed and will never agree to surrender to the Budget Bureau one-half of the power vested in me to fix the amount of appropriation for a given activity of the Government. [Applause.] If we say that the Committee on Appropriations will not increase the estimates of the Budget Bureau in any instance we surrender one-half of the power we ought to exercise. We transfer to the employees of the Budget Bureau the right to fix the maximum and claim only the right to make a reduction. I can not agree to that. My friend here, Mr. HULL, of Iowa, was selected by his people to represent them because they believed he knows the needs of the great agricultural country from which he comes. The estimates for the Agricultural Department may be prepared by an employee of the Budget Bureau who may have been an Army officer or a successful business man, but is absolutely unacquainted with the conditions that exist in your country. How can he be regarded as infallible in determining the relative importance of the activities of that department? How can his decision deprive you of the right to argue for an increased appropriation for some activity? I can not agree to that and I never will.

There are instances where bills now being prepared by the Committee on Appropriations when amounts have been increased and the righteousness of the increase must be debated here on this floor. Thus far I have been satisfied as to the increases made by the committee. They were necessary; and I am satisfied that that is true here.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that at the time the Budget law was passed, when we changed the rules of the House and increased the Committee on Appropriations to a membership of 35, this whole question was thrashed out; and, so far as I know, there was not a single Member of the House who voted to change the rules—making the committee consist of 35 members and giving that committee jurisdiction of all appropriations—who supposed that the House was surrendering its control over appropriations.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is true. The Committee on Appropriations in conducting hearings should secure the facts whenever a department head believes he has a case that should be presented to the House. The increases may all be refused, but the membership of the House is entitled to the facts whenever the head of a department believes it a matter of sufficient importance to ask to present his case. I have no quarrel with the Bureau of the Budget on that score. My quarrel with the Budget Bureau is based on the fact that they have taken the view expressed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG], that it is a partisan agency, and instead of administering it as a great business bureau of the Government they have sought to play politics by creating the impression that they are responsible for savings which in fact are not saved at all. This is true even as to the expenses of the bureau itself.

For example, the Director of the Budget first announced that the Congress had given him only $225,000 with which to run the Budget Bureau, and that it was "like giving a man a toothpick to dig the Panama Canal." That was picturesque language. But six months later he appeared before the department heads and said, "Gentlemen, we have got to economize. Just to show you how economical I am, I will turn back a considerable part of my own appropriation of $225,000.

That sounded fine. He did turn back a small part of his appropriation. But how did he do it? The naval hearings show that he drafted for work in the Budget Bureau 10 of the most efficient officers in that department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. May I have two or three minutes additional?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I say he took from the Navy Department 10 of its experts. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], sitting in front of me, and I, sitting on that committee, asked as to the average compensation, including allowances, of those men who were assigned to the Budget Bureau from the Navy Department and it totaled $50,000. He acquired the services of those naval officers who were assigned to the Budget Bureau, and that made possible this reduction in his fund for civilian employees. But it gave him ten $5,000-a-year men. I asked the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY], in charge of the Army bill, to ascertain how many Army officers have been assigned, so that when we get through we will know what the Budget Bureau is actually costing.

It draws on the War Department for employees and it draws on the Navy Department for employees. If they would come here and state the truth as to the cost of their own administration, and then present to the Congress the cost of the administration of the various departments, so that you would know it, it would be well; but you would have to be a Sherlock Holmes or an unusually expert accountant to know what government is costing if the bureau continues its present policy.

Estimates are sent in here by the Budget Bureau making immediately available certain sums. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations does not approve of that. People talk about the skilled administration of the Budget. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is in favor of a policy whereby these appropriations on their faces shall indicate what they are. If there is a deficiency needed, a deficiency should be asked for. But under the policy of the Budget Bureau, instead of asking for a deficiency, they ask for an additional amount for next year's appropriation, and then ask that a portion of that appropriation shall be immediately available; and if such a bill passes before the 4th of March, and the sum is made immediately available, it has the same effect as a deficiency appropriation. You or I may want to know if there was a deficiency in a certain appropriation. If you look at the deficiency bills, you will not find it, but it will be carried in the appropriations for next year with a provision that a certain amount shall be made immediately available.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. You can stop it if you want to, can you not?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. How?

Mr. DOWELL. The chairman of the committee in conjunction with the gentleman can easily stop those instances.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I confess I can not stop it. If I could, I would force the bureau to stop that practice and its indirect appropriations and I would have every bill show exactly the amount it carries, so that every man could understand what a particular service is costing the people of the United States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has again expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I tried to assist the committee in expediting the consideration of this question, but I find I can not make much headway, so I want to talk a little about it myself. [Laughter.]

I am in accord with what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] have said in reference to the operation of the Budget system. I happened to be on the Select Committee on the Budget, and we discussed all these questions in the committee before the Budget bill was reported, and we had a free discussion here on the floor before the bill was passed. It was never suggested at the time of the passage of the bill that either the Committee on Appropriations or the Members of the House were abdicating their functions at all on the question of appropriations.

Mr. MADDEN. They are not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand that is the alleged assertion or alleged formula by which we proceed, but in practice I do not know whether it is true or not. I want to get this proposition cleared up, and I want the assistance of the chairman of the committee in doing it. I find that there seems to be an impression on the part of the heads of the various bureaus and departments themselves, when submitting their estimates to the interdepartmental board or the Budget, that if the Budget estimates an amount lower than the amount which they feel is required for a fiscal year it amounts almost to an act of heresy or insubordination for them to come up to the Committee on Appropriations and present the real facts and merits of their necessity. Is there any justification for that?

Mr. MADDEN. There is not any justification for that. But here is what the Budget law provides. The Budget law provides in definite language that no person except the President may submit an estimate or make a request——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not talking about estimates. I am talking about the evidence that may be submitted before your committee in connection with the estimates.

Mr. MADDEN. No person except the President may submit an estimate or make a request of any committee of either House for an appropriation without first having a request made upon them to do so by either House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Now, let us take a concrete illustration in the appropriation for the rural sanitation service that came up a few days ago, which some of us tried to increase. The chairman of the committee said that they had the chief of the bureau before his committee, and he said that the amount recommended by the committee was all that he demanded. I happened to find out that that bureau did claim that they estimated a minimum of $150,000 instead of $50,000, as recommended by the Budget, to carry on their work.

Would the head of that bureau have been at liberty before your committee to present its real claims in his testimony?

Mr. MADDEN. He did present the very comprehensive case of the activities of the bureau.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But does the chairman construe the law to mean that he was estopped in his testimony from demanding more than was recommended by the Bureau of the Budget?

Mr. MADDEN. He could state all the facts connected with the case, and then it would be left with the Committee on Appropriations to decide whether or not he made a good case.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But if it is the practice to limit them absolutely, and they know that it will be regarded as possibly a discourtesy or infraction of law for them to go any further, if that is the practice, it is really denying to the Members of the House and the Committee of the Whole information that we legitimately ought to have.

Mr. MADDEN. There is no denial of information, because I am sure the gentleman from Alabama will concede that we did go comprehensively into the question of rural sanitation in the hearings.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not denying that.

Mr. MADDEN. So there was no denial there; and it is not the purpose of the committee to deny any opportunity to present every fact in every case. On the other hand, we invite, and we insist that all facts connected with every case submitted to us shall be disclosed, and if those who appear before us are reluctant to disclose the facts, we pry around ourselves and try to get the facts, and we put them on the witness stand in such a way as to compel them to give us the facts. So we are not trying to cover up or evade any facts.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But they are justified in saying to your committee that although the Budget recommend a certain appropriation they feel that they need more?

Mr. MADDEN. We do not foreclose their right to do that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is what I want to get cleared up.

Mr. MADDEN. We do not foreclose their right to do that; but as I understand the function of our committee, as the servant of the House, it is to get every activity in which the Government is engaged conducted at the lowest possible cost.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am in thorough accord with that proposition, provided it does not cripple the legitimate and necessary activities of the public service.

Mr. MADDEN. And that is the policy of the committee.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The late lamented James R. Mann, in speaking of the Budget, repeatedly said that everybody in the United States was in favor of the Budget, but that not one out of a thousand of the intelligent business men of the country who favored the Budget had any conception either of what the Budget meant or of what they meant by favoring the Budget.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Just let me make my statement first, and then I will yield. So far as the United States is concerned, and so far as a Budget has been established, what it means is this, that the various departments of the Government, instead of sending their estimates separately from each department to Congress, send them all to the Budget Bureau, which is a clearing house. Now, what is the object of the Budget Bureau? It is clearly twofold: First, to prevent duplications; and, second, to see that the appropriations for one department are not out of proportion to those for the other departments, and that they are kept substantially on an even basis, so that they will all be practicing economy in the same measure and to the same degree. Those are the two purposes. We have been discussing this question here to-day as though having a Budget system meant that Congress was in some way fettered, and particularly that it was fettered in keeping down appropriations. Why, we must remember that the House of Representatives is the place where appropriations must originate, and that in nine cases out of ten, with a budget or without a budget, the struggle here will be not to increase appropriations but to decrease them. The unending struggle between the executive and the legislative departments always has been and always will be for larger appropriations on the part of the executive and for smaller appropriations and for economy on the part of the legislative department. That has always been true, and that always will be true, and we should bear that in mind and remember it, and remember that we are the ones who must economize and the ones who must fight appropriations as suggested by the executive departments. Rarely indeed will the occasion arise for increasing appropriations.

Now, having seen what the object of the Budget is, so far as the two branches of the Government are concerned, the executive and the legislative, let us see whether the change made in the House had anything to do with the Budget. Why, all there is to the Budget system, as adopted by us here, is that these appropriations come to us in a new form. They come to us through one officer instead of coming from all these several departments, and that has no relation at all to the way in which we deal with them when they reach here.

Did we do a wise thing in abandoning the old system of appropriations, under which we had men who had spent 15 or 20 years of service in studying all the questions relating to those different departments of the Government, and substituting in their stead one committee, where it was impossible that they should have that profound knowledge gained from long study and experience in connection with each particular department? I am not seeking to say anything in criticism of the Committee on Appropriations, for the members of which I have the very highest and most profound respect. But where could you find men like JULIUS KAHN, like MCKENZIE, like FRANK GREENE to deal with military affairs? Where could you find any of them, except DAN ANTHONY, and he is alone, functioning on the Appropriations Committee? Where could you find men who had the experience and the knowledge of military affairs that those men had? Why, every man in this House knows that the name of JULIUS KAHN will go down in history as the great civil hero of the World War on this side of the Atlantic. [Applause.] Men here know that he had courage, but he had back of it knowledge and experience and all of the things which went to make him fitted to fight, on the civil side, a great war in behalf of this country. So you can take every one of the seven former appropriating committees and you will find the same results. Now what do they claim for the new system?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TOWNER). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. TINCHER. When the gentleman spoke of what Mr. Mann said it occurred to me that it might be a good thing to call attention to what the late lamented Champ Clark said about the Budget.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I do not know what he said. I will let the gentleman state that in his own time.

Mr. TINCHER. Wait until I finish my question. He said that the selfish interests of the chairmen of legislative committees that had the power to appropriate would no doubt hinder the Budget for a long time after it was enacted into law; and that has proven true.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I am not going to charge selfish interests on the part of any Member. I do not believe it is necessary to cast stones at any Member of Congress. So far as my observation has been—I am sorry if it has differed from the observation of the gentleman from Kansas—men on this floor have but one object to serve.

That is the interest of the House and the interest of the country which they are concerned to protect and conserve. I have not found any departure from that rule, and if the gentleman's observation has been otherwise it differs totally and wholly from mine. The working out of this system has developed two serious defects. I served one year on the Committee on Appropriations, and although I worked earnestly I found that it was impossible for the whole committee, made up of 35 men, to consider even in a surface way, to consider even in a general way, the items of the supply bills. In effect it is legislation by a committee of three, nominally five, but you will find that three attend the meetings and that is all, and you generally have one man who knows something about the subject and only one.

Mr. MADDEN. I deny that in toto.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I am talking about my observations and experience, and I am talking about what I saw and observed while I was on the committee. You do not have but one man on a subcommittee, as a rule, who has any training in that matter. I am not saying these men are not all able men; I am not saying they are not all high-minded men; I am not saying they are not all intelligent men; I am not saying that they are not all praiseworthy men and men of the highest character; but I am simply saying one thing which is a matter of criticism. I do not intend to say anything but what is kindly of these men; I am saying that they have only one on each of these subcommittees who has had experience, and they do well if they have him. And then I say there is no coordination in the work, that the subcommittees function separately just as much as the general committees functioned separately before, and instead of having 7 committees, as you formerly had, you have 13 subcommittees. You simply multiply by two instead of dividing them up.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. I shall object to that. I hope that we will be allowed to proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I want five minutes.

Mr. SNYDER. I shall object to that, Mr. Chairman; if you will not let them talk on the other side, I shall object to any further remarks. I do not see any reason for railroading this bill through; we have plenty of time.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think that is a fair statement; we are not railroading anything through.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Let me say to the gentleman I have not taken any time heretofore and I do not think the gentleman ought to object to these general statements. The gentleman will notice I have attended constantly the sessions of the Committee of the Whole on the floor.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not want to get into any quarrel with anyone. I am anxious to get along with the bill. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to make a statement. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, every man in the House has been urging our committee to do everything possible to expedite the consideration of the appropriation bills. We have been acting upon the suggestion of the Members of the House. If you do not want the bills considered, if you do not want the work expedited, we can take it easy; we are not anxious to work any more than you are. But why not help us to help you to do the things you seem to want to do? What we are trying to do is to be good servants of the House. We are not trying to dictate any policy to the House; we are trying to do the thing you are urging us to do. We have been fairly responsive to your demands. We have not known any hours, we do not know days, we work nights, Sundays, and holidays; we work when everybody else is playing. Now, help us. That is all we want—encourage us to do the things you have told us to do. If we did not respond to your request we would feel that we were derelict in the performance of our duty. It is for you to say whether we have performed our duty, whether we have performed it efficiently and expeditiously, or whether we have been laggard in the performance of that duty. It is for you to say whether we have been honest in the performance of the duty. The responsibility is yours and it is not ours. We are your servants, your doormat, if I may term it so, and now wipe your feet on us all you want, but when you get through, quit and help us to proceed. [Laughter and applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Superintendents, clerks, etc.: For salaries of 17 superintendents of lighthouses, and of clerks, and other authorized permanent employees in the district offices and depots of the Lighthouse Service, exclusive of those regularly employed in the office of the Bureau of Lighthouses, District of Columbia, $400,000.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Now that we have quit talking about the Budget and have gotten the ship back on its course, I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee about the development of the wireless in the various lighthouses. As the gentleman knows, in some lighthouses we have wireless installed which enables the ship by shore triangulations to get its latitude and longitude irrespective of its own instruments—one of the most important maritime developments of recent years. I know that the department is anxious to have the important lighthouses so equipped, but I know that when it comes to installing them the department can not get the money for the work. In the interest of navigation, in the interest of commerce, it seems to me that the money should be appropriated so that the important lighthouses and important light vessels shall be equipped with this apparatus, because it means the safety of the merchant marine. Can the gentleman enlighten the committee at all as to what the department would like for the equipment of the ships and the lighthouses with wireless?

Mr. SHREVE. I will say to the gentleman we have had this matter up before the committee and the department is making as rapid progress as possible. I have forgotten the number of lighthouses that have been equipped.

The commissioner said:

In addition to the three radio fog-signal stations on Ambrose Channel Light Vessel, on Fire Island Light Vessel, and at Seagirt Light Station, all in the vicinity of New York Harbor, radio fog-signal stations were placed in commission during the year on San Francisco Light Vessel, California, and on a relief light vessel in the third district. Radio fog-signal apparatus was also installed on light vessel No. 105, which was completed during the fiscal year, and was placed on station August 31 on Diamond Shoals off Cape Hatteras, N. C. So we have five radio fog signals in operation, and a great deal of interest has been taken in these, and we believe that they are going to result in one of the greatest advances in safeguarding navigation in fog which has yet been made.

There is a total of nine new stations established last year.

Mr. HICKS. My point is not in relation to fog signals, but radio apparatus for giving ships their position.

Mr. SHREVE. They work together. I am not speaking about fog signals. I am talking about the radio service which has been extended to nine different stations in the United States in the last year, and it is constantly being extended and will be extended as rapidly as possible.

Mr. HICKS. Then the Committee on Appropriations is friendly to this development.

Mr. SHREVE. Certainly. We realized that it is one of the finest inventions that has ever been discovered. It is a greater relief to ships than anything else that we know of.

Mr. HICKS. I am very glad to hear the gentleman say that.

Mr. SHREVE. I may say that I think it is going to revolutionize things right along.

For the construction of one light vessel, $150,000.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I suppose it is not possible that the Shipping Board could construct a vessel that could be used for this or any other good purpose.

Mr. SHREVE. I am very glad that the gentleman has raised that question. The question of lightships and light tenders seems to be very dear to the heart of the man who is at the head of this bureau. In this appropriation he was asking for one tender, one light vessel, the completion of another light vessel, and another light vessel at $150,000 and at $200,000. We had this same demand last year for light vessels, and at that time I asked the gentleman in charge of the bureau if he would not go up the Hudson River or somewhere else and get some ships. He contended that it would not answer his purpose. However, we persuaded him to try it out, and he succeeded in getting nine mine sweepers. Of these nine mine sweepers six are of the large variety and three of the small variety. One of the mine sweepers has already been converted into a lighthouse tender and I saw the picture of it, and it is one of the most beautiful ships you ever saw. So that satisfies us that a large number of those ships can be converted to the use of the Lighthouse Service. Of course, when you come to a light vessel, that is quite a different proposition, because it requires particular machinery. The ship must be built in such condition as to hold the machinery. It should have self-propelling arrangements about it. I can readily see that the Shipping Board or the Navy would hardly have ships to take the place of a real light vessel. The gentleman will find a little further on that we have made some changes here, for the reason that there are six light vessels now under construction. The bureau secured nine last year from the various departments. That makes 15, and they were asking for the construction of 4 more. That made 19 vessels in one year, which I think the House will agree was a very substantial building program for one year. We have reduced that. We have given them $90,000 to help rebuild a lightship that was destroyed by the Standard Oil Co., that company furnishing the hull and we equipping it with machinery. We are also giving them another light vessel.

Mr. DOWELL. Has the committee made investigation of the report from the department relative to the utility of the vessels of the Shipping Board for this purpose?

Mr. SHREVE. Oh, yes; we have gone carefully into that. We are satisfied and the department is satisfied now that many of these vessels can be used for tender purposes.

Mr. DOWELL. Is the committee insisting on the use of all that can be used for this purpose?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes. The only thing we did this year was to make appropriations for the vessels used at sea, vessels that are anchored at sea. All others, tenders of every description, in my opinion, can be secured from the Government.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I find nothing in reference to the $150,000 item, but the $90,000 item is treated on page 134. That vessel is one for the navigation of the Mississippi. I understand that the Government owns 12 boats there in the civil service. Why can not some one of those boats be detached for that service?

Mr. SHREVE. It is no more to be used on the Mississippi River than in any other place, except as the director of the bureau determines in his own mind where it will be used. He said he wanted it to use it there, but that does not make it necessary that he should use it there if it can be put to better uses elsewhere.

Mr. DEMPSEY. But I suppose the committee was guided by the testimony?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. And the testimony is that it is for service there, and it being intended for service there, my question is directed to why they can not use one of those vessels they now own?

Mr. SHREVE. I think they can.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Why should we build another vessel?

Mr. SHREVE. We are not building that type of vessel; we are only building light vessels, that are stationed permanently at sea, because we feel that they can use these mine sweepers that the Government has.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. These mine sweepers were obtained by the Navy Department?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Has the Lighthouse Service been able to make use of the vessels built by the Shipping Board?

Mr. SHREVE. We have used just nine vessels, as I stated. They have only tried to use nine vessels, and I saw the picture of one of them which was converted, and they said it was going to be a splendid vessel. It was secured from the War Department.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. It was my impression that the mine sweepers were specially constructed and could be used for lighthouse purposes, and that the ordinary Shipping Board vessels could not be utilized for that purpose.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Of course, the gentleman must realize that these boats for Lighthouse Service must be all of shallow draft, because they have to replace the light vessel which may be on an 18-foot contour line. They can not use these vessels of the Shipping Board to any extent, because the draft is too great.

They have got possibly to slide into the shallow places and look up buoys that are placed there, and if they draw too much water they will be the victims of the very thing the buoys are put there to prevent—that is, strike bottom. Therefore the Shipping Board boats are of very little use.

For enlarging and improving the lighthouse depot at Portsmouth, Va., $154,500.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 90, line 2, after the word "Virginia," insert "in the first lighthouse district or establish a new depot."

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is this: It will enable the commissioner to build a new depot at that station if it is thought desirable. The old station is in a very dilapidated condition, and it may be when they come to make repairs they will find it in such condition that it should be built entirely new. I simply offer the amendment so as to enable them to do one or the other. This comes in the line of the policy of the committee to make these improvements constantly so as to keep the service in fine shape.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

For repairs to Barnegat Lighthouse, Barnegat City, N. J., $100,000.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am advised that the lighthouse at Barnegat is about to be washed away. This is the most important lighthouse along the New Jersey coast. Is the $100,000 appropriated here merely for temporary repairs or looking forward to building a new lighthouse?

Mr. SHREVE. Oh, no; I will say to the gentleman this is a completion of the project. Now, the Barnegat Lighthouse is not in danger of being washed away. There has been some erosion around the lighthouse, although during the last year I am told by Members of Congress who have visited the lighthouse that the sand had formed again. However, I will say that this lighthouse is one of the ancient structures, more than 60 years old. It is a stone structure standing more than 140 feet high, one of the finest lights on the Atlantic coast. It has a light that is seen at sea more than 20 miles. It is one of the old landmarks to which the people in that vicinity and mariners are accustomed. It is the estimate of the engineer that it can be made an absolutely safe structure for the amount appropriated. The reason I am so confident is we have an estimate from one of the engineers who was doing the same work at Atlantic City and Cape May and other places, and he said the work could be done for $100,000.

Mr. WATSON. What is the nature of the repairs?

Mr. SHREVE. Simply a jetty.

Mr. WATSON. Stone?

Mr. SHREVE. A stone jetty extension there.

Mr. WATSON. And it will cost $100,000?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. It is estimated that it will be a permanent improvement?

Mr. SHREVE. It will be a permanent improvement and remain forever. There is a great deal of sentiment in regard to this lighthouse, I will say, and the people of New Jersey are very anxious that this light should be preserved, and there is no reason why it should not be.

Mr. WATSON. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing magnetic observations and to establish meridian lines in connection therewith in all parts of the United States; magnetic observations in other regions under the jurisdiction of the United States; purchase of additional magnetic instruments; lease of sites where necessary and erection of temporary magnetic buildings; continuing the line of exact levels between the Atlantic, Pacific, and Gulf coasts; establishing lines of exact levels in Alaska; determination of geographical positions, by triangulation or traverse, for the control of Federal, State, boundary, and other surveys and engineering works in all parts of the interior of the United States and Alaska; determination of field astronomic positions; for continuing gravity observations; and including the employment in the field and office of such magnetic observers, at salaries not exceeding $2,200 per annum, as may be necessary, $134,500.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I do so with a great deal of hesitation. I have not the temerity to move to strike out the paragraph, even though I feel constrained to do so in the absence of the self-constituted watchdogs of the Treasury. I presume they have been called from "labor to refreshment," and that is the reason that they have not done so. I want to say that they sat silently while we provided $100,000 for the restoration of an old landmark and the watchdogs of the Treasury did not bark, but this provision—with all due deference to these aged gentlemen—I do not know in the present condition of the Treasury—maybe I am not advised—but it looks like it is not necessary "for continuing magnetic observations and to establish meridian lines," as provided in this paragraph.

I was laboring under the delusion that these magnetic lines had all been established. There is also a provision for "temporary magnetic buildings." But here, I suppose, is the important provision:

Continuing the line of exact levels between the Atlantic, Pacific, and Gulf coasts; determination of geographical positions, by triangulation or traverse, for the control of Federal, State, boundary, and other surveys and engineering works.

And so forth. Of course this provision here, "determination of field astronomic positions, for continuing gravity observations," those provisions constrain me from moving to strike out the whole paragraph. Under this administration, Mr. Chairman, we have $134,000 that we can appropriate from a busted Treasury in the face of the coming deficit for the purpose of "determining field astronomic positions" and for "continuing gravity observations" of this administration, but not a cent for adjusted compensation for soldiers. Thus worketh the Budget. Is that absolutely essential work? Can not these meridians rest a while, and can not these "gravity and astronomical observations" remain suspended for a while?

Mr. SHREVE. Absolutely not, for the reason that the earth's magnetic changes require that these maps be redrawn.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, yes, Mr. Chairman; that reminds me. This is, I guess, an emergency appropriation, because I was reading a few days ago a very learned treatise discussing this question of magnetic changes and one also on the loss of time suffered under the present calendar. There has been a loss of time going on under the established calendar that in 3,284 years will become serious, but measured by the progress of this administration I think it might be wise at this particular time to appropriate $134,500 out of the Public Treasury for this useful and necessary work. It is provided that these officials shall have a salary not exceeding $2,200 per annum. Now, seriously, is not this "$2,200 per annum" the most pressing part of this paragraph? [Laughter.]

Mr. SHREVE. I think not, for the reason that our navigators have to be supplied with this information. I will read to the gentleman——

Mr. WINGO. No; I do not want the gentleman to read that in my time, for I fear I shall get an oratorical spanking from the watchdog of the Treasury on my side of the House for questioning this item that he and the lords of the Budget have approved. But, seriously, I do not think navigation will be affected by our failure to make more accurate "astronomical observations" than those we now have. I feel that the "meridians" now established might well be followed for a time, and we could economize in that.

I would move to strike it out were it not for the fact that the Budget has made the estimate, and "the men who ride on white asses" have approved it. Great was Diana of the Ephesians, but greater still the lords of the Budget. Where is the gentleman who a little while ago dramatically proclaimed to the radio that the "most important business under the Government is being done in the House of Representatives"? I know it would go through if I moved to strike it out, so I do not, economy of time being the only possible economy. The lords of the Budget have spoken. The watchdog sleepeth, and who am I that I should question their infallibility on this momentous item?

Mr. SHREVE. For the encouragement of the gentleman from Arkansas, I will say that we did make quite a drastic cut. We cut out about $40,000.

Mr. WINGO. How many "observations" did you cut out? It would take one of those $2,200 per annum sages to tell you, would it not? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all necessary employees to man and equip the vessels, including professional seamen serving as mates on vessels of the survey, to execute the work of the survey herein provided for and authorized by law, $535,200.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DOWELL. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the subcommittee about this item of $535,200, on page 33. Is that an item just thrown in, just to see that everybody gets his share, or is it a serious item?

Mr. SHREVE. We will give you the hearings on that in just a moment. It is itemized under the statement given to the committee by the Budget Bureau.

Mr. DOWELL. But the wording of this is very peculiar.

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. It is just a lump sum, put in after apparently everything else has been appropriated for. Here is $535,000 given as full measure.

Mr. SHREVE. We will give you in a minute what that is used for. That is used in various ways. It is used for the payment of the salaries of the chief engineers, at from $125 to $170 a month; deck officers, $2,000; mates, $115 to $250; surgeons, $100; watch officers, $140.

Mr. DOWELL. Have you not provided for these in the other items in the bill?

Mr. SHREVE. No. That is in another part. This is for the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Mr. DOWELL. This is in addition to those already appropriated for?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes; this is in addition to those already appropriated for.

Mr. DOWELL. Then I would like to inquire why this item can not be specified, so that we shall know what this is being used for. Five hundred and thirty-five thousand two hundred dollars is not so great a sum, but could not the committee get into the habit of giving us the items for which this is expended?

The members of the Committee on Appropriations speak of ways in which they will try to get away from lump-sum appropriations, and yet after the concrete items we have items, amounting to several thousand dollars or several million dollars, of lump-sum appropriations in addition to what has been appropriated. Is there not some way of getting away from this? Can not the committee give an exact specification as to the way in which this money shall be expended?

Mr. SHREVE. I fully agree with the gentleman. I wish there were some other manner in which we could furnish to the House the exact information. I have the exact information in my hand, an itemized statement; but the trouble is people do not take the time to look up what the situation is. It is all in the hearings.

Mr. DOWELL. Aside, however, from the subcommittee, no one knows for what purpose this $500,000 is used.

Mr. SHREVE. I can not tell to what extent the reports are read.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The salaries and wages for men on board the ships that make the surveys are dependent upon the conditions at sea?

Mr. SHREVE. Entirely.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. You may get a mate to serve on a ship with one salary to-day, and next month, or next January, or next April you would probably have to pay him a different salary. I do not see how you can specify the salaries paid to these men.

Mr. DOWELL. How can you get at the exact amount, $535,200? Why is it not $600,000?

Mr. SHREVE. Because we have, as I say, an itemized statement of what was paid last year. We know exactly what was paid.

Mr. DOWELL. But it seems to me if you know the aggregate you should know the items by which that aggregate is obtained.

Mr. SHREVE. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman help us to get that into this bill?

Mr. SHREVE. I will see what can be done.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. In regard to this Coast Pilot item of $5,000, does that include the total expense of publishing that book?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes; that seems to be the total expense. It has gone along that way for a number of years.

Mr. HICKS. The book is not sold, is it?

Mr. SHREVE. I think it is sold. I think the money for it goes into the Treasury.

Mr. HICKS. How much is received from the sales of that book?

Mr. SHREVE. That is stated in the hearings.

In reference to the question raised by the gentleman from New York a little while ago concerning the availability of the ships received from the Shipping Board and from the War Department for lighthouse purposes, I wish to say that we have found that these ships are splendidly equipped just about as they are for the purpose of wire dragging. The ships will be a mile apart with a cable extending from one to the other, and these mine sweepers make the finest ships that can be found to drag the cable. So instead of building new ships the Coast and Geodetic Survey are taking these mine sweepers and putting them to some useful purpose.

Mr. HICKS. That is undoubtedly true.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Appropriations herein made for the Coast and Geodetic Survey shall not be available for allowance to civilian or other officers for subsistence while on duty at Washington (except as hereinbefore provided for officers of the field force ordered to Washington for short periods for consultation with the director), except as now provided by law.

Mr. STEVENSON. I move to strike out the last word. I want to inquire who is the head of the Coast and Geodetic Survey at this time?

Mr. SHREVE. Colonel Jones.

Mr. STEVENSON. Col. E. Lester Jones?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. That is the gentleman who was appointed in 1916, and whom a prominent candidate for the Presidency in his campaign in 1916 designated as a horse doctor. He is not a doctor now, but a colonel, is he?

Mr. SHREVE. I will say that he is a colonel, and that he is highly efficient.

Mr. STEVENSON. Then Mr. Hughes was mistaken when he said he was a horse doctor when President Wilson appointed him. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Inquiry respecting food fishes: For inquiry into the causes of the decrease of food fishes in the waters of the United States, and for investigation and experiments in respect to the aquatic animals, plants, and waters in the interests of fish culture and the fishery industries, including expenses of travel and preparation of reports, $40,000.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, this item seems rather useless. It is a crime the way the fish in the streams of the United States are being destroyed by stream pollution, but it is not necessary to appropriate any money in order to secure information about it. Information upon the subject of stream pollution is available to anybody who wants to read it. I have here a list of 38 different publications, or rather books, upon stream pollution and fish destruction. It is a discredit to the United States that we have permitted this condition of things to exist so long. There is no provision in the statutes of the United States with reference to stream pollution, and that is what causes the death of fish. Perhaps the Government of the United States has no jurisdiction. Perhaps we could not enact any legislation. The Bureau of Fisheries have informed me that the executive branch of the Federal Government has no authority to prevent stream pollution except when it interferes with navigation, and, of course, the death of the fish could not interfere with navigation.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I was wondering whether the Government had any jurisdiction over interstate streams. They surely have in the building of bridges.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I think myself we could pass some legislation with reference to the pollution of interstate streams causing the death of fish. But why spend this money to find out something that we know already? Anybody can go to a library and get all the books he needs on the subject.

Mr. SHREVE. There was an item in the bill in regard to pollution of streams, but it was taken out. If you will read this item very carefully, it is for an inquiry into the causes of the decrease of food fishes in the waters of the United States and for investigation and experiments in respect to the aquatic animals, plants, and waters in the interests of fish culture and the fishery industries. It is entirely in the interest of fish culture. It is not a matter of public health at all, but these men are trying to find out why it is that certain fishes die in certain waters, or do not thrive there.

Mr. MACGREGOR. You can get all that information by reading books that are now in existence.

Mr. SHREVE. New diseases appear every little while. We must keep up with the study of these things. The gentleman would not want a lot of diseased small fish planted in the waters in his district which might be the means of destroying all the rest of the fish there.

Mr. MACGREGOR. This is a new item.

Mr. SHREVE. I know, but they must take care of it, under the organic act, for the purpose of saving and protecting the food fishes of the United States of America.

Mr. MACGREGOR. We are saving at the spigot and wasting at the bunghole. We are doing nothing to prevent the pollution of streams.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; we are doing a great deal. The Public Health Service are making a most thorough research into the matter, and they have done marvelous things, and they are communicating to every section of the Nation the information which they obtain through their research work.

Mr. MACGREGOR. We have researched and researched, and done nothing tangible.

Mr. MADDEN. We will have to continue research work as long as the world lasts, because science is advancing all the time, and we are in a very much better condition than we were.

Mr. MACGREGOR. The gentleman knows as well as I do that if they put pollution into these streams it will kill the fish.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes.

Mr. MACGREGOR. And they are not doing anything to prevent it.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes; they are.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman that if the States will do what California has done to prevent the pollution of streams they would not have to come to Congress. I believe that every State should take care of its own business, and instead of coming to Congress if the gentleman would go to his own legislature and have the matter fixed up there, there would be no need for Federal legislation. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Commissioners of conciliation: To enable the Secretary of Labor to exercise the authority vested in him by section 8 of the act creating the Department of Labor, and to appoint commissioners of conciliation, for per diem in lieu of subsistence at not exceeding $4, traveling expenses, and not to exceed $12,000 for personal services in the District of Columbia, and telegraph and telephone service, $200,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Are the salaries of these commissioners fixed by law?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. What salaries do they authorize for the commissioners of conciliation?

Mr. SHREVE. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon; I did not know that he referred to the commissioners of conciliation. They are paid by a lump sum.

Mr. BLANTON. Why is it that their salaries are not fixed by law?

Mr. SHREVE. Each salary is itemized.

Mr. BLANTON. I know it is not in the bill. Is there anything in the law that fixes the maximum over which the Secretary of Labor can not go in fixing the salaries?

Mr. SHREVE. The commissioners of conciliation receive all the way from $7.50 a day up to $15. There are a few expert individuals, depending upon the difficulty of the job they are to take care of, but I will say that they are not working all the time. They work only when they are sent out on a job.

Mr. BLANTON. In this day of high salaries, where we have at least two Government officials drawing $35,000 a year, a number drawing $25,000 a year, others at $18,000 a year, and so on down the line, does not the gentleman think that we ought in all cases not to leave a $200,000 lump-sum appropriation unrestricted without fixing the salaries to be paid under it?

Mr. SHREVE. It is pretty hard to handle a situation of that kind. You are unable to determine what use you are going to have for these commissioners next year. It would only result in high salaries and high wages—men would be put on the permanent roll whether they had any work to do or not.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman has investigated—I do not know whether he has or not—but if he investigates he will find several men drawing $15 a day when at work and in addition to that drawing $4 a day for subsistence and traveling expenses, and that these are men who until they entered the Government service—at least some of them—were not able to earn over $2,000 or $2,500 a year.

Mr. SHREVE. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that; these men are very high-class men.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; high-class men; and yet some of them before they went into the Government service were not earning over $2,000 or $2,500 a year.

Mr. SHREVE. You might say the same thing of some Members of Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. I am talking about the time when they left private business and entered into the Government service.

Mr. SHREVE. Well, I can not say about that.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope the gentleman's committee and other subcommittees will do away with the lump-sum appropriations as rapidly as possible and provide fixed salaries. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Regulating immigration: For enforcement of the laws regulating immigration of aliens into the United States, including the contract labor laws; cost of reports of decisions of the Federal courts, and digests thereof, for the use of the Commissioner General of Immigration; salaries and expenses of all officers, clerks, and employees appointed to enforce said laws, including per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914; enforcement of the provisions of the act of February 5, 1917, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States," and acts amendatory thereof; necessary supplies, including exchange of typewriting machines, alterations and repairs, and for all other expenses authorized by said act; preventing the unlawful entry of Chinese into the United States by the appointment of suitable officers to enforce the laws in relation thereto; expenses of returning to China all Chinese persons found to be unlawfully in the United States, including the cost of imprisonment and actual expenses of conveyance of Chinese persons to the frontier or seaboard for deportation; refunding of head tax and maintenance bills upon presentation of evidence showing conclusively that collection was made through error of Government officers; all to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Labor, $3,000,000: Provided, That the purchase, exchange, use, maintenance, and operation of horse and motor vehicles required in the enforcement of the immigration and Chinese exclusion laws outside of the District of Columbia may be contracted for and the cost thereof paid from the appropriation for the enforcement of those laws, under such terms and conditions as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe: Provided further, That not more than $12,000 of the sum appropriated herein may be expended in the purchase and maintenance of such motor vehicles: Provided further, That the appropriation herein made for the enforcement of the immigration laws shall be available for carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes," approved October 16, 1918, and acts amendatory thereof.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Amendment by Mr. CABLE: Page 48, line 2, after the word "labor," strike out $3,000,000 and insert in lieu thereof "$3,300,000."

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment fails Uncle Sam will be somewhat in the same position as the man who locks the front door, retires for the night, leaves his back door open, and when some one enters his house he is not able to obtain help to exclude the person. The appropriation bill for the present year is $3,300,000, the same as the amount asked for in this amendment. A year ago, under the first year of the 3 per cent law, the appropriation was $3,000,000, and a deficiency bill was brought in for $300,000. The object of this amendment is as follows: Under the 3 per cent law we are excluding many immigrants from our ports, but because of the strict law there are many undesirable immigrants coming in from Canada, from Mexico, and they are being smuggled in from Cuba. In my time I would like to have the Clerk read a letter from the Commissioner General of Immigration explaining in a way what confronts his department under the present $3,300,000 appropriation, showing it should not be cut $300,000 as this bill seeks to do.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, BUREAU OF IMMIGRATION,
Washington, December 12, 1922.

Hon. JOHN L. CABLE, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CABLE: Referring to your inquiry as to specific instances in which there is now a need for increase in the immigration force in order to more adequately enforce the law, I beg to quote the following from a report of R. A. Scott, inspector in charge, Tucson, Ariz., with respect to the outcome of a number of prosecutions against smugglers of aliens in the United States court at a recent term. This illustrates in a general way the inadequacy of the force available for guarding the Mexican border:

"It may be stated for your information that Judge Sawtelle expressed marked dissatisfaction with the absence of immigration officers or guards at the regular crossing places at border ports. In this connection he went so far as to remark from the bench, in substance, that if the Immigration Service allowed aliens to enter and pass back and forth without restriction through regular channels at ports of entry, he doubted that the court should burden itself with prosecutions involving such aliens. Such remarks from Judge Sawtelle were undoubtedly significant, hence the importance of you being aware of the court's attitude."

Richard L. Halsey, inspector in charge, United States Immigration Service, Honolulu, Hawaii, has just made an urgent request for authority to employ two additional guards for service at that station. He states that at the present time 18 regular passage vessels are being operated through that port by different steamship companies, and that it is reported two other lines are about to begin operations. He states that with the limited number of guards assigned to his station at the present time it is impossible to guard vessels in such a manner as to avoid entrance of aliens without inspection and to properly care for aliens detained at that station.

Commissioner Luther Weedin, of the Seattle district, has recently urged the assignment of five additional officers to his district for service at four main traveled roads crossing the border which are not guarded by immigration officers, but we have been compelled to deny the request. Requests of a similar nature are being received almost constantly from various districts, and while every effort is being made to distribute the available force to the best advantage, it is utterly impossible to meet the demands without corresponding weakening of important barriers elsewhere.

It may be of interest to you to know that there was a considerable increase in the percentage of applicants debarred at United States ports during the fiscal year 1922 as compared with the two preceding years or before the outbreak of the World War. The number and percentage debarred during the last three years is given below:

Year.	Number debarred.	Per cent of applicants debarred.
1920	11,795	1.9
1922	13,731	3.1

Very truly yours,

W. W. HUSBAND,
Commissioner General.

[During the reading of the foregoing letter the time of Mr. CABLE expired, and, by unanimous consent, he was granted an additional three minutes.]

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this is not a question of dollars and cents—that is, the saving of any money—because if these aliens sneak into this country over the border the Government will spend more money in caring for many of them. The records of our country show that we are expending $22,000,000 a year to take care of aliens in penal and other institutions. The records show that we have 13 per cent alien population in this country but 25 per cent alien population in these institutions. The Budget submitted by the President for this next year shows that the total income from the Immigration Service will be $3,440,000, or $140,000 more than we are asking for in this amendment. We simply ask to have the same amount of money for the next year that we have for this. The testimony before the committee shows that 228 men, at an average of $1,440 each, will have to be discharged, and what good is any immigration law if we stop them at our ports and permit them to come in from Cuba and the other places and permit them to remain? It means simply that the Appropriations Committee of the House can for itself and the Budget Committee can for itself determine what laws that have been passed by Congress shall be enforced or shall stand on the statute books as a nullity.

I call attention to the fact that the report of the Commissioner of Immigration goes into detail in respect to the way that men are making money smuggling Chinese into this country. Twenty-five thousand were at one time in Cuba, and there are but 2,500 there now. The rest of them have come to the United States. They are coming in all over the borders, and if you cut out the $300,000 it simply means that the people who desire to come to this country will come in unlawfully and be permitted to remain. [Applause.]

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, I find myself in sympathy with the amendment. I hope it will be adopted. No member of the House Committee on Immigration, so far as I know, believes that the present appropriation is adequate. There are two ways to nullify any law. Our friends who are opposed to the eighteenth amendment and its enforcement sometimes adopt one of those methods, and that is to oppose the appropriation for sufficient funds to enforce the law. One way to destroy the immigration law, and a very effective one, is to refuse to enforce it.

The law is not enforced but is shamefully abused. If the amendment is adopted, the organization will still not be adequate. Many employees in the service at the stations are not adequately paid. There are watchmen and guards in the service of the Government at New York and other ports where rents and living expenses are high now receiving $75 per month, plus the bonus of $20, who have families and are trying to live upon that money. It is no wonder that several of them have been indicted and convicted of bribery. You force a weak man to live on tips, which are akin to bribes, and you will retain only the kind of men who will take tips and bribes. The force at Ellis Island is utterly inadequate; it is not adequately paid. The adoption of this last act restricting immigration does not relieve the country of the pressure upon it by people who should not come in. That pressure has been increased. Men from every land are trying to get in—the very kind of people we do not want. When they find themselves barred by the new provisions of our immigration law then they find some new method of entering. At New York they have adopted one or more dangerous lines of procedure. There they often tip and bribe their way in. Along the Canadian border they are trying to break in in another way. From Mexico they are walking over the border, where there are not sufficient guards, and also they are coming in from Cuba, as the gentleman from Ohio has told you.

I have given my best attention to this subject, and I am sure the other members of the committee have. I am not at all satisfied with the present immigration law. There are many points at which it ought to be strengthened, but it is weaker in its enforcement than at any other point.

I do not assail the bureau that is trying to enforce the law, for I believe Commissioner Husband is doing his best under many disadvantages to enforce the law. I believe his forces are inadequate, and if the country understood the conditions under which he is performing those duties it would demand that he be provided necessary funds and supported in his efforts to enforce this vitally important law. If the country understood it, the House would not dare to refuse to adopt this amendment, by which it is sought to add $300,000 to the amount named in the bill, and that is not a large addition and only brings it up to the figures for the present year. It is for the enforcement of a law that the country is deeply interested in, a law that is necessary for the protection of those things that we regard as important in American life. I sincerely hope that this amendment will be adopted. If the Members of this House understood the conditions under which the Bureau of Immigration is laboring, they would not hesitate to make this addition to this appropriation and make it at least what it has been heretofore.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. It seems to me that if this Committee on Immigration would bring out a bill requiring registration of aliens it would go a long way toward solving the difficulty.

Mr. BOX. The gentleman makes a suggestion in line with what the committee has been considering for more than a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOX. If the gentleman will reflect a moment, he will know that the registration of aliens will not meet the cases of those who slip in by our guards or where there are no guards. The registration of aliens might enable us to keep up with lawless ones who entered with our knowledge, with those who have entered illegally after their unlawful presence was discovered, but it will not reach the case of those seeking to come in unlawfully and undetected, and will not provide for the deportation of those who have come in unlawfully and have been detected.

There are great numbers of aliens in the United States who are subject to deportation under the laws, and your bureau can not do it for lack of funds. That embarrassment has hampered the work of that bureau since I have been a Member of Congress, under the former administration and under this administration. While the registration which the gentleman suggests has had the attention and will continue to have the attention of the committee, it will not meet this question of their entering secretly and unlawfully or the case of our inability to deport them for lack of expense money provided for the purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. If they have to register and carry registration cards, they would either have to produce registration cards or subject themselves to deportation. That is a certainty.

Mr. BOX. That is true, it being assumed that their presence has been detected, but they come in in four or five ways in violation of our laws. We must keep them out or detect them soon after they get in and put them out.

Alien seamen have a right to come ashore, and they do come ashore under our regulations, and then merge themselves into the body of the population and remain unlawfully. No force is provided by which they can thereafter be watched, and many of them remain in the United States, having remained illegally after the expiration of their shore leave and having mixed with the body of the people and been lost among them. Many others come in as visitors under a legal regulation that permits the men to come and go for temporary purposes and have remained contrary to the law. Many diseased, criminal, and dangerous aliens get in by such methods.

There is no way to follow each one of them. It will probably never be possible to follow every one of them as closely as would be desirable. There is now no organization adequate to the task of keeping up with that class of aliens. Then there are some of those who come, as has been stated, across the borders, from Cuba, from Mexico, from Canada; then there are some who are creeping in through the ports, getting in by bribery, fraud, and otherwise. This House will make a mistake if it does not adopt this amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BOX. I will.

Mr. BLACK. As I understand it, certain aliens are subject to deportation, even though they may have entered lawfully. For instance, if an alien had entered lawfully so far as the immigration laws are concerned and then advocates the overthrow of Government by violence, and things of that kind, advocates the assassination of public officials, under a law passed by the Congress he should be deported on those facts being shown to the proper officials of the Labor Department, and it requires an investigation of a judicial character.

Mr. BOX. The gentleman is correct and the fact he states is important. Many violent anarchist aliens remain in the United States because adequate funds are not provided for their deportation. The country wants them to go; they are dangerous trouble makers. There is yet another class; those who go into penal and charitable institutions and become public charges within five years of their entrance are subject to deportation. The plainest proof has been submitted to your committee that large numbers of undesirables from other countries have come here in such numbers as to suggest that some foreign countries are trying to unload on us not only their surplus but the most undesirable and most objectionable part of their surplus. The study made by the committee shows that there is a much greater per cent of foreign-born aliens and their immediate descendants among the inmates of those institutions than of other classes of people. Until after they have been here a certain length of time, five years, they are subject to deportation, but unless they can be caught by a survey made of those institutions and deported, they simply remain here and our law is made futile. The location and deportation of aliens of this class involves expense, which must be provided by appropriation.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman submit to a question?

Mr. BOX. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Husband, Commissioner General of Immigration, on December the 5th, testifying before the House Committee on Immigration, said, in reference to the pay of employees at Ellis Island:

Mr. HUSBAND. I think we have people working at Ellis Island for wages, men with families working for wages, who have to live in New York and about New York, that it is a crime, in the beginning, to ask them to work for.

Since yesterday afternoon, when the question first came up here for discussion, I have been able to obtain confirmation of my facts. They are contained in the statement showing vessels which docked July 1, 1922, and the number of passengers thereon who were inspected by the boarding division:

[1] Assigned to this ship after completion of work at another.

The crews of the above-named vessels totaled 3,649 persons, who were also inspected.

There is a long list showing that these inspectors of immigration have been working inside the 24 hours of one day 18 and 19 hours, and that many of these men have worked 7 days a week. I have here a list of steamships showing that men started to work and worked until 1.30 a. m. from the month of November up to and including December; that during the month of July many of these men did not have 1 day off inside of 14 days in succession. Let me read you another bill of particulars, as follows:

Steamship American Legion, Munson Line, arrived in quarantine at 7.55 p. m. November 15, leaving there at 9.47 p. m. The inspectors finished their work on this ship at 1.30 a. m. next day.

Steamship Cedric, White Star Line, arrived in quarantine on Sunday, November 26, at 7.12 p. m. and left at 8.49 p. m. Inspectors finished work at 1.30 a. m. next day.

Steamship Olympic, White Star Line, arrived in quarantine at 3.19 p. m. on November 28 and left at 5.26 p. m.

Steamship Aquitania, Cunard Line, arrived in quarantine at 3.54 p. m. December 1 and left at 6.40 p. m. The work was completed at 1.30 a. m. next day.

Steamship Adriatic, White Star Line, arrived in quarantine on Sunday, December 3, at 3.36 p. m. and left at 4.54 p. m. The men on this ship finished their work at different hours from 10 to 11.30 p. m.

Steamship Paris, French Line, arrived in quarantine at 5.18 p. m., 9th instant, and left at 7.02 p. m. The inspection of these passengers was discontinued at about 10 p. m., being resumed yesterday (Sunday) morning and finished.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will yield, a good many periods during the year they did not have anything to do.

Mr. SIEGEL. They have worked every working-day during the year, except when the men at Ellis Island were laid off one month without pay because there was not any appropriation for them. They are men with families, men who had a service of from 20 to 25 years, and some men were paid $900 a year as watchmen, and inspectors from $1,600 to $1,800.

Mr. VAILE. If the gentleman will yield, those men paid $1,600 and $1,800 determine who shall be the future citizens of the United States, do they not?

Mr. SIEGEL. Every one familiar with the law knows that. They determine whether the immigrant shall be admitted, and unless an appeal is taken they act as the final court in the matter.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. SIEGEL. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the use of keeping anarchists out if when they are deported anyone from Mexico and other places can come here and violate the laws and are convicted and then they hold memorial exercises for them here in Washington?

Mr. SIEGEL. The gentlemen holding those memorial exercises should search their own consciences whether they are performing the duty resting on their shoulders. That is not the question before us, however.

That is for another forum and another place. It is for public opinion to treat with those gentlemen as seriously as public opinion desires. What I am trying to point out is this: Our committee was unanimous in its belief that there should be an appropriation equal at least to what was given last year. We say to the House, unless this amendment goes through, that 228 men urgently needed will be put out of the service, when the number of men at Ellis Island now is entirely inadequate to handle the work properly and efficiently, not only in justice to the Government but in justice to the men themselves who work these extraordinary hours.

I am going to read to you, if I may, some of the testimony offered before the committee as to the consequences which are bound to follow in the event that this $300,000 is not granted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes additional. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIEGEL. This testimony is given by Mr. Wixon. He says:

The estimates as submitted to the Bureau of the Budget for 1924 amounted to $3,500,000. For the present fiscal year we have, as you stated, an appropriation of $3,300,000. This is now reduced to $3,000,000 under the estimates as submitted by the Bureau of the Budget to operate the service for the fiscal year 1924.

If we are compelled to operate under an appropriation of that amount it will be necessary to reduce our force by 228 persons, whose average salaries must be at least $1,440 a year. We must also curtail activities in connection with the ridding of the country of undesirable aliens who are found to be unlawfully resident therein.

During the fiscal year 1922, in order to keep within the appropriation, we were compelled to furlough field employees from 15 to 30 days each, aside from the officers in charge. This resulted in a saving of approximately $100,000. We were also compelled during that year to practically serve notice on the field that they must keep within their allotments, even though it meant curtailing the deportation of aliens found to be unlawfully in the country.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. SIEGEL. I do.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I notice that the gentleman mentioned undesirable aliens. I would like to ask him this question: I believe that there are a lot of undesirable aliens, anarchistic minds, engaged in publishing seditious and pernicious literature in this country and scattering it all over this country at this time. Does the gentleman know whether the Department of Labor is taking any steps to expel or deport those people?

Mr. SIEGEL. The Department of Labor is in this predicament: They have not sufficient money even to deport those aliens that have been convicted of most dangerous crimes and sent to prison.

Mr. VAILE. All that is given in the hearings.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Does not the gentleman believe it would be money well expended if it were used for this purpose?

Mr. SIEGEL. The House Immigration Committee, regardless of whether or not we believe in this quota law, is unanimous in believing that while we have this immigration law it should be properly enforced and arriving immigrants treated fairly and decently.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I will say to the gentleman from New York that I have received in the last few days many copies of publications and magazines that are published by aliens, of an anarchistic nature. It seems to me that the Department of Labor should round up these men and send them out of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. SIEGEL. You have to have the money first with which to do it.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. BOX. Does not the gentleman believe that if more caution and care were exercised in keeping out these aliens who are in the country our expense account in deporting them would be smaller?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes. The evidence acquired in the investigations shows that most of our troubles have come from those who have not come through the regular ports of entry. They have gotten in without examination. We ascertained that at the time we shipped some of them out of the country. Let me read you a few lines more from Commissioner General Husband's report just issued:

> Lack of funds has prevented the bureau from conducting an active campaign against aliens unlawfully resident here, and many such who were proper subjects for deportation under our laws have been permitted to remain for this reason. In fact, it may be stated that the bureau has been careful to see that the activities in this direction of its field officers have been confined to the more extreme cases where, for peculiarly good cause, deportation should be accomplished.

Mr. Chairman, I could continue to present evidence before this committee showing the urgent necessity for this additional $300,000, and even for more money than that.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question? I want to ask a question of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Box].

Mr. SIEGEL. I do.

Mr. FESS. Passing over the question of the importance of keeping the undesirables out, would it not be a saving to the Government to make the appropriation of $300,000?

Mr. SIEGEL. It would be a saving in two respects. It would expedite hearings and give proper treatment both to arriving immigrants and Government employees, who have worked honestly and faithfully for a long number of years. [Applause.]

Mr. VAILE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado is recognized.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, some one asked awhile ago if it would be a saving if we could relieve the Government of the enormous expense of taking care of socially inadequate people who get into the United States. I believe the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CABLE] gave some very interesting figures of the total expense of taking care of undesirables in penal, charitable, and reformatory institutions, an expense which for aliens alone is roughly reckoned at some $25,000,000 annually. Let me call your attention to this point, which distinguishes the situation at the present moment. A year ago we had a law, the then 3 per cent quota law, which provided that aliens residing in adjacent islands must reside there a year before being admitted to the United States. Under that provision many aliens came to Cuba and the West India Islands from all parts of the world expecting, no doubt, many of them, to live there for a year before trying to get into the United States, although most of them were looking for a chance to get in before the year expired. Immediately after that we extended that provision, making it five years, so that those people who had banked up there, many, many thousands of them, saw that they would have to remain there for five years before they could get into the United States legally, and the result is that there has been a regular bootleg trade in aliens from the West Indies to Florida and other parts of our coast. The evidence is overwhelming that it is a large, regular, and very lucrative trade, and one involving great danger to the United States.

Now, then, the kind of people who try to get into the United States clandestinely are, of course, those who can not get in in the regular way. It includes primarily those who can not get in under the quota requirement, but it also includes others, people who are excluded under the general provisions of the law—the criminal, the diseased, the anarchistic, and the dependent. Those are many of the people who try to get in here by other than the regular channels. We had before us the other day in our committee a gentleman who had made a very extended study into what he calls the "socially inadequate."

He divided them into 10 classes, namely: Feeble-minded; insane; criminalistic; epileptic; inebriate, including drug addicts; diseased; blind; deaf; crippled; and dependent, including paupers and orphans. Then he took all the people of those classes who were in penal and reformatory institutions in the United States, natives as well as aliens, and he made a table showing the proportionate number which each alien group should have in each of these penal and reformatory institutions, based on the number of aliens of that nationality in the United States and their ratio to the total population, and it resulted in some very interesting figures. For instance, the insane, all foreign born, show a proportion of 192 per cent; that is to say, nearly twice their proper proportion, their normal proportion, if they had the same ratio as all of the inhabitants of this country.

All of the Balkan States together show 275 per cent, or nearly three times their normal proportion of criminals. Serbia and Bulgaria show 1,400 per cent, or fourteen times their normal proportion in our penal institutions, put there as punishment for crime. Spain has 750 per cent. Now, of, course, these figures do not represent the proportions of the criminalistic and the insane in those countries. They do not even prove that the governments of those countries are trying to dump their criminals here, but they do show that somebody has been trying to dump their undesirable people here, and the people who will be dumped are those who can not get through our ports in the regular way. They are the people who, if they get in at all, must be slipped in clandestinely; and they are the people who will be bound to get in if we do not have inspectors enough to keep them out.

This bill as it stands will lose to the service 228 employees of the department, nearly all of them inspectors. It seems to me it would be nothing short of a crime not to allow this extremely modest appropriation, in view of the reasons I have given, with the tremendous pressure that there is upon this service at this time. The total appropriation asked for by the pending amendment is $1,400,000 less than the estimated receipts of this bureau, the receipts from the head tax for the next fiscal year. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. The gentleman gave some very interesting figures about crime a moment ago. Has the gentleman any figures showing the percentage of crime on the part of aliens from those countries whose quotas are not full? How do they compare with the countries whose quotas are full?

Mr. VAILE. I have not those figures with me, but I know they are very much less than the figures I have given. I will say to the gentleman that the tables giving the statistics as to the whole matter will shortly be printed in one of the hearings of the Committee on Immigration, and I have no doubt that the information therein contained will repay the study of Members of the House, because it spreads the whole subject out so that he who runs may read. I shall ask leave to extend my remarks and will insert more complete data on this subject as soon as it is available.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, now that we are on this immigration subject, I want to call the attention of the members to a movement now on foot in reference to a lowering of our immigration bars in order to meet the deplorable situation in the Near East growing out of the recent conflict between Greece and Turkey. There are thousands of refugees, and the suggestion has been made that over in Europe that not only these refugees but that thousands of others should be sent to America. It has even been proposed that portions of Turkey be depopulated of Greeks and Christians and that all of them be sent over here at our expense.

Such a proposition would necessarily involve a setting aside of our present immigration restrictive legislation involving what is known as the 3 per cent quota law. The condition of these unfortunate people is such that it is not to be wondered at that this suggestion has been made here in America, and that there is more or less agitation to-day for a modification of this law to meet the situation. This country as a Christian nation is not without its responsibility in the premises. However, if we should make an exception to meet this situation it would thereupon become a precedent that we would be asked to follow in every situation where any country, either for political, racial, or religious reasons, persecuted any minority group in that country. If we should adopt this as a principle, it would mean that any foreign country could force a minority group upon us that they did not happen to like by persecuting or mistreating them. The Committee on Immigration in the House is giving some real thought and consideration to this matter, and it seems to me that the people of this country ought to withhold judgment upon that until they have had the benefit of the recommendations of that committee. We must bear in mind that there is a limit in the power of assimilation and that this country has already not only reached that limit but gone beyond it. This fact therefore should be most thoroughly considered while we are also considering the other proposition as to what shall be done with these most unfortunate and mistreated refugees of Armenia and other portions of Asia Minor.

Mr. Chairman, my interest in immigration matters is well known in this House, and I think we would be making a grave mistake if we should follow the recommendations of the Bureau of the Budget and overrule the estimates of the Bureau of Immigration and also cut down the amount they had this last year. I want to call your attention to the hearings from page 251 on, and to some of the specific statements made by those who know something about immigration. We have heard from the members of the Committee on Immigration here in the House who unanimously desire to maintain this appropriation intact at not 1 cent less than it was this last year. As against that we have the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations enforced by the estimates from the Bureau of the Budget.

But the Appropriations Committee is necessarily confined to two sources of information—the estimate from the Bureau of the Budget and the statements from the Bureau of Immigration in support of those figures. Now, I submit that the Bureau of the Budget do not know anywhere near as much about this immigration question as the Members of Congress who have wrestled with it time in and time out upon the floor of this House. We passed the quota law because we wanted to restrict immigration into this country. We know the way the law is being violated. We know how persons are being smuggled across the border. About one year ago we had 100 prisoners whom we could not deport to Russia because we had no diplomatic relations with Russia, men who had been smuggled into this country from Mexico across the Rio Grande. That condition is even worse to-day. They are coming in from other sources. Yet here, in the face of that condition, we have a cut in their appropriation, without any reason for it and without any basis of facts behind it.

Let us look at the sources of information. I want first to call your attention to the statement made by Mr. Wixon, who apparently appeared for the Bureau of Immigration. If you will turn to page 253 of the hearings you will see what he says:

> With an appropriation of $3,000,000 I feel compelled to state that we will be impotent to carry out the will of Congress as expressed by the statutes, and must confine ourselves more or less to an examination of alien applicants for admission.

That means that they will confine their efforts to the stations and the efforts to keep people from being smuggled into this country will be practically suspended. The condition will be just as stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CABLE] when he first spoke upon his amendment.

Now, we have provided one Assistant Secretary of Labor for the purpose of hearing appeals. It developed during the hearings that since the 3 per cent quota law came into effect we have had twice as many appeals as we had under the previous restrictive law. It developed that there are more deportations. We have to hold people more at the various immigration stations in order to investigate their cases, and that entails an additional expense. Mr. White, the Assistant Secretary of Labor in charge of immigration matters, made a statement on page 263 of the hearings which I commend to your consideration. He says:

> In view of your attitude that no increase is to be considered in the appropriation I do not know that I have any statement to make.

That is the way he felt about it.

> I know that these amounts have been cut to the bone and, I think, to the detriment of the Immigration Service. It has compelled the immigration officials or the immigration executives, rather, to spread their officers over the territory in a manner that hinders good administration and good work. One man is placed where there should be two or three. There are hundreds of places along the border where no one is placed. Every port of any importance, every station, is crying for help. Many complaints and criticisms of the Immigration Service, emanating from New York principally, probably could be done away with if we had appropriations sufficient to give them enough help to handle the aliens expeditiously instead of detaining them sometimes several days before they can receive their examination. This condition prevails in almost every port and at every station. In the city of New York alone the officials have brought to our attention something like 2,000 or 3,000 Chinese seamen who should be deported, who have overstayed their shore leave, and have accepted employment and thus come into competition with American labor—our appropriation is insufficient and we can not deport them. The Department of Justice is constantly referring matters to the Immigration Service where men should be deported, and yet we are compelled to pass them up for lack of appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. May I have two minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks an extension of two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. White calls attention to the demand made for the prosecution, the ferreting out of those who are smuggling in these people who have no right to come in, and he calls attention to the inadequacy of the appropriation.

Now, whom have we heard from? We have heard from the members of the Immigration Committee. We have had our own experience here with this problem, and all we have heard against it is the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget, because every witness who appeared before this committee in support of this appropriation asked for $3,300,000 instead of the $3,000,000 that was granted.

It seems to me that this is an instance when we can very well override the Budget, because of the increased knowledge we have and because in the last analysis, as in the first, we are the policy-making branch of the Government. We make the laws, and here is the Bureau of the Budget coming in against the advice and counsel of everybody that knows anything about it and simply slashes off $300,000. I for one want to do everything in my power to see that our immigration laws are enforced in every possible way. [Applause.]

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I have no quarrel with those who feel that this appropriation should be increased. However, the facts stated by members of the legislative committee suggest the importance of further legislation on this subject. The President has urged the passage of a law requiring all immigrants to register, and its enactment will correct many of the abuses now complained of, and make the enforcement of existing law easier and more economical. No reason has been given by the Immigration Committee for longer delaying the consideration by the House of this legislation, which all seem to agree is important and urgent. The committee has had ample time to consider and report out some of the bills now pending before the committee on this subject.

Mr. VAILE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. Speaking for myself and not for the whole committee but with some knowledge about it, I want to say that there are three registration bills pending before the committee, that extensive hearings have been held, and that it is really difficult to determine how you are going to get an enforcement of registration, what shall be the penalty. That is not an easy problem to work out.

Mr. OLIVER. If the importance of this legislation is recognized by the committee, and the matter has had the attention of the committee for more than a year, as I understand, the committee owes it to the House to take action thereon. Surely the committee, composed as it is of members of great ability, should be able to immediately report out a bill on the subject, even if certain details are left open for the House to decide.

But, coming back to the action of the subcommittee in accepting the Budget recommendation as to this item, I wish to submit this suggestion. While in full sympathy with the idea expressed by many that the action of the Bureau of the Budget should not preclude this House from exercising its own judgment, yet we must recognize a difference between appropriations for carrying on public works or establishing policies from those providing funds to the executive branch of the Government for the enforcement of law.

It is proper and right as to this last class of appropriations that the President, who is charged with the duty of enforcing laws, shall submit estimates of the amount needed for law enforcement, and in the absence of bad faith or willful neglect of duty on his part his estimates should be followed. Why give the President more money for the enforcement of this law than he asks for? He alone is responsible for reducing this appropriation from $3,300,000 to $3,000,000, and until he indicates to Congress that a larger sum is needed we should not provide it. The responsibility for the proper enforcement of this law is on the President, and he has given unqualified approval to the amount allowed and proposed in the pending bill, and should he find the amount insufficient, Congress will no doubt supply promptly any additional sum which he may state is needed. We must not forget that the Budget Committee was organized to advise the President, and he, after careful consideration of this matter, requested a reduction in this appropriation. Not to accept his advice in this purely administrative matter would be unjustified and would establish a dangerous precedent.

Mr. VAILE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. VAILE. Could not we say with equal fairness that the President's Cabinet officers speak for him, and when the department asks for an appropriation that is the voice of the President? The Department of Labor asks for $3,500,000.

Mr. OLIVER. The law provides how the President shall make known his recommendations to Congress, and he has followed the law in this instance.

The increase asked for in the pending amendment simply provides the same amount as was provided for the current year, and yet all of the laxness, delays, and abuses detailed by the gentlemen who have spoken in favor of the amendment occurred, notwithstanding the current amount carried, and if they are correct in assuming that lack of funds is alone responsible for the complaints they register, then they should ask for a much larger increase to insure efficient enforcement.

I think we can well be charged with extravagance if we refuse to follow the President's recommendation as to the amount needed in the enforcement of this law. Under our system of government he alone is charged with the duty of enforcing the law, and Congress will not deny the necessary funds to uphold his hands, and I think we can safely rely on his calling for further funds if needed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OLIVER. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER. Now, I am intensely interested in the enforcement of the prohibition law, but I would hesitate long before voting an increase in the enforcement fund of this law over the protest of the President.

Why, he says this is all the bureau needs. I am willing to accept his estimate. He evidently has in mind the passage of helpful legislation, which, all seem to agree, is needed, and which this Congress should pass, and he may contemplate a reorganization of his enforcement forces along sane, economic, and efficient lines which gives assurance that $3,000,000 will prove adequate.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman takes the position that the committee relied upon the recommendations of the President, primarily and practically, beyond anything else?

Mr. OLIVER. There is no question as to that.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The testimony before the committee was directly to the contrary, and I am unable to find any cross-examination of the witnesses which would disapprove any of their contentions.

Mr. OLIVER. I have endeavored to point out that it is proper for the House to differentiate between appropriations which seek to provide funds to the executive branch of the Government for law enforcement and appropriations for other purposes. In other words, where the appropriation relates only to the enforcement of existing law, the President being charged with such enforcement, he is in better position than anyone else to state what funds are needed for that purpose. Certainly we are not justified in providing more money than he asks, unless it can be charged and shown that he is not in sympathy with the enforcement of the law and is likely to disregard or neglect the solemn duty imposed on his high office. Until you can show the President that he is wrong, or can offer some proof that he is unwilling to ask for sufficient funds to enforce an important law, I question the propriety of overriding the President's recommendation as to an appropriation of this kind.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Then, what is the use of hearings at all upon purely administrative matters?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

By unanimous consent, Mr. OLIVER was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

Mr. RAINEY of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the requests of these gentlemen to extend their remarks in the RECORD?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. RAINEY of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendment to the general bill, H. R. 13316, calling for an appropriation of $300,000 per annum to aid in the enforcement of the immigration laws, is a sum inadequate and insufficient to properly police the borders and ports against the entry of undesirable aliens. The annual report of the Commissioner General of Immigration, 1922, sets out the following:

Canadian border smuggling operations: The past year has been the foremost in history in increased attempts to smuggle from Canada into the United States.

Mexican border: During the early part of the present calendar year a number of Hindu aliens were apprehended in the vicinity of El Paso after they had entered without inspection, and investigation disclosed what appeared to be carefully devised plans for the importation on a large scale of contrabands of that race who were thereafter to be employed by fellow countrymen operating ranches in California. Certain of these domiciled Hindus came to the border from California, and in El Paso, Tex., and Juarez, Mexico, perfected arrangements with several Mexican smugglers whereby the contrabands were unlawfully brought into the United States and thereafter transported by automobile and train toward their interior destination.

Florida coast: Smuggling operations between Cuba and points on the Florida coast having assumed alarming proportions, in the month of May the bureau selected and sent two experienced officials to Florida and Cuba for the purpose of making a thorough investigation into and study of the situation in order that the most effective measures possible might be adopted to cope with it.

Lack of funds has prevented the bureau from conducting an active campaign against aliens unlawfully resident here, and many such who were proper persons for deportation under our laws have been permitted to remain for this reason. In fact, it may be stated that the bureau has been careful to see that the activities in this direction of its field officers have been confined to the more extreme cases where, for peculiarly good cause, deportation should be accomplished.

In this report the commissioner makes the following statement, which should arouse every patriotic American to action:

It is fully appreciated that dope, liquor, Chinese, and alien smuggling has become a lucrative business and is being carried on by international gangs in which there have been found the hardest, most daring, and cleverest criminals, backed by no limit of funds and possessed of the highest-powered vehicles, boats, etc., the automobile predominating as a means of traveling.

Mr. Speaker, to my mind the American Republic has reached the apex, or the turning tide, and we must now determine whether we shall enforce law and order or surrender ourselves to lawlessness, violence, and the absolute destruction of constituted authority. Upon the enforcement of two cardinal laws, in my judgment, rests the security, the safety, and the perpetuation of the life of the Republic. One of these laws is the restriction of foreign immigration, the other is the constitutional provision and prohibitory statutes relative to intoxicants. Upon deep analysis you will find that the lax enforcement of these two laws works hand in hand; that many undesirable aliens are engaged in smuggling liquor and dope into the United States; that the big bootlegger is opposed to restricted immigration, and that the undesirable alien is uniformly wet. There is a reason for the coordinating functioning of these two evils, and I invite you to a close study of the subject and thereby aid us in the preservation of the most sacred inheritance of the American people—good government. For the first time in my life I raise my voice on the prohibition issue, and I come not as a candidate seeking political preferment, nor am I driven on by any ulterior or selfish motive, but inspired solely by an ardent desire to preserve the integrity of my country and its citizenship. Heretofore I have deprecated running for office on a prohibition platform, regarding the issue then, as now, a moral question. In my judgment, prohibition is not an issue at this time, but the enforcement of the law merits your highest attention. Too long have I beheld the corruption of statutory law, too long have I seen the executive departments in Nation, State, and municipalities sidestep and avoid the enforcement of prohibition statutes. It is my desire and purpose to be liberal and tolerant, but when liberality and toleration consummate themselves into licentiousness, debauchery, and unbridled violation of law, then it is high time that the constituted authority of State and Nation assert the sovereign prerogative of law enforcement. Disrespect for and violation of one law is but the forerunner of the violation and disrespect of all law; it is the handmaid of anarchy, the boon companion of communism, the breeder of lawlessness, and the mother of a degraded, impotent, supercilious citizenship.

I have watched with careful vision the invasion of the sanctuary of law by the enemies of prohibition in concert with a weak, vacillating, bribe-taking, "bought and paid for" contingent of executive authority. In every part of the Nation prohibition is a by-word and a joke—and why? It is because of the laxity in the enforcement of the prohibition laws, and the inability to effectively enforce the immigration laws. I need advance no argument in this enlightened age against the evils of alcoholism. The dread is not alone against the poisonous, illicit distillations which inflame the minds of men, driving them to deeds of hellish import, destruction of homes, and devastation of every manly virtue, but I speak of that awful dread and dire consequence of the growing tendency of disrespect of law. This spirit must be arrested in its march whatever the cost may be to the Nation. What may we apprehend of a citizenship schooled in law violations, perjury, and a brazen disregard for law enforcement?

It were undoubtedly better for the Republic had no prohibitory statutes ever been enacted, or constitutional amendments adopted, than that we should fail in the strict enforcement of the law, and thereby command the respect of the people for law. Therefore, it is imperious that every power and resource of the Republic be drafted into the service of law enforcement. The failure to do so corrupts youth, breeds disregard of law, fosters bribery and graft, encourages perjury, and renders the Constitution itself an object of contempt. Hence I, for one, call upon the Chief Executive to carry out his well-timed, appropriate injunction—that the prohibition laws must be enforced. The amendment calling for additional funds to aid in the enforcement of the immigration laws meets my hearty indorsement, and I trust that its passage is secure. Recently I introduced a bill calling for a restriction in immigration. Heretofore we have admitted 3 per cent of immigrants from other nations, basing such per cent upon the resident aliens from the respective nations according to the census of 1910. The most undesirable aliens emanate from southern Europe and those hot climes bordering the Mediterranean. Up to 1890 few aliens from these countries resided in the United States, whereas those constituting what is known as the pure Caucasian races, England, France, Germany, Switzerland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, and others, were almost as numerous here in 1890 as in 1910. Therefore I framed a bill, which I am constrained to believe, from my knowledge of the sentiments and expressions of the members of the Immigration Committee, will meet the approbation of a majority. However, such a law if enacted will not entirely meet the present conditions. Aliens are being continuously smuggled in, as shown by the report of the commissioner. An alien registration law, advocated by the President, and which I propose to introduce at this session, will not fully meet the exigency. The pressing need of the hour is an ample appropriation to more strictly guard the ports and borders, to detect and deport undesirable aliens who have surreptitiously or otherwise gained admission into the United States. Inadequate as the amount called for in the amendment is I shall heartily support the measure, trusting and hoping that it may be a driving wedge, and hereafter we may procure such appropriation as will effectively and efficiently carry out the immigration laws.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Chairman, some gentleman in the course of the debate remarked that he could find no reason for a reduction in this appropriation. I think I can find a very substantial reason, and find it from the record itself. It is not necessary to call any witnesses on this subject. In 1920 and 1921 there was an appropriation of $2,450,000. Afterwards they came in with a deficiency of $150,000, which made a total of $2,600,000. What did they do with that appropriation? They deported 4,517 undesirable aliens, and you must remember that this was during the time when these seditious aliens were in the United States, shortly after the war, when the situation was being watched carefully, when it was necessary for them to comb and find every last alien. Yet in that period for $2,600,000 they were able to deport 4,517 aliens. In 1921–22 they received the same amount, $2,600,000, and were allowed two deficiencies, one of $336,000 and another of $150,000, which gave them all told $3,086,000. What happened as a result of that increase? We find that there were only 4,366 aliens deported. I mention this to let you see that it was not entirely a question of money. A large part of this money, if granted, would be used for traveling purposes, and the real amount of money that would be had for the salary list would be really very small.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. CABLE. Does not the gentleman believe that the immigrants who come in here unlawfully, contrary to the 3 per cent law, should be ascertained and deported just the same as they have been in the past?

Mr. SHREVE. Absolutely; and that is what we are doing, and the reason why we are able to do it is because the money can be diverted from other channels now and used for the one purpose in New York.

Mr. CABLE. Do not the hearings disclose the fact that if you add the $300,000 they will be able to look after only the immigrants that come to the ports and will not be able to ascertain the aliens that come in here unlawfully?

Mr. SHREVE. Oh, no. Let me say a word to the gentleman about what Mr. Husband says himself about immigrants coming in unlawfully. Some reference has been made to Chinese. There was a time when there was a very large number of Chinese who came in; they were not able to reship. There was a good deal of laxity in that law, but, as Mr. Husband himself says in his report—

> Effective on September last, there was put in operation a regulation requiring the Chinese seaman shipped in foreign ports or places to furnish bonds in the penalty of $500.

Then, on the next page he says:

> It is not necessary here to narrate the various and successive steps adopted to mitigate the evil, but suffice to say that with the close of the fiscal year 1921 the traffic had all but ceased.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Commissioner General of Immigration, in his report which was out yesterday, states that over 20,000 Chinese have been smuggled in from Cuba, and that because of the lack of funds they are not able to ascertain them and deport them.

Mr. VAILE. At pages 15 to 17 of his current report, out yesterday.

Mr. CABLE. Does not the gentleman believe that we should have a sufficient appropriation to deport these Chinese?

Mr. SHREVE. Absolutely. The Immigration Service I want to see sustained. There is no desire upon the part of this committee to rob them, but if they can use this same amount of money or less money and accomplish greater purposes in 1921, why can they not do it in 1924?

Mr. CABLE. I have read the hearings carefully, and all I could ascertain was that if they could not get this $300,000 additional they would have to quit discovering the aliens here and these thousands of Chinese and simply look after the aliens coming into the ports or seeking to come in lawfully.

Mr. SHREVE. Was that the fact in 1921, when they got along with $2,600,000?

Mr. CABLE. Was not the appropriation $3,000,000 for 1921, with $300,000 additional appropriated, and for last year $3,300,000?

Mr. SHREVE. The appropriation last year was $3,300,000.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman refers to the year 1921.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes additional?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that that was before the 3 per cent quota law was passed, and that law has entailed a lot of additional work and labor.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Chairman, just a very brief statement in answer to another question. Here is what Mr. Henning said before our committee. Mr. Gompers had called his attention to long hours. Mr. Henning said:

> Mr. Gompers has called my attention to the length of hours of immigration employees. I think the hours will average all right, although sometimes, at these big ports, they work 16 and 18 hours a day, but it is not every day, and I think they try to keep them down to the lawful hours. Our boys on the border sometimes travel all night to catch these smugglers, but we try to make it up to them by a shorter day the next day.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In 1920–21 this activity had $2,600,000.

The 3 per cent law was not then in force, so that more people came into the ports as aliens than now; a very much larger number. For 1922, including deficiencies, there were $3,086,000.

More people came in then than now. It is true they have $3,300,000 for 1923, but that was because we believed we ought to make an extraordinary appropriation to meet the new conditions for the time being, but there was no intention that this appropriation should be made permanent and that it should last forever and be increased from year to year. We are getting less people now than ever before. Why increase expenses with a smaller number? Now, we talk about the Chinese coming here and of a large number being in unlawfully, but that condition exists no longer, because they are under bond and we have perfect control over them.

Mr. VAILE. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman means those who are lawfully here are under bond?

Mr. MADDEN. All these people who come here are under bond.

Mr. VAILE. Those who come unlawfully are not.

Mr. MADDEN. If you want to prevent men from passing across the border of Mexico or Canada you will be required to put 1,000,000 men on the pay roll. Now, you can not prevent them from coming in over the border line, no matter how much you appropriate, and it is impossible to provide the means that you propose to provide. We are as much in favor of the enforcement of the law as you are, but the President of the United States is responsible for the enforcement of the law. He says he can enforce the law with $3,000,000 for 1924. That is what the President says. Does the gentleman deny it? That is all he asks, and we ought not to give him more.

Mr. SIEGEL. I want to read——

Mr. MADDEN. Let him assume the responsibility for the enforcement of the law with the amount of money he asks and which we give.

Mr. SIEGEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will yield.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Henning, page 307——

Mr. MADDEN. I am talking about the President of the United States.

Mr. SIEGEL. I am talking about the man who is in charge of this work.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Likewise the President of the United States says he is going to see that the prohibition laws are enforced, but they are not enforced.

Mr. MADDEN. He has the responsibility, it rests with him. Failure to enforce the law will be placed upon his shoulders and not upon ours.

Mr. CABLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. But when we give the President every dollar he asks we are to assume that he knows what he is asking and why he is asking it, and when he says he can enforce the law with a given sum, why do we want to force him to take more out of the Treasury of the United States. I submit the question on the President's request with the full understanding on my part that I am willing for him to assume the responsibility.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MADDEN) there were—ayes 52, noes 30.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For refund to collector of customs, Los Angeles, Calif., for payment to Manuel Abarca of passage money deposited by the agents of the Mexican State Line, Los Angeles, Calif., on account of the alien Manuel Abarca, $66.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question, if I may have the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee. I notice some provisions for refund of fines deposited by steamship companies. Was there any information given to the committee of the amount of fines collected from the steamship companies during the course of the last fiscal year for violations of the immigration laws in the bringing in of immigrants who were not entitled to come in?

Mr. SHREVE. I think there is nothing in the record as to how much that amounted to, but I think it amounted to a considerable sum, $2,900,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Most of these fines which are imposed on the steamship companies are due to some port irregularity. They must deposit the amount of the fine when it is imposed. The case is tried later, and the money is refunded; but it must be appropriated for. If it is found on the trial of the case there was no such irregularity, and the fine has been imposed, this appropriation will take the money out of the Treasury which they have put in and which ought not to have been imposed.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. These are to correct mistakes?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; but there is no way of accomplishing the purpose until there is an authorization of Congress.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. And this is a bookkeeping proposition and could not be handled in any other way? I understand the amount for the last fiscal year was something like $2,900,000?

Mr. SHREVE. That seems to be our record.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a pro forma amendment. I do this for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee if the appropriation of $4,200,000 for lighthouses and other aids to navigation, found on page 29, will be ample to provide $5,500 for four gas buoys for the Toledo Channel? The field men have estimated the cost of these buoys at $5,500.

Mr. SHREVE. I am satisfied that the provision in the bill in reference to lighthouses will take care of all the aids to navigation, say some 16,000, all told.

Mr. CHALMERS. I thank the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee for this assurance. I wanted to get this statement in the RECORD.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 13316) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. MADDEN. I ask for a separate vote, Mr. Speaker, on the item of $300,000 additional for the regulation of immigration.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will submit them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the other amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CABLE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CABLE: Line 2, page 48, after the word "Labor," strike out "$3,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,300,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 25.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on account of the lack of a quorum. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects to the vote on account of there not being a quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 138, nays 81, not voting 211, as follows:

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

825. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, with a letter from the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the War Department, Panama Canal, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, for civil government, Panama Canal and Canal Zone, $75,200 (H. Doc. No. 499); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

826. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, with a letter from the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, for repairs to the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater and Chapel, $35,000 (H. Doc. No. 500); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

827. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting request for an amendment to the naval appropriation bill for 1924, which will allow the department to confirm enlisted men in the lowest ratings without the necessity of requiring them to undergo three months' active service; to the Committee on Naval Affairs and Appropriations.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 13374) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes; committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

By Mr. BRENNAN: A bill (H. R. 13375) supplemental to the national prohibition act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Whereas the farmers of the United States have been traditionally opposed to the granting of such subsidies; and

MEMORIAL BRIDGE ACROSS DELAWARE RIVER.

Mr. CALDER. I report back favorably with amendments from the Committee on Commerce the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 240) providing for the construction of a memorial bridge across the Delaware River at the point where Washington and his troops crossed said stream on the night of December 25 and the day of December 26, 1776.

The amendment to the joint resolution was, on page 3, line 5, after the numerals "1926" and before the period, to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That the bridge shall be so located and built as not to unreasonably obstruct navigation, and to secure this object the structure shall not be commenced until the plans and location have been approved by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers.

So as to make the joint resolution read:

Whereas on the night of December 25 and the day of the 26th, 1776, Washington crossed the Delaware and won the Battle of Trenton, and as December 25 and 26, 1926, will be the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of this significant event in the Revolutionary struggle for the cause of liberty, and as there has meanwhile been no fitting memorial erected at this spot; and

Whereas the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania have commenced the establishment of suitable historical parks on the two sides of the Delaware River and have developed a plan which contemplates connecting these parks by a memorial bridge which will be composed of 13 sections which will suitably commemorate the part performed by each of the Colonies; and

Whereas the other Colonies share equally with New Jersey and Pennsylvania in the glory and benefits of this notable Revolutionary victory; and

Whereas it is estimated that the memorial bridge will require the expenditure of $800,000; and

Whereas it is proposed that the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania shall each contribute one-quarter of this sum: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That Congress hereby indorses the foregoing project and hereby appropriates, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $400,000 toward the construction of a memorial bridge across the Delaware River at the point where Washington and his troops crossed the said stream on the night of December 25 and the day of December 26, 1776, the above sum to be available in four equal parts during the intervening years to secure the completion of the bridge prior to December 26, 1926.

SEC. 2. That a National Washington Crossing Commission be, and is hereby, authorized, to consist of 15 members, 5 to be appointed by the President of the United States, and 5 each by the Governors of the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania, with full powers to develop the plans and proceed with their completion and execution and with instructions to use all reasonable expedition so that the work may be finished and ready for dedication on December 26, 1926: Provided, That the bridge shall be so located, etc.

The following bill and joint resolution were each read twice by title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 408) authorizing payment of the salaries of the officers and employees of Congress for December, 1922, on the 20th day of that month.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND JUSTICE.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13232) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think we ought to have a quorum. There are a number of Senators absent who are interested in the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. I was going to ask for a quorum after we got the bill up for consideration.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to that course.

Mr. ROBINSON. If there is to be a quorum call, I suggest that that action be taken before the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the bill, so that Senators who are not now present may have an opportunity to object to the consideration of the bill if they see proper to do so. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Lodge	Simmons
Ball	George	McCumber	Smoot
Bayard	Glass	McKellar	Spencer
Borah	Gooding	McKinley	Sterling
Brandegee	Harreld	McNary	Sutherland
Cameron	Harris	Nelson	Trammell
Capper	Harrison	New	Underwood
Colt	Heflin	Nicholson	Wadsworth
Couzens	Johnson	Norris	Walsh, Mass.
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Warren
Cummins	Kellogg	Page	Weller
Curtis	Kendrick	Phipps	Williams
Dial	Keyes	Reed, Pa.

Ernst	Lenroot	Sheppard

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the absence on official business of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART].

I was also requested to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] is necessarily absent because of illness in his family.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] has asked unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 13282, making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be considered first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 14, line 9, to increase the appropriation for post allowances to diplomatic and consular officers from $150,000 to $200,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, this amendment carries an increase of $50,000 over the appropriation authorized by the House of Representatives. I think the Senator in charge of the bill should make an explanation of the necessity for the increase.

Mr. CURTIS. There was a very full and complete hearing before the House Committee and also before the Senate Committee in reference to the matter. After hearing the Secretary of State, in view of the fact that there was an appropriation for this purpose last year of $200,000, the demands upon which were so great that there may be a deficit reported, and inasmuch as $200,000 were estimated by the department for this year and that estimate was allowed after careful consideration by the Budget Bureau, and as the official who appeared before the committee stated that it would be impossible to get along without the $200,000, the subcommittee recommended to the full committee that amount; and the full committee, after considering the matter very carefully, also recommended the increase.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the provision is somewhat exceptional in character. It reads as follows:

> To enable the President, in his discretion, and in accordance with such regulations as he may prescribe, to make special allowances by way of additional compensation to diplomatic and consular officers and consular assistants and officers of the United States Court for China in order to adjust their official income to the ascertained cost of living at the posts to which they may be assigned.

As the committee proposes the sum of $200,000 is fixed, while as passed by the House of Representatives $150,000 were allowed. This provision, if enacted into law, would give the President unlimited authority within the amount of the appropriation to fix salaries. I wonder why the committee did not go into the matter in detail and adjust the salaries and specify them in the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. Just a moment. The practice of fixing salaries by Executive regulation and Executive discretion is, on the whole, not to be approved. It adds a very difficult burden to the Executive and one which, under the Constitution and practice which have heretofore prevailed, has not ordinarily been imposed on the executive department. The responsibility is upon Congress, under the Constitution, to safeguard all expenditures necessarily imposing burdens in the form of taxation upon the people of the country; and I apprehend that any Chief Executive of the Nation would much prefer that Congress should discharge its functions and fix salaries and make the appropriations which are necessary in order to meet the obligations thus imposed upon the Government.

When the Executive enters into the field of fixing salaries he is necessarily exposed to pressure and to influence from those who feel that their salaries ought to be increased; and experience has shown that practically every employee of the Government, both at home and abroad, has found justification, not to say necessity, for an increase in the compensation which he is receiving from the Government. That condition grows out of circumstances with which we are all familiar; some justification, in fact, exists for it; but I am curious to know why the Congress finds it necessary to adopt what appears to be the permanent policy in regard to the matter of at least from year to year requiring the Executive to adjust salaries and of providing a lump sum of $200,000 for that purpose. Now I yield with pleasure to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to state that I agree fully with the Senator from Arkansas, and as chairman of the subcommittee having charge of this bill I gave the matter very careful consideration, hoping that we might return to the old method of fixing salaries, and that conditions might be such that we could readily do so. This policy, however, as the Senator from Arkansas well knows, was adopted because of the war and of conditions growing out of the war. In many foreign countries those conditions still exist. The showing before the committee was very strong that in a number of cases it was utterly impossible for the Government officials to live on the salary which was provided. Allowances under this fund are only made after careful investigation and upon the recommendation of the State Department.

I wish to state to the Senator that if I shall remain chairman of the subcommittee having charge of this bill, just as soon as conditions are such that we may do so, I shall recommend to the subcommittee and the full committee that the salaries of these officials be fixed and that this item shall be eliminated from the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say, in addition to what has been stated by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], that the conditions sought to be covered by the amendment arose, first, on account of the difference in the exchange values of money in foreign countries, where the fluctuations were frequent and where the cost of living mounted so high that nobody ever anticipated or could anticipate it. It is a temporary matter. If those countries ever get back to normal conditions it will not be necessary to increase the salaries of our officials who are stationed there, but at the present time, under conditions existing in the world, many of our diplomatic and consular officials can not live on the salaries which are regularly appropriated for them in the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let me inquire of the Senator from Utah if he sees an early prospect of the stabilization of exchange, particularly in relation to the countries to which he refers?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I can not say how soon that will happen or how soon conditions will right themselves; and no other human being can do so.

It does seem to me, however, that it would be better now to adopt the method proposed in the bill of meeting these unheard-of and heretofore unknown conditions than to try to fix rigidly the salaries of our officials in various foreign countries, though it may later be possible to do so.

Mr. CURTIS. May I make a suggestion right there?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. In view of the showing which was made, I think it is perfectly evident that the State Department is trying to have the appropriation which they are allowed for this purpose reduced just as fast as possible. For instance, there was appropriated for this purpose in 1919 the sum of $700,000; in 1920 there was appropriated $600,000; in 1921 there was also appropriated $600,000; in 1922 there was appropriated $250,000; and this year the department is only asking $200,000 for this purpose.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I presume the hearings will disclose in detail the manner in which this fund is disbursed by the Executive. Of course, we all know that the President himself can not give any attention whatever to the disbursement of a fund of this nature. It would be interesting to know just exactly how the adjustment of allowances out of this fund are made, upon what evidence and through what influences. In order that Senators who desire to do so may have an opportunity of looking into the record and ascertaining a little more definitely the facts, I ask that for the present the item be passed over and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of other amendments.

Mr. CURTIS. There is no objection to that. I may say to the Senator that the matter is discussed on pages 14 and 58 of the House hearings.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 15, line 15, to strike out "$25,913.50" and insert "$15,000," so as to read:

> To enable the President to perform the obligations of the United States under the treaties of 1884, 1889, 1905, and 1906 between the United States and Mexico, including not to exceed $900 for rent, $15,000.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, I should like to reserve the right to offer an amendment to that amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. As I understand, the amendment which the Senator desires to offer is to the proviso.

Mr. CAMERON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CURTIS. If it is desired I have no objection to passing over the committee amendment until the other amendments shall have been concluded. Then the Senator may offer his amendment.

Mr. CAMERON. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 20, line 2, to increase the appropriation for the expenses of the arbitration of outstanding pecuniary claims between the United States and Great Britain, from $60,000 to $66,370.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 13, to increase the appropriation for furniture and repairs, contingent expenses, Department of Justice, from $6,000 to $6,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 8, to increase the appropriation for miscellaneous expenditures, contingent expenses, Department of Justice, from $40,000 to $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 2, to increase the appropriation for defending suits in claims against the United States from $60,000 to $65,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the Department of Justice, on page 31, line 14, after the word "duties," to strike out the additional proviso in the following words:

Provided further, That the automobile purchased from the appropriation for detection and prosecution of crimes for the fiscal year 1923 shall hereafter be under the exclusive control of the Director of the Bureau of Investigation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, let us have an explanation from the Senator in charge of the bill of the purpose of that amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. There was nothing in the hearings on the item, and when the committee found the clause in the bill it was as much surprised, I think, as was the Senator from Arkansas. All the property of the Department of Justice is under the control of the Attorney General, but this item took from his control a motor vehicle and put it exclusively under the control and direction of the chief investigating officer.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is Mr. William J. Burns?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes. Why the House put it in, of course I can not say, but the committee thought, as all the property now used by the Department of Justice is under the control of the Attorney General, that this proviso ought to be stricken out, and that the department ought to be able to make proper disposition of the vehicle.

Mr. ROBINSON. I apprehend that there was some mysterious, not to say secret, purpose as the provision was originally inserted, but, that reason not being disclosed, I am unable to offer any resistance to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 31, line 22, to increase the appropriation for enforcement of antitrust laws from $200,000 to $230,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for Territorial courts, on page 37, line 23, to increase the appropriation for salaries, fees, and expenses of United States marshals and their deputies from $2,275,000 to $2,300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 14, to increase the appropriation for salaries of United States district attorneys and expenses of district attorneys and their regular assistants from $900,000 to $950,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 3, to increase the appropriations for salaries of clerks of circuit courts of appeals and district courts, their deputies, and other assistants, from $1,400,000 to $1,450,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 5, to increase the appropriation for bailiffs and criers from $275,000 to $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 11, to increase the appropriation for miscellaneous expenses, Department of Justice, from $650,000 to $700,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I understand that completes the committee amendments.

Mr. CURTIS. There are two amendments which have been passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the first amendment passed over.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the item under the heading "Post allowances for diplomatic and consular officers," on page 14, line 9, after the word "assigned" it is proposed to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$200,000."

Mr. ROBINSON. Let that be passed over for the present and proceed with other amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be further passed over in the absence of objection. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Under the heading "International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico" on page 15, line 15, it is proposed to strike out "$25,913.50" and to insert "$15,000."

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, that is an item that was passed over upon the suggestion of my colleague [Mr. CAMERON]. I inquire of my colleague if he is ready at this time to take up the matter?

Mr. CAMERON. I am ready, right now. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senate on page 15, line 15, to disagree to the Senate amendment, and strike out all after "$25,913.50" down to and including the word "commission" in line 20.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona has stated two separate amendments.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if my colleague will yield to me, if I understand aright, he has moved to strike out on page 15, commencing with line 15, the word "Provided" on said line 15, and all of lines 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20. Am I correctly advised?

Mr. CAMERON. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I hope that motion will prevail; if my colleague will yield to me——

Mr. CAMERON. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. I believe a point of order will lie against that language. Therefore I make the following point of order—that the committee in violation of clauses 1, 2, and 3 of Rule XVI, has added new legislation.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. I think when the Senator realizes that this is an item that was put in in the House, he will see that a point of order will not lie against it in the Senate. The only thing we can do is to pass upon the amendment, and either agree to it or reject it.

Mr. ASHURST. If this language was inserted by the House I am of opinion that a point of order would not lie. The Mexican border is 1,400 miles long. I need not now recite any of the turbulent history of the Mexican border. We are striving for peace and friendship with our southern neighbor—Mexico. She is on her feet; her commerce is entering into the markets of the world. She is tranquil and orderly. By treaty with Mexico, executed on March 1, 1889, there was created the International Boundary Commission, and it was agreed that the United States and Mexico should each have and appoint one commissioner, one consulting engineer, and one secretary, but this bill refuses to appropriate money with which to pay the salary of the consulting engineer to be appointed by the United States. I admit that Congress can repeal a treaty, but here, with no explanation, this bill attempts to dislocate and disregard that part of the treaty by which we agreed to maintain a consulting engineer. The problems of the Mexican border are of dignity and importance to this country.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator to say we do not furnish a consulting engineer?

Mr. ASHURST. The language on line 16 says:

Provided, That none of this appropriation shall be used to pay the salary of a consulting engineer.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; and then it goes on to provide for one. The treaty does not say that we must furnish a consulting engineer who is not an officer of the Army. It does not say how he shall be furnished or paid.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct.

Mr. LODGE. We furnish a consulting engineer, but we furnish an Army engineer. That is our business, since the treaty does not provide how he shall be furnished.

Mr. ASHURST. We can, of course, select some Army officer. The problems of the Mexican boundary are of importance and while I commend all efforts at retrenchment and reform this border treaty should be observed. We do not want a consulting engineer who will ruffle the papers and pass on to some other subject.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, we can appoint anybody we choose as consulting engineer under that treaty. If we choose to appoint an Army engineer we have a perfect right to do it under the treaty, and we are doing it in this provision. It does not concern Mexico the least in the world.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator please explain why it is now necessary that the office should be practically abolished, and an Army engineer designated?

Mr. LODGE. The object, of course, is to save the engineer's salary.

Mr. ASHURST. To save the engineer's salary?

Mr. LODGE. Why, of course, and to have the duties performed by one of our Army engineers. There are no better engineers in the world.

Mr. ASHURST. In other words, the Mexican border or 1,400 miles, must be content to be served by a man who acts without salary for that particular duty.

Mr. LODGE. It would not make any difference if it was 14,000 miles long.

Mr. ASHURST. Fourteen hundred miles long; not 14,000.

Mr. LODGE. I say it does not make any difference whether it is 1,400 or 14,000 or 14. The point is that in carrying out the treaty we are required to furnish a consulting engineer, and we do. We do not need to have another one and pay him a salary.

Mr. ASHURST. We do not want the sort of man who is willing to serve without compensation.

Mr. LODGE. Does not the Senator think that any competent consulting engineer can be found except a civilian at a high salary? The Army engineers built the Panama Canal.

Mr. ASHURST. Very true.

Mr. LODGE. It has nothing to do with the treaty. It is a matter for us to settle.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, we can probably settle this. As far as I can, being in charge of the bill, I will accept an amendment, which I think will be agreed to, to strike out "$15,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$20,000," and to strike out the balance of the paragraph from the word "Provided" in line 15 to the word "commission" in line 20.

Mr. CAMERON. I will accept that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the committee amendment on page 15, line 15, it is proposed to amend, in lieu of the sum proposed to be inserted by the committee, "$15,000," by inserting "$20,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is also proposed to strike out the provisos beginning on line 15 after the numerals "$20,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Arkansas is not ready to take up the committee amendment that was passed over, we can pass it over again and take up individual amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggested that a moment ago.

Mr. CURTIS. I was authorized by the committee to propose two amendments. I should like to offer them, if I may.

I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 45, after line 18, it is proposed to insert the following paragraph:

For construction of physician's residence, $4,000.

And to change the total in line 19 by striking out "$659,000" and inserting "$663,000."

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Page 44, after line 18.

Mr. CURTIS. I will state to the Senator that that is to build an official residence. There are some 2,700 prisoners there, and there are no accommodations for the physician on the grounds. He has to live in town and pay his own rent, and the street cars are not run at night, and with 2,700 inmates they frequently have illness at night that requires the attendance of a physician, and it is almost impossible to get him. This was recommended by the department and recommended by the Budget, and was left out by the House. I should like to put it in and take it to conference.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well. I see no objection to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. On the part of the committee I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 38, line 7, after the word "subsistence," it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided further, That the Postmaster General or the coordinator of the General Supply Committee is authorized and directed, upon the approval of this act, if available, to deliver to the office of the United States marshal of the District of Columbia, without payment therefor, two passenger-carrying motor cycles.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, as it is understood that there is only one committee amendment pending, I ask that that be passed over until we dispose of the other amendments.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Secretary will read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 13, after line 7, insert:

To Leonore M. Sorsby, daughter and only child of William B. Sorsby, late envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Bolivia, the sum of $4,200 as reimbursement for extraordinary expenses incurred for medical attendance, nurses, hospital treatment, and transportation to the United States following a stroke of paralysis suffered by said William B. Sorsby at his post of duty, La Paz, Bolivia, from which he remained wholly disabled until his death.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, this amendment was added by the Senate to the deficiency appropriation bill last summer. It was stricken out in conference, but it has since been submitted to the House Committee on Appropriations and approved by them. It was omitted from this bill by an oversight, I am told. It has also been submitted to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, and I understand that it is satisfactory to them.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, this item was added on the deficiency appropriation bill at a former session, which bill I did not have charge of, and I have not had time to look into it. I am perfectly willing, so far as I am personally concerned, to accept the amendment and let it go to conference and then look into it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I merely want to suggest that from the reading of the provision as submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania it appears to be in the nature of a claim, and under the practice of the Senate such provisions usually have gone to the Committee on Claims. That observation would appear at first thought to have additional force in view of the new rule adopted by the Senate. There is a question, on the line of the proposal of the Senator from Pennsylvania, as to the authorization of this sum. It may be that no serious question is involved; nevertheless, the new rule of the Senate segregates authorizations from appropriations, and contemplates that the Committee on Appropriations shall confine its action to allowances of sums already investigated by other committees and authorized by act of Congress.

I do not want to put myself in the attitude of opposing the provision offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania if the Senator in charge of the bill states that the committee has investigated it and is satisfied that it should be included.

Mr. CURTIS. It was added to the deficiency bill of the previous session of Congress. I was not on the subcommittee in charge of that bill, and I do not know about it.

Mr. ROBINSON. It was added to that bill?

Mr. CURTIS. It was.

Mr. WARREN. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. How is it that it is necessary to add it to this bill then?

Mr. CURTIS. It was stricken out in conference.

Mr. ROBINSON. That would seem to indicate that there is necessity for an authorization. If an Appropriation Committee once incorporated the item in a bill, and it went out in conference, it would seem to call for an investigation.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Pennsylvania stated a moment ago that the matter had been presented to the House, and that certain members of the committee said that it had been left out of the bill by mistake; that they had intended to take it up, but had not done so. With that understanding, I thought we could let the provision go into the bill and take it into conference.

Mr. ROBINSON. How does the Senator escape the effect of the rule which he so boldly and courageously championed and had the Senate adopt some time ago? Does the Senator intend now to commence the policy of relaxing that rule in cases the merit of which appeals to him, and of enforcing the rule in other cases where the merit does not appeal to him?

Mr. CURTIS. I have not passed on the merits of this matter, and I did not raise the point of order for the reason——

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator knows that if he permits this provision to go into the bill without invoking the rule it will be a relaxation of the rule.

Mr. CURTIS. I fully realize that a point of order would lie against the amendment, and the Senator from Kansas did not raise the point of order simply because the item had gone through the Senate at a former session of Congress. I felt that as the Senate had accepted it then, I would hardly be justified in raising the point of order at this time. It is a claim, I think, and I believe it is subject to a point of order, but personally I do not care to raise it without knowing the facts.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator has given me the information I asked for. He now announces the policy of declining to invoke points of order under the new rule of the Senate in cases wherein he is satisfied merit exists.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I did not say that. I said I knew nothing about the merits of this case. I should have stated further that in the session of Congress preceding the last and in a number of Congresses——

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator, of course, realizes that what happened in the Senate has no relationship to the rule of the Senate which denies to the committee the right to report an item of this nature.

Mr. CURTIS. But this item was not reported from our committee; it is offered upon the floor, and——

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand that fully.

Mr. CURTIS. Any Senator can make a point of order against it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Will the Senators permit me to explain my view of my own amendment? I do not think it is a claim. It is a gratuity, which has already been submitted to and approved by the Committee on Foreign Relations. If it were a claim, properly it should go to the Committee on Claims, but it is a gratuity, exactly of the same sort as those provided for in the paragraph which precedes the point at which I propose to insert this amendment.

Mr. SMITH. May I ask the Senator under what conditions did it fail to become a part of the bill in the House?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It was passed upon by the Senate last summer in the deficiency appropriation bill. This claim should have been presented by one of the Representatives from Pennsylvania in the Appropriations Committee of the House. He was unable to be there in time; the bill moved with a great deal of speed, and while the committee had already passed upon the merits of the claim, as I understand it, it had not the item called to its attention before the bill was reported out of the committee in the House. It is an entirely meritorious case.

Mr. SMITH. So the House did not reject it; it just did not have the subject matter under consideration?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is exactly the case.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to say a single word at this point. This is not a claim; as the Senator from Pennsylvania has said, it is in the nature of a gratuity. A point of order undoubtedly would lie on the ground that it was not estimated for; but it has been the practice, where ministers and consuls have died at their posts of duty, to insert provisions in the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill giving their representatives six months' salary. It has been done repeatedly by the Senate, and this I take to be a precisely similar case. Undoubtedly it would be put out on a point of order, but I think it is a very deserving case. It was before my committee.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I desire to say, as I stated in the beginning, that I do not elect to make the point of order. I merely wanted to define the practice of the Committee on Appropriations touching such matters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I ask to have read at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 12, line 17, after the figures "$300,000," insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be paid for transportation on foreign vessels without a certificate from the Secretary of State that there are no American vessels on which such officers and clerks may be transported.

Mr. CURTIS. I am willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then I will not say what I was about to say in regard to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, lines 3 and 4, strike out the words "counselor for the department," and insert in lieu thereof the words "Undersecretary of State."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There remains to be acted upon the first committee amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 36, after line 6, insert the following paragraph:

For printing and binding for the Court of Claims, $35,000.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senate for a minute, there is really no money involved in this amendment, because should the amendment be adopted it will be necessary to strike $35,000 out of the bill in another place. It is only that I stand for maintaining the action of the judiciary independent from the executive departments.

If Senators will turn to page 33 they will see the appropriations in the bill for the salaries, and so forth, for the Supreme Court, from lines 14 to 19. Then, on line 20, they will see, "for printing and binding for the Supreme Court of the United States, $21,000," and then there is a provision for some other printing and binding.

If Senators will turn to page 35 they will find the provision for the salaries of the Court of Claims, and heretofore there has always been a provision for the printing and binding for the Court of Claims, but the committee at this time have stricken out the provision for printing and binding for the Court of Claims, where it was controlled by the Court of Claims, and have inserted it under the Department of Justice.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator, of course, means that that was done in the House and that the committee of the Senate agreed to it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course; it is a House provision. If it were a Senate committee provision, I think it might be subject to a point of order and I would make the point, because it is a change of existing law without being reported by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

The Committee on Appropriations is now proceeding to change existing law, but as it was changed in the House of Representatives and came over here tied in the bill by the House of Representatives, I can not make the point of order. All I am saying is that the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate have agreed to it.

Mr. President, there is not a dollar involved. Of course, if this amendment of mine is adopted, then I have no doubt the committee will go back to the item making appropriations for the Department of Justice and strike $35,000 from that appropriation.

I do not understand why Senators of the United States insist that one of the great courts of this land, the court of the people of the United States, shall be treated as a side show to some other institution.

Except for the limited jurisdiction of the district courts, into which the people may go for small claims, the people of the United States have only one court in this land that belongs to them, and that is the Court of Claims. The Government can not be sued except by its consent, and we have set up the Court of Claims in order that citizens of the United States who have claims against the Government may go into that court and establish their claims. It is the court of the people of the United States, and it should be respected and treated as such. It is not a side show for the Department of Justice to determine whether it will allow claims or not. It is a court, and the plaintiff in that court is entitled to as much recognition and standing as the defendant, the Government of the United States.

I realize that those who desire to make the change say that it does not mean anything; that all the printing and binding to be done by the Court of Claims would be promptly O. K'd by a subordinate clerk in the Department of Justice whenever the clerk of the Court of Claims sent down what the court wanted done in the way of printing and binding, and I have no doubt probably in most cases it would be done. But the great delay in this court does not come from the court itself. It is not that the court does not dispatch its business. The court itself is up with its business. The trouble in the Court of Claims is that the Department of Justice does not prepare its cases. The delays occur in that branch of the Department of Justice which handles claims.

Whenever a case is submitted to the court, it is decided by the court in a few weeks, but the delays the people of the United States have in the Court of Claims come from the Department of Justice itself in preparing the cases ready for submission to the court. How can a case be prepared unless there are printed the briefs and testimony and the other necessary printing required by the court? I am not going to charge that the Department of Justice would delay the consideration of a case or that the Attorney General and the men who control the Department of Justice would delay the trial of a case by postponing the printing; but the Attorney General and his assistants and those high up would have very little to do with it, and when somebody got pressed in the preparation of a claim it would be easy to have a subordinate of the Department of Justice question the printing bill.

It is said that that would not be done. Well, it might not be done, but this is an independent court. One might as well say that the Department of Justice shall determine when the crier shall report and open the court as to say that the judges themselves can not determine when their printing bills shall be paid.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Alabama what economy would be worked by any such indirect procedure or what expedition of business would be brought about by it?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is no economy that I know of, because I understand it was said in the hearings that $35,000 would be paid out whenever the clerk of the Court of Claims asked the Department of Justice for it. If the amendment which I have proposed is agreed to they can not ask for more than $35,000. If there was going to be any economy outside of that limitation by law, the Attorney General could tell the Court of Claims that they could not print his brief. That is all there is to it.

There is no economy that is proposed to come out of the proposition, because all the printing goes to the Public Printer, and costs exactly the same. It is just a question of the Department of Justice viséing the right of the Court of Claims to act. That is all there is in the matter. It is a reflection on the judiciary of the land. It is an attempt to give an executive department of the Government the right to control the functions of one of the great judicial courts of the land, and I say it is wrong; it is improper; and it means in the end no economy.

Suppose it did mean two or three thousand dollars economy, which it will not; are we going to invade the jurisdiction of the court, its right and standing before the community as an independent court, for the purpose of saving two or three thousand dollars, when it will not really save a cent if a statement in the testimony coming from the Department of Justice is correct that they are not going to visé it? On the other hand, if they do visé the question then the judges of the court would have to go with bated breath and ask one of the litigants in the court whether they could print the testimony in order that the other litigants might proceed to business. That is what is proposed, and it is in my opinion entirely without justification.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the Senate ought to know the reason why the House pursues this policy and intends to do it in the future, if, of course, the Senate agrees. Every appropriation bill hereafter will have but one item for printing under a department. In the past every bureau and every division of every department and every independent establishment in the Government has had a separate item for printing in the appropriation bills. They have spent the money for printing in their own way. There has been no special estimate made for it other than simply the amount that they desired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does not the Senator draw any distinction between the bureaus of a department under an executive head of the Government and a court that is independent of the executive departments?

Mr. SMOOT. I will come to that in a moment. The only change from that policy that has been adopted by the Budget or placed in an appropriation bill for the maintenance of the departments was in the item for the printing for the Supreme Court of the United States. I see no objection at all to giving $35,000 to the Court of Claims. It will not make one penny of difference. It is only a question of having a direct appropriation for the Court of Claims the same as is made for the Supreme Court of the United States. It would be taken off the item of $200,000 appropriated for the printing for the Department of Justice.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with the Senator; I do not think it will effect a dollar's difference in the Treasury; but why should we make the Court of Claims go with hat off and humble knee to the Department of Justice and ask if they can proceed to business? There is no reason in the world for it.

Mr. SMOOT. The estimate was made by the Budget Committee just as the bill carries it now. In the amount of $200,000 provided for printing in the Department of Justice one of the items—and there are about 20 or 25 of them—was $35,000 for the Court of Claims. The House made the appropriation in conformity with the Budget report. I do not think there will be any hesitancy on the part of the House in agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, but there was the idea in view that we could turn to an appropriation bill at any time in the future and by looking at one item of printing tell what was the amount of money that had been appropriated for the printing for that department. That is all there is to it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Right there, if the Senator will allow me, is where I object. The Senator spoke of the appropriation for printing for the department, but I insist that the Court of Claims is no more a part of the Department of Justice than is the Supreme Court of the United States, and it ought not to be considered as a part of that department.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator could say that of every independent establishment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; the Constitution of the United States recognizes the distinction between the executive departments of the Government and the judicial departments of the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. I realize that, but that is not what I meant.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The court is set up to protect the people of the United States in the presentation of their claims. I seriously object to the Department of Justice having any hand in controlling its action.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the Department of Justice would never do it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Probably it would not, but it ought not to be allowed to have the opportunity to do it even on paper.

Mr. SMOOT. It is a mere formality, and that is all.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I wish to state that what influenced me in the matter was the fact that the estimates for the Court of Claims have been going to the Treasury Department and the Bureau of the Budget, since that bureau was organized, through the Attorney General's office, and it was the idea of the Bureau of the Budget, I understand, to get the items affecting the same class of work into one appropriation. For that reason this item was put in with the others. There was no intention to revise or change the practice that has always been followed, and, as I have showed to the Senator from Alabama in the hearings on page 196, it was stated that it was not the intention in any way to try to control the printing of the court. I will state that so far as I am concerned, as the Senator in charge of the bill, I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Is the matter now to come to a vote?

Mr. CURTIS. I said that so far as I am concerned, I am willing to accept the amendment, and I hope there will be no objection raised to it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I simply desire to express my hope that the amendment will be agreed to. There is absolutely no economy in the way the bill reports these appropriations. On the other hand, it will incur an additional expense. If, as the witness testified in the House hearings, the Department of Justice does not intend to control the expenditures of the Court of Claims, then the question simply involves the additional expense of having some clerk in the Department of Justice O. K. the vouchers which may be presented by the Court of Claims.

I certainly agree with everything the Senator from Alabama has said. The clerk of the Court of Claims came before the Committee on Appropriations yesterday and protested vigorously against the arrangement which was made in the bill as it passed the House. Of course, I shall take up no further time if the Senator in charge of the bill is willing to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. In view of the amendment just agreed to, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 28, line 21, strike out "$200,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$165,000," so as to read:

For printing and binding for the Department of Justice and the courts of the United States, $165,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. In order to correct a clerical error in the printing of the bill I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 34 it is proposed to strike out line 20 and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Porto Rico: District judge, $7,500.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I think that is not really an amendment, but is merely to correct a mistake in printing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The correction will be made.

Mr. LODGE. I have an amendment which I desire to offer to come in on page 6, line 16.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 6, line 16, after the word "citizens," it is proposed to insert the words "whenever hereafter appointed."

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to have the Senator from Massachusetts explain that amendment and what it proposes to do.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the case is a very simple one. The provision in the bill, which is a very proper one, indeed, requiring the clerks to be Americans and to be appointed under civil-service rules and regulations, will compel the dismissal of five valuable foreign clerks who have served this Government for many years in the missions at Berlin, Berne, Madrid, Buenos Aires, and Quito, and to whom it would work great hardship. My amendment is proposed simply for the purpose of permitting those clerks to be retained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the committee amendment which was passed over.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee amendment passed over is on page 14, line 9, after the word "assigned," to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$200,000," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the President, in his discretion, and in accordance with such regulations as he may prescribe, to make special allowances by way of additional compensation to diplomatic and consular officers and consular assistants and officers of the United States Court for China in order to adjust their official income to the ascertained cost of living at the posts to which they may be assigned, $200,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, since this amendment was before the Senate I have taken occasion to read all of the testimony which is available in justification of the appropriation. I shall not now repeat the suggestion made when the item was previously before the Senate relative to the policy involved in lump-sum appropriations and the fixing of official salaries by the Executive. That policy is condemned by both the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. Their statements, however, in justification of this proposed increase are much more persuasive than is the testimony in the record; and yet I apprehend that their information is derived exclusively from the record.

Mr. CURTIS. No, Mr. President; I thought I stated to the Senator that upon yesterday we sent for Mr. Carr, who is in charge of this work, and heard him very fully before our committee, and the subcommittee, Republicans and Democrats alike, after hearing him fully were unanimously of the opinion that this increase ought to be made.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator from Kansas made that statement, I did not hear it.

Mr. CURTIS. I intended to make it, and I thought I had made it.

Mr. ROBINSON. In any event, the hearings before the Senate committee are not available for the consideration of the Senate. The testimony submitted before the House committee is found at pages 14 and 15 and 53 and 56, inclusive, of the House hearings on the bill. The justification for Executive increases of these salaries is principally based upon the condition of foreign exchange in the countries where these Government representatives live. My understanding has been that, as a rule, a depreciation of foreign money operates to diminish the cost of living of persons who are paid in United States money. I know that is true in Germany, where the mark has a very low value compared with its normal value, and I have found that to be true in other foreign countries where the money of the foreign government involved is depreciated as compared with American money. So the depreciation of foreign exchange would give the American representative who is paid in United States money an advantage in the matter of the cost of living and instead of being a justification for an increase in salary might, under some circumstances, be accepted as a justification for a diminution of salaries.

The statement of Mr. Carr is, however, exceedingly indefinite. I do not understand why some committee of the Senate or of the other House, intrusted with the consideration of the matter, has not asked for an itemized statement of the expenditure of the fund during previous years. An itemized statement of the expenditure would give definite information as to how the executive authorities have adjusted the compensation of these various employees.

The information that is furnished the Senate in the hearings before the House committee—and I have had no opportunity of seeing the hearings before the Senate committee; those hearings were held only on yesterday and I presume have not yet been printed—the information that is available is of the most general character. It is so indefinite as to affect only the conclusions of the witness rather than the facts upon which the witness reached his conclusions. All Senators know the value of definite and detailed information in so far as the same may be calculated to affect the expenditure of Government money.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I have not had time to go over the statement and itemize it, but we have a statement showing the allowances made and the officials to whom they were made. I suppose it was not printed in the report because it is in the Budget.

Mr. ROBINSON. But the Budget was not followed by either committee.

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; the Budget was followed by the Senate committee; we followed the estimate of the Budget.

Mr. ROBINSON. Did either the House committee or the Senate committee follow the estimate of the Budget?

Mr. CURTIS. The Senate committee did, but the House committee reduced the estimate by $50,000. The Senate committee increased the appropriation by the House $50,000 and put it back to the Budget recommendation.

Mr. ROBINSON. What was the amount appropriated last year?

Mr. CURTIS. It was $200,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. And the amount requested by the department was $200,000 this year?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; and the amount recommended by the Budget this year is $200,000, which is the sum the Senate committee allowed.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senate committee followed the Budget but the House committee declined to follow the Budget and recommended a reduction of the amount by $50,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is it the contention that the cost of living is increased because of high exchange rates?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; as to certain countries.

Mr. CARAWAY. As to what countries?

Mr. SMOOT. China is one country where living is very expensive. Then there may be mentioned Tampico, Mexico; Colombo, Ceylon; and Johannesburg, South Africa. The consuls at the places indicated receive a post allowance of $1,500, and to certain consuls in Brazil and other countries in South America an allowance of $1,200 is made.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is a proposition that I was coming to. It may be and probably is true that the salaries and the allowances as fixed by the legislative department are too small;

it may be that there is justification for an increase in salaries; but, as I said earlier this morning, such increases ought to be made in specific instances where the Congress finds the necessity to exist, and the duty ought not to be imposed upon the President and be by him relegated to some person in the State Department whose interest, of course, is identical with or inseparable from the interests of those who desire the increase.

I have no sympathy with any penurious policy on the part of this Government toward any of its employees; but I do object to the practice of perpetuating lump-sum appropriations for the payment of increases in salaries at the discretion of the Executive; not that I am lacking in confidence in the President in that particular but that the President has nothing whatever to do with the actual discharge of that duty, and it must be done by some subordinate upon whom the responsibility can not definitely be located.

The testimony in the record is exceedingly indefinite and lacking in detail. On page 53 the question was asked by Mr. HUSTED:

How have the exchange conditions affected the necessity for this?

To that question Mr. Carr replied:

Well, I do not see any signs of it becoming any cheaper for an officer to live. In some places exchange has gone down, but prices have not gone down; in other places exchange has gone up, and prices have in some cases followed it; and in other cases they have not followed it. The sum total of it is, as far as I can make out, that it is at least as expensive to live now as it was last year.

I point out that that statement is just as applicable to officers of the Government living in the United States as it is to diplomatic employees of the Government of the United States who reside in foreign countries; in fact, it is even more applicable. So that the argument breaks its force in that it becomes general and not definite.

So far as index numbers are concerned, the index number in the United States is higher, I believe, if I remember correctly, than it was this time last year.

There he makes the point that in the United States the cost of living has gone up during the last year, and therefore the salaries and allowances should be increased.

In England, I think, it is about the same. Of course, in Germany it has gone very high. I believe in Japan, if I remember correctly, it is about what it was. I have not made any tables, such as I presented last year, of the purchasing power of the dollar, etc., because the statistics on their face seem to bear out the statement I have just made to you.

I am going to put in the RECORD all of the statement of this witness, because I think it fair to him and to the department that it be incorporated in the RECORD, but I call attention particularly to a further statement, as follows:

Mr. HUSTED. We went into this quite carefully last year, and we came to the conclusion that it was pretty difficult to determine the amount of increase which should be given to the representative at any particular post.

Mr. CARR. Well, there certainly is no scientific method devised by which it can be done to satisfy everybody. In a matter of this kind it is a question of using one's best judgment. There is no formula that can be applied, as in the case of some scientific adjustment. We have to take into consideration the men's own statements as to what the prices are in their regions. Those statements are supported by documentary evidence wherever possible, as to the local prices, and the Government statistics, and the Government price index numbers. Then, in that connection we use the Federal Reserve Bulletin and its comparative price levels in all the different countries, and the Federal Reserve Bulletin statements of exchange rates in the different countries. The result obtained in that way is modified by the judgment of what you want done. Conceivably, in one place a man, if he were held down to a low compensation, might not be able to accomplish the things that we want done. So that might make a change in some few individual countries. But from that statement you will see that in a matter of this kind there is no hard-and-fast formula that can be designed which will fit every case of post allowance. I think the post allowance is very necessary. For my own comfort, I wish it had never existed.

There is a statement that in determining the amount of these allowances the department takes into consideration what it desires to accomplish; in other words, it determines the question of policy, and that determines the amount of the allowance to be made out of this lump-sum appropriation. It, therefore, gives evidence to the necessity for more definite action upon the part of the committees of Congress which deal with this matter.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the testimony of Mr. Carr, to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the testimony was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

POST ALLOWANCES.

Mr. HUSTED. Now, the item for "Post allowances to diplomatic and consular officers," I see, is the same as the appropriation for last year, which is $50,000 less than the appropriation for the year before.

Mr. CARR. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUSTED. How have the exchange conditions affected the necessity for this?

Mr. CARR. Well, I do not see any signs of it becoming any cheaper for an officer to live. In some places exchange has gone down, but prices have not gone down; in other places exchange has gone up, and prices have in some cases followed it; and in other cases they have not followed it. The sum total of it is, as far as I can make out, that it is at least as expensive to live now as it was last year. So far as index numbers are concerned, the index number in the United States is higher, I believe, if I remember correctly, than it was this time last year. In England, I think, it is about the same. Of course, in Germany it has gone very high. I believe in Japan, if I remember correctly, it is about what it was. I have not made any tables, such as I presented last year, of the purchasing power of the dollar, etc., because the statistics on their face seem to bear out the statement I have just made to you.

Mr. HUSTED. Who gets this $1,500 increase in salary out of this fund?

Mr. CARR. I can not tell you that from memory. I can give you the places, but not the names.

Mr. HUSTED. That is all I want; not the names.

Mr. CARR. I can give you that. The consuls at Tampico, Mexico; Colombo, Ceylon; and Johannesburg, South Africa, receive post allowances of $1,500 each, because they are junior officers whose salaries are inadequate for their expenses in these unusually expensive posts. Likewise, for a time the consul at Penang received a post allowance of $1,500, until he won a promotion in class, which enabled the department to reduce his post allowance. Similarly two vice consuls of career stationed at Buenos Aires receive post allowances of $1,500. The district is an unusually expensive one and these young men are married and could not live there in a respectable manner without an additional allowance. The consuls at Vladivostok, Chita, and the vice consul of career at Santos, Brazil, receive post allowances of $1,200 each, because of the high cost of living at those posts and of the additional facts that the men are junior officers with low salaries and are married and have families. It is to be understood that in the case of transfer from the posts where they are now stationed the officers would not carry with them the same post allowances, if, indeed, they would carry any at all.

Mr. HUSTED. We went into this quite carefully last year, and we came to the conclusion that it was pretty difficult to determine the amount of increase which should be given to the representative at any particular post.

Mr. CARR. Well, there certainly is no scientific method devised by which it can be done to satisfy everybody. In a matter of this kind it is a question of using one's best judgment. There is no formula that can be applied, as in the case of some scientific adjustment. We have to take into consideration the men's own statements as to what the prices are in their regions. But from that statement you will see that in a matter of this kind there is no hard-and-fast formula that can be designed which will fit every case of post allowance. I think the post allowance is very necessary. For my own comfort, I wish it had never existed.

Mr. HUSTED. I can understand that. You do not think the time has arrived when we can wipe that appropriation out?

Mr. CARR. No, sir; I do not. I think it would be a most unfortunate thing to reduce that appropriation $1 below what it is now.

Mr. HUSTED. Do you not think the men that are getting these post allowances are better off than they were under the old salaries?

Mr. CARR. No; they are not as well off.

Mr. HUSTED. Does not the increase more than offset the advance in living cost?

Mr. CARR. No; the increase does not reach the living cost.

Mr. HUSTED. You do not think it does in any case?

Mr. CARR. I would not say it does not in any case. Conceivably, there may be cases in which it does; but as a general proposition, I am certain the salary plus the post allowance does not put the men in the position in which they were in 1914 or anywhere near it.

Mr. HUSTED. What effect does the payment of these post allowances have upon the morale of the service where they do not receive any post allowance?

Mr. CARR. Of course, there is dissatisfaction among men, as there is bound to be dissatisfaction in any organization, whether it is on account of distribution of post allowances or on account of distribution of office-expense allowances or of promotions in the service. You can not administer anything in a way that will satisfy everybody in which there is the element of judgment involved.

Mr. HUSTED. Do you pay any part of this fund to ministers?

Mr. CARR. No.

Mr. HUSTED. You pay it to secretaries?

Mr. CARR. We pay it to diplomatic secretaries, to consuls general, to consuls and vice consuls of career.

Mr. HUSTED. What is the highest salaried man that receives a post allowance?

Mr. CARR. The highest-salaried men that receive post allowances are Mr. Gale, consul general at Hongkong; Mr. Cunningham, consul general at Shanghai; and Mr. Hurst, consul general at Habana. Those are special cases where the men on assignment receive a grade salary less than the salary usually paid to the man at that place and where the living expenses are extraordinarily and abnormally high. For example, we have been paying a post allowance of $1,000 to Mr. Hurst in Habana, whose salary is $6,000. That is because of the peculiarly high cost of living in Habana at the present time, and because of the fact that usually the officer there has been an $8,000 man. The same is true in Shanghai, where the consul general receives an allowance of $600. That is true also of Hongkong. The officers usually assigned to those posts are $8,000 men.

Mr. HUSTED. But most of it is paid to the low-salaried men?

Mr. CARR. Yes. That has always been the case. The major part of the post allowance has been confined to low-salaried men.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I repeat that my sympathy goes out to the representatives of this Government in a foreign land; I would be the last member of this body to stand on this floor or anywhere else and advocate any policy which would work injustice or oppression to any representative of our flag wherever uplifted, but underlying this appropriation is a policy that can not be justified.

This bill contains many lump-sum appropriations. There is, for instance, the appropriation of an additional sum of $500,000 for the prosecution of war frauds, that sum to be expended absolutely at the discretion of the Attorney General of the United States. Congress has very little, if any, knowledge of what use has been made of the $500,000 appropriated last year for this purpose. Certainly no Senator or Representative would rise in his place and oppose any appropriation necessary or justified for the exposure and for the punishment of fraud or crime against the Government of the United States; but therein lies the danger in lump-sum appropriations. No details are given, substantially no information is furnished to the Congress of the United States, as to what use is to be made of the enormous sum, and very little information is furnished the Congress as to what has been done with the $500,000 heretofore appropriated.

The object of the appropriation, of course, is laudable. The detection and prosecution of fraud and crime against the Government of the United States must be commended; but the Congress ought to know that the funds that it appropriates for this laudable purpose are being wisely and properly expended. We ought to ascertain, so far as such information may be consistent with the public interest, what use has been made of the $500,000 of public money appropriated last year to be expended absolutely without limit or restriction at the dictation of the Attorney General. Five hundred thousand dollars is a large sum of money. I have no information upon which to base an assertion that any part of that fund has been wasted; neither have I any information upon which to base the conclusion that the fund has been wisely, fairly, or justly expended. Five hundred thousand dollars was appropriated last year, $500,000 is appropriated in this bill for the prosecution of war frauds; and, so far as I know, so far as the information goes, the results thus far accomplished have been the effectuation of an organization in the Department of Justice for the supervision of the activities of the district attorneys of the United States and for the institution of suits.

Of course, we all realize that the questions involved in such prosecutions are necessarily complicated, that investigations designed to expose crimes of the nature contemplated by the suits heretofore brought by the Attorney General present difficulties, and I have no disposition to withhold from the Government of the United States any dollar that is necessary to expose and punish any criminal who, when this country was in peril, wrongfully and unlawfully sought to enrich himself at the risk of endangering his fellow countrymen.

I can not find language adequate to express the indignation that all loyal citizens feel toward persons who robbed the Government, if such exist, when they ought to have rendered their services in patriotic spirit; but why is it that we do not know what conditions make necessary this extraordinary annual contribution of $500,000 to be expended by an executive officer, the only restriction being as to the purchase or furnishing of buildings, and perhaps one or two other unimportant restrictions?

Reverting now to the amendment immediately under consideration, the House committee heard the same witnesses that the Senate committee heard. I have not the slightest doubt that the item adopted at the other end of the Capitol was influenced by the desire to eliminate lump-sum appropriations of this character and to get back to the basis of the adjustment of salaries by congressional rather than by executive action. While I have no disposition further to delay the Senate in the consideration or determination of the matter, I do not find from the record as submitted to me persuasive proof that the increase carried by the Senate committee amendment is justified, and I shall vote against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 14, line 9.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] has an amendment which he desires to offer. I want to state that I have not had time to look into it. If the Senator will offer it, if it is in the nature of a gratuity, as was the one offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], I shall be perfectly willing that it go to the committee of conference, and have the Senator submit to the conferees upon the part of the Senate any data he may have which we may use in conference to sustain the amendment.

Mr. STANLEY. Very well. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in after the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania and agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. Following the amendment heretofore agreed to, on page 13, after line 7, it is proposed to insert the following:

For Louise Carroll Masterson, widow of William W. Masterson, late consul to Plymouth, England, $4,500, one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while at his post of duty from illness incurred in the Consular Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of House bill 12817, the shipping bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. FLETCHER obtained the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harris	Nicholson	Smoot
Bayard	Harrison	Norbeck	Spencer
Brookhart	Heflin	Norris	Stanley
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Sterling
Capper	Kendrick	Page	Sutherland
Caraway	Keyes	Phipps	Townsend
Curtis	Ladd	Pittman	Trammell

Ernst	McKellar	Robinson	Walsh, Mass.
Fletcher	McKinley	Sheppard	Walsh, Mont.
George	McNary	Shortridge	Warren
Glass	Nelson	Simmons	Weller
Harreld	New	Smith	Williams

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BROOKHART. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the pending bill. I ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, when we reached the point of adjournment yesterday afternoon, I was approaching some further questions raised by the Senator from Washington, and among them I might refer very briefly to one statement he made in connection with the consequences of the absence of merchant ships under the United States flag at the time of the breaking out of the war. He observed, as I recall, that one result was that cotton went down to something like 6 cents a pound. It is not very material in this connection, but for the sake of having the matter placed historically right it seems to me it is worth while to observe that the cause of the low price of cotton was not the absence of ships at that time but it was the fact that the war had broken out in Europe and the demand for American cotton had for a time been suspended.

I remember perfectly well, being in Europe at the time war was declared, that the general opinion over there—and when I reached the United States the general opinion here—was that that war would not last over four or five months. It was believed that the countries involved would be bankrupt by that time, and financially and otherwise exhausted, and that therefore it must end within four or five months. England had very good stocks of cotton on hand, Germany had some cotton, France had quite a good supply of cotton, and the market for American cotton fell down; hence the price dropped. It was not so much the absence of shipping facilities as it was a combination of economic conditions as the result of the declaration of war. Those countries undoubtedly felt that they could cease buying for the present and would be able to come into the market just before their supplies were exhausted—and they would not be exhausted ordinarily within four or five months. So they did not attempt to buy the cotton.

It must be remembered, too, that a ship, say, of 8,800 gross tons, has a cargo capacity of about 7,000 tons of freight. It takes 4 bales of cotton to make a ton, so that a ship of that size could carry 25,000 bales of cotton. It does not take many ships to carry the cotton to supply the markets possible to develop, particularly at that time. These bales of cotton are always compressed and shipped in that compressed condition, so that the ship can carry a great many bales of cotton. Ten to twenty thousand bales of cotton is not a large estimate for one of the ordinary cargo ships. That was the condition, and that unquestionably had to do with the low price of cotton. There were no more ships available for the movement of cotton when the price was 30 cents a pound than there were available when the price was 6 cents a pound.

As to the movement of our troops, it is true that none of these ships were actually constructed in our yards in time to take any material part in the movement of troops, but we requisitioned ships in pursuance of the law, and those requisitioned ships, those ships which were in process of construction and were completed, did take a very material part in the movement of our troops, and especially in the movement of supplies.

It was, however, to be expected that the countries to whose relief we were going made no sacrifice, were extremely anxious, on the other hand, to supply the necessary ships to bring our troops to their assistance. I think the figures referred to by the Senator from Washington are scarcely accurate as to the participation of American ships, both in the movement of supplies to Europe and the return of our soldiers after the armistice.

It will be recalled, too, that there was very urgent and very proper demand not only by every politician in the country but by the mothers of the country that our troops should be hurried home at the very first opportunity, and the administration would have been most severely criticized if they had not availed themselves of foreign ships and every sort of means of bringing the boys home.

Mr. W. J. Love, vice president of the Emergency Fleet Corporation of the present Shipping Board, testified at the hearings before the Appropriations Committee of the House, which had under consideration H. R. 9981, making appropriations for the Executive and for sundry executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and officers for the year ending June 30, 1923, as follows:

> We transported overseas 2,104,230 of our troops, of which 951,803 were transported across in American bottoms, and of the 2,057,269 brought home, 1,705,379 were brought home in American vessels.

Of course, in addition to our troops, a tremendous amount of supplies for our troops and the Allies were transported overseas, and likewise a large amount of equipment and supplies were brought back in our ships.

Furthermore, in a speech delivered at Charleston, S. C., before the annual meeting of the South Atlantic Ports Association, November 15, 1920, Admiral Benson declared as follows:

> Think of the farsighted policy which brought about the shipping act in the latter part of 1916, which piece of legislation made possible the huge undertaking that helped in a large measure to solve some of the most trying situations this world ever faced. The shipbuilders of the United States made possible the carrying overseas of approximately 95 per cent of the supplies for the American fighting forces at the front. More than 900,000 men went across in American bottoms.

I submit that these figures are scarcely in harmony with the statement furnished by the Senator from Washington upon that question.

The Senator challenged specifically three statements in the minority views on this bill, and I wish to refer to those. The first was with regard to the losses arising from ship operations being indefinite and uncertain. The report said:

> Regarding the alleged losses now experienced by the Shipping Board from operations, we have no accurate data.

The Senator expressed some surprise at such language as that in view of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of November 25, 1922, which, at pages 225–226, carried a statement by Mr. P. Sinclair, comptroller of the Shipping Board. It will be recalled that Mr. EDMONDS, who attaches the statement as a part of his speech, had leave to print, and this did not appear in the RECORD at the time of Mr. EDMONDS's speech, but appeared some days later. When the minority report was actually written I confess that I do not recall having seen the speech in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to which I have referred. I did see it, however, before the report was filed, and I saw no reason for revising the language. It does seem to me now, upon a careful examination of the letter and the statement, that the language of the report is not only correct but is rather mild in giving out the thought that there was not accurate data before any committee of Congress or before Congress as to the actual losses suffered by the Shipping Board in the operation of the ships. I submit that any reasonable man who will read the letter of the comptroller must reach the conclusion that two-thirds or three-fourths of it comprises mere estimates, mere guesses, which are based upon possible conditions that may arise in the future. It is full of "ifs" and "ands." "If" freight rates continue to decline, then the losses for the next six months must be increased so much. "If" passengers cease to travel on our ships, then the losses in the next six months must be increased so much. "If" this or that happens, we must reasonably expect that the losses will be so-and-so. But the figures finally reached of $50,000,000 a year loss are based upon those "ifs," those conditions, and not upon actual experience.

I have tried in every way I could to get the actual figures as to the losses. When the bill was under consideration and the hearings were being held by the committees of the House and Senate, efforts were made by the minority Members to have the operating agents produce itemized statements of their earnings and expenses and submit them to the committees in order that we might have the information upon which to base calculations as to the exact losses or gains in the operation of the ships, and where and how the losses were taking place, if there were any such. But we were unable to get the agents there. We were met with a refusal to summon the operating agents and have them make the statement. The information was denied us, and now we are furnished with this statement appearing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Let us consider that statement for a moment. It is addressed to Hon. GEORGE W. EDMONDS, House of Representatives, and is dated Washington, November 24, 1922, and reads:

> Pursuant to your telephone request, I herein beg to inclose statement of estimated operating results of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation for the four months from July to October, 1922, inclusive.

This is all the definite certain statement we have based upon data limited and confined to "each of the four months." The rest of it is all based upon supposition.

> You will note that the total loss (without, of course, taking into account anything for capital charges, to wit, interest, insurance, or depreciation) amounts to $13,058,593.37.

Now listen:

> Out of this, however, there is a general and administrative expense not directly applicable to operation of vessels of $2,197,513.24 for the period.

Why include that in the operating losses and in the next breath say it does not belong there? Then we have the itemized statement showing the summary of total losses, divided as follows:

July, loss on operations, $2,242,714.14.
August, loss on operations, $2,662,728.62.
September, loss on operations, $3,140,860.53.
October, loss on operations, $2,814,776.84.

This makes a total for the four months of $10,861,080.13. I think it will hardly be disputed that we have to multiply that by three in order to get the annual loss; assuming that the same losses would continue, the 12 months would show three times that sum, which would be about $32,000,000 for the year. Anyone can multiply $10,861,080.13 by 3 and they will get the actual loss. Then why call it $50,000,000? Why keep insisting that it must be $50,000,000? All we know is that in the four months named the actual loss has been $10,861,080, and yet they put alongside of that a total loss which they estimate at $13,058,593.37, admitting in the same statement that in those figures are included $2,197,513.24 which ought not to be included under the head of operating losses.

The communication then continues:

> For the purposes of round figures, we will say that the loss for the period of four months has been $11,000,000. As this is one-third of the year, should the loss keep on on this basis it would be $33,000,000 for the year, but anyone who estimates that the loss of the Shipping Board for the year will be $33,000,000 deceives himself. In the first place, the four months covered are the most favorable months in the year as to passenger earnings. I estimate within that period almost half of the passenger earnings of the whole 12 months accrue.

He "estimates" that. That is a mere guess. That is not based upon experience or upon facts. That is an estimate. So I say we have not accurate data as to the total amount of the losses per annum in the operation of the ships.

He continues:

> It must be remembered that the summer is the great ocean passenger traveling period. The result is that while in so far as cash outlay goes the operations of passenger ships have shown very little loss in the period covered, for most of the ensuing eight months of the fiscal year the loss will be, we estimate, $1,300,000 more than it was for the first four months.

There is an admission that there has been very little loss in the operation of the passenger ships. Most of the loss, therefore, must have come from the operation of cargo ships. Passenger lines must have been doing fairly well. He admits there has been very little loss, but he says:

Ahead of us are losses which we estimate to be $1,800,000 more than for the first four months.

That is a mere estimate.

Our total loss of the Shipping Board has been $13,058,593.37 for the first four months.

He puts that in again, and reiterates and reasserts it, when he knows and in the very next breath states that in that item is $2,197,513, which arose "out of and in connection with general and administrative expense not directly applicable to operations of the vessels." And yet they keep repeating the losses of the Shipping Board and admit that they include items which ought not to come under that head at all.

Then we come to the following details in his statement:

Our loss for the first four months—

Just listen to this, Senators. Is it the purpose to deceive Congress or to deceive the public? Why can not these people be frank and open and candid and square in the matter? We are now talking about operating losses:

Our loss for the first four months, including $2,197,513.24 for expenses not directly applicable to operation, was $13,058,000.

Why include that? They admit it is not applicable to operation, so why include it in the statement and repeat it and reiterate it?

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WELLER in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. Some of these expenses, I understand, were for salaries for employees disposing of other property that belonged to the Shipping Board.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; and all that sort of thing.

Mr. DIAL. Settling claims and other matters not incident to operation of the ships.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely, and they say it was not, and yet they keep repeating it under the head of operations.

Mr. McKELLAR. What was the exact amount of the operation losses?

Mr. FLETCHER. Loss on operations, $10,861,808.13.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was that for the year?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; for the four months, July, August, September, and October. They have nothing for the other months. They do not give us any information as to November, nor for previous months, for that matter.

Mr. POMERENE. What was the reason for selecting those four months?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know, except that perhaps that is the only data they have worked out sufficiently about which to make any sort of statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. That would not be $50,000,000 a year, as stated by the President in his message.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course not. It would be not over $33,000,000, as they admit in one statement; but if we include a lot of other things that do not belong to operation it can be run up to $50,000,000. For instance, in the same itemized statement it is said:

The immediate expenditures for structural changes to be made within the next four months on the twenty-three 535-foot passenger ships will be $3,000,000.

Why charge that to operation? Can anybody find any reason for charging structural changes in ships to the cost of operation? Here are 23 ships, some of which will from time to time be taken out of the service, carried to shipyards, and may be changed from coal burners to oil burners or from oil burners to Diesel engines, and the expenditures so incurred are to be charged as operating expense. It is perfectly absurd. It might be decided upon the return voyage of one of these vessels to say, "We will sink the vessel." The whole vessel would then be lost. In such a case is the value of that vessel to be charged to operating expense? Or it might be concluded to cut the vessel in two, add another section to it, or to change it entirely from a sailing vessel to a steam vessel, and charge that to operating expense.

Mr. McKELLAR. It might be well said that during the four months which are taken to illustrate the cost the shipping of all the world has been in a like desperate state, has it not?

Mr. FLETCHER. Shipping all over the world has been in the most depressed situation that has existed for years and years.

Mr. McKELLAR. As a matter of fact, there is no nation in all the world but has ships tied up just as we have. They have not so many as we have, for we built a great many during the World War.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is quite true.

The next item of this loss is:

Additional losses due to adverse operating conditions for the six months, at $500,000 per month.

On what is that based? It is a mere guess, a mere estimate. Nobody knows whether or not that loss will follow. Mr. Sinclair does not know; it is an estimate for the six months to come; and he is merely expressing his opinion about it; that is all. Therefore I say in the report there are no accurate data as to the amount of the loss. It presents a mere opinion, based upon nothing except upon the supposition that freight rates will continue to decline and that people will stop traveling across the ocean.

The next item is:

Increased cost of oil, based upon increase of 50 cents per barrel and the use of 1,000,000 barrels monthly for eight months.

I dare say the Shipping Board has not made contracts for eight months; that is not an actual, binding, fixed loss.

Mr. McKELLAR. When was that statement made?

Mr. FLETCHER. This statement was made on November 24, 1922, and is found on pages 225-226 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. If the Senator will keep it before him, he can follow my comments. That is another item that is not based upon actual facts. It is merely an estimate. My information is that they are doing fairly well with oil burners and that they are making oil contracts now that are quite satisfactory. I do not believe that item belongs in this statement of losses at all.

The next item is:

Decrease in passenger earnings for winter months, six months, at $300,000 per month.

How do they know they are going to lose that much money? That is a mere supposition; that is a guess and nothing more.

The next item is:

Estimated losses for eight months—November to June, inclusive—on the basis of the loss for the past four months, but not including the four added items immediately given above, $26,116,000.

So Mr. Sinclair adds up the total loss for 1923 as being $50,974,000. Then what does he do? The statement says:

Of course, in this loss is included the general and administrative expense not directly applicable to operation of vessels.

Then, why put it in? He admits that it is not applicable to operation, and yet includes it in this estimate which I have just read. What does that amount to? The statement continues:

As this was $2,197,513.24 for the first four months, if it kept on at the same rate it would be approximately $6,600,000 for the year. So, taking this off of the total estimate of $50,974,000, the total loss for the year would give us an operating loss of approximately $44,000,000.

Yet, as the statement proceeds, the supposition continues that we are bound to lose this; we are bound to lose that; and if we do the result is going to be different.

Mr. EDMONDS, who is well informed regarding this whole situation and subject, in some observations made in the other House during the debate stated that the loss was probably well stated at about $3,000,000 a month; and that is, perhaps, nearer correct; but the Shipping Board insists on putting out this statement and claim that it is clear and definite and certain, spreading it before the country, and showing that the annual loss is $50,000,000. When the statement comes to be analyzed, however, according to their own figures, the loss will not exceed $44,000,000, and included in that are the structural changes and repairs and that sort of thing. The estimates of losses in the months to come are mere guesses. The sum of $33,000,000 is perhaps as near as we can get at the facts in that matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida had better watch out, for if he shows that our losses are not over about $30,000,000 a year he will remove the principal reason that is advanced for the passage of the pending bill; that is, if we tax the people some $30,000,000 a year, it will be cheaper than the loss now incurred in handling the ships as we do.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely. The claim the Senator from Tennessee has in mind is being made that even if this proposed subsidy amounts to $30,000,000 a year, inasmuch as we are losing $50,000,000 a year, we would save $20,000,000 a year if we passed the bill. That is the argument, but, of course, it is perfectly ridiculous and absurd, because these expenses are going to continue whether we pass this bill or not. It will be simply piling up $30,000,000 a year on top of the $30,000,000 or $50,000,000, or whatever the amount may be which represents the losses of the Shipping Board.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Florida will not forget the old illustration about the camel getting his nose under the tent. If these special interests ever get a hold on the Public Treasury they are going to continue to ask for the amounts which the American people will have to pay from time to time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Undoubtedly. Once they get this policy written into the law, it will be there to stay. We will not be able to get away from it. It will be cumulative, as it was in the case of the old Collins Line. When we gave them a subvention of so much a year, when their contract expired they came back to Congress and asked to have their subvention doubled, and Congress doubled it. After awhile, when that contract expired, Congress decided to go back to the original appropriation. What then happened? The Collins Line threw up the sponge and went out of business. That was the end of the subsidy and that was the result of its operation.

There is only one hope we have, if it may be called a hope—of course it involves going through mire to get there—but it may eventually come, just as it did in the case of the Pacific Mail scandal years ago. This bill offers all sorts of opportunities for the rankest scandal that ever was exposed in this country. It may be when that comes that we shall be able to repeal this sort of legislation and get from under it, just as we did years ago.

I quote from pages 40 and 41 of Jones's Government Aid to Merchant Shipping as follows:

> In 1872 the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. proposed the establishment of another monthly mail steamship line to China and Japan for an additional subvention of $500,000 per year. After much debate Congress adopted the proposal and a contract to that effect was entered into. This contract, however, was abrogated by act of March 3, 1875, after it was discovered that the law had been passed as a result of corruption and the company had failed to carry out its part of the agreement.
> During this period, however, the policy of granting mail subventions received a deathblow.

Why? Because of the scandal.

> The disclosures as to the maintenance of a corrupt lobby to secure congressional approval of the second Pacific Mail contract left such an unfavorable impression upon the popular mind that no serious attempt was made to institute subvention payments for at least 10 years.

Mr. Meeker in his History of Shipping Subsidies, on pages 160 and 161, discusses the same subject as follows:

> In 1872 the Pacific Mail Co. offered to run another monthly service to China and Japan for an additional $500,000 a year. With considerable difficulty a bill authorizing such a contract was passed by Congress June 1, 1872. In 1874 it was discovered that bribery had been employed to secure the passage of the measure. It was proven that the company had spent about $1,000,000 to push the bill through Congress. The new contract was abrogated by the Government because of the improper methods used in gaining the necessary legislation, and the subsequent failure of the company to fulfill the conditions of the said contract.

That was one way to get rid of that subsidy. The information which leaked out to the public that a million dollars had been used to pass the bill, and the absolute failure of the shipping company to keep the contract, spelled its doom. It may be that some such thing as that may develop in connection with this character of legislation should it ever be passed, because it will open the door for people all over the country to come flocking here to Washington and to the Shipping Board for governmental favor. This bill provides that the board shall have absolute discretion within its own sweet will to double the subsidies provided for and set forth in the compensation, direct-aid fund, which is permanently appropriated to the extent of $30,000,000 a year for 10 years, with the privilege to the Shipping Board of extending it five years further.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I assume that any shipping company to be prosperous must have cargoes to transport. How will the payment of a cash subsidy increase the cargoes of any shipping company? The Senator is on the Committee on Commerce, and I will ask him what statement has been made in the hearings or what evidence has been adduced to show that the mere payment by the Government of a cash bounty will increase the cargoes of any particular shipping company?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the Senator has put his finger on the very spot that is the most tender to our subsidy friends and important in this whole question—that is, that in order to have a prosperous merchant marine we must have cargoes. It avails us nothing to have ships sailing the ocean empty. We must have cargoes in order to make possible the development of a merchant marine. There must be demand for the ships, and that means cargoes. This subsidy does not create any cargoes anywhere. It does not reach that point at all. It simply encourages a few people to buy these ships, and then it is assumed that because they have ships they will go out and hunt cargoes, I suppose; and a loan fund of $125,000,000 is provided for here, to be loaned at 4½ per cent. The intention of that is to encourage people to build more ships.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why build more, when we now have, according to Mr. Lasker, twice as many as we need?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is a pertinent inquiry. The argument that is made in reply to that suggestion is that we need some more of a different kind and type; but, for the life of me, I can not see how appropriating this money permanently, as this bill does, during the whole period of 10 years, with a possible extension, and a very probable extension, of five years more, I can not see how permanently appropriating $30,000,000 a year out of this one fund, outside of other benefits carried in the bill, is going to create cargoes or, in their absence, a demand for ships.

The most that might be hoped for would be that in some three years several hundred of our best and most profitable ships might be purchased leaving us with some 800 others on hand and the enormous overhead flourishing as usual.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me again, carrying out the idea that I have in regard to cargoes being necessary in order to build up a merchant marine, as I understand this bill it does not give bounties to the ships of the Standard Oil Co., the ships of the Steel Corporation, or the ships of the United Fruit Co. They are excluded, as I understand, under this bill. Is that correct?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; they get compensation. They get some benefits, too, under the provision with reference to the reductions allowed on depreciation of ships in their income tax.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; but I am talking about cash subsidies.

Mr. FLETCHER. They get the subsidy as the bill was reported to the House. There was an amendment which excluded earnings from carrying their own commodities, from tax exemption, and the Commerce Committee amendment excludes them from participation in the loan fund. That committee likewise purposes to strike out the income-tax exemptions except they permit deductions for depreciation.

Mr. McKELLAR. They are excluded from them?

Mr. FLETCHER. Not from compensation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know of no better illustration of the view that it is necessary to have cargoes to make good business. All of these three concerns have a large number of ships. Those ships have cargoes. They are carrying their cargoes to every port in the world perhaps—not the United Fruit Co. but the other two companies are.

They are carrying their goods everywhere. They are busy. They have business. They are making money. They do not need a subsidy. It does seem to me, therefore, that Congress should direct its efforts toward getting business for our merchant marine, not toward paying subsidies for no work being done.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, the Senator is correct about that; but instead of doing that, instead of encouraging the development of trade, Congress passes a tariff law which will have the effect of decreasing imports and therefore lessening the amount of goods to move into this country, and certainly that will be reflected in a decrease of exports as well. Congress has not only done that but it put an amendment upon the tariff bill which obliges American ships, if they have to be repaired in foreign yards, to pay 50 per cent of the cost of those repairs as a tax. There are no other ships that do that. We have ships sailing around the world, tramps going from one port to another, perhaps gone 8, 9, or 10 months from home. They may be forced to have repairs made in foreign ports. What is the result? The American has to pay 50 per cent in addition as a tax upon the cost of those repairs, whereas the foreigner has no such obligation at all. That is the way in which Congress encourages our ships, as far as that is concerned. I say that we ought to spare our shipping burdens and taxes of that kind and not seek to encourage a few shipowners to get more ships and come to the Government for special favors to be compensated by direct payments out of the Treasury for what they claim to be the difference in operating under our flag and under a foreign flag.

On this question of losses, the old saying is that figures will not lie, and I presume that is true; but there are a great many people who know how to manipulate them in such a way that they bring about inaccurate results. I do not know how these figures were compiled. We were unable to get that information before the committee, but it is certainly inconsistent with other reports from the same Shipping Board.

I happen to have before me a copy of the speech which I made August 20, 1921, in the Senate, and I quote from that:

Mr. Tweedale then stated—

Mr. Tweedale was the comptroller—

Mr. Tweedale then stated, on May 9, 1921, that—

"From the beginning of the operation of this fleet to May 1, 1919, we paid all the expenses of the fleet, the operation of the fleet, and in addition to that declared a profit of $48,325,000, and also laid up $33,000,000 for depreciation, making a total of $81,325,000. From that point, May 1, 1919, down to March 1, 1921, the fleet was operated at a profit of $17,000,000."

That is a statement from another comptroller of the Shipping Board, made at the time I have mentioned, and covering the dates set forth.

Then Mr. Tweedale further says:

If depreciation on original cost (average, $200 per dead-weight ton) on a 10-year life basis, which we have been using, were added, it would amount to $149,451,725. This, if added to the operation loss, would increase the total loss to $179,289,322.

Of course, it is absurd to figure 10 per cent depreciation on a cost of $200 a ton when we are offering these ships at $30 a ton.

If figures above used to cover insurance, repairs, and depreciation were reduced from January 1, 1921, to a figure more commensurate with present conditions, insurance and repairs would be reduced by $16,798,838 (divided: Insurance, $11,199,188, and repairs, $5,599,650). Depreciation would be reduced by $41,996,980.

If the reduced figures mentioned were used, and I think they are considered ample, the results shown above would be changed and appear as follows:

Gross revenue	$379,254,708
Expenses, including repairs, insurance, and overhead	396,053,546
Net loss from operation	16,798,838

That is the statement of that comptroller; and, in any event, these losses ought not to amount to any $50,000,000 a year. There is certainly no excuse whatever for continuing any such losses.

The next proposition is with regard to the amount of subsidies paid by other countries. The Senator from Washington calls my attention to this same CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and to a statement made by Mr. E. T. Chamberlain, Commissioner of Navigation, appearing therein at page 224. The minority report says—which is, of course, general language—that our belief is that the entire subsidies and subventions and aids given to shipping in England, France, Italy, and Japan will not exceed $17,000,000 per annum.

The argument is made here in support of this bill that we ought to have subsidies because our competitors are paid such enormous subsidies; that we must be put in position to be on an equal footing with them; and that is a reason why we should come to this policy of granting subsidies. We have said in the minority report that in our judgment the total subsidies paid by all those countries annually will not exceed $17,000,000.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator suggest what classes of vessels receive these subsidies? I ask that question because, as I understand, in Great Britain subsidies are granted only to the fast liners; and I should like more detailed information upon that point.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; I propose to go into that subject a little more fully. I will say to the Senator generally, however, that the subsidies provided in all countries to-day are practically confined to subventions in the way of postal contracts, ocean-mail pay. That is practically what they have all come to. Great Britain has come to that, and there are a few other countries paying some bounty for constructing ships, and that sort of thing; but they have come practically to that one thing—subventions in the way of mail contracts—and we have done that since 1891. We are doing it now. The estimate this year is that the cost of carrying our ocean mail will be something over $6,000,000. We propose in this bill to require that that mail shall move in American ships.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, during the past year the cost of carrying the mail in our own vessels was $4,000,000, whereas in round numbers we paid foreign ships about $2,000,000 for carrying another portion of our mails.

Mr. FLETCHER. Exactly.

Mr. McKELLAR. And we are virtually the only nation in the world that hires the ships of other nations. Here we have, as reported by the chairman of the Shipping Board, over a thousand vessels tied up, and four hundred and twenty-odd vessels of our own running, and yet we are paying over $2,000,000 a year to the ships of other nations for carrying our mail under the contracts we have with them. I took the trouble to look up and see what other nations were employing American ships to carry mail for them, and I found that the new kingdom or republic of Esthonia and the new kingdom or republic of Finland were paying some small sum, probably less than $1,000, to American ships for carrying the mail of those two countries alone. Great Britain does not employ, and has never at any time employed, American vessels to carry her mail.

Mr. FLETCHER. On this subject of subsidies the Senator inserted a statement by Mr. Chamberlain at page 405 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I am astonished that Mr. Chamberlain should make this statement. I can not understand for a moment how he manages to so arrange these figures as to make this sort of showing. I would guarantee to discredit that whole statement from beginning to end by just analyzing one item in it.

Take Australia, for instance. Under the head of subsidies, mind you, he says:

Contract ocean mail payments (1922) were $792,485.
Fiji Islands, $53,880.

Great Britain and Australia, and perhaps Canada, generally provide these subventions for carrying the mails not only to foreign countries, strictly speaking, but to their different colonies or dependencies or outlying islands.

We do not provide them for such service. Our ocean mail contracts refer to the foreign movement of mails entirely. They do not apply to mails to Porto Rico or Hawaii or Panama.

I read further from Mr. Chamberlain's statement. Under the head of "Subsidies" he says:

Commonwealth Government fleet (first cost of fleet to June 30, 1922, was £14,518,789), net earnings without allowance for interest and depreciation, £7,371,053.

Leaving as subsidies $32,093,334.64.

The next item is:

Completion shipbuilding program, $9,429,000.

The Senator from Washington has it appear, and it is set forth in this summary, that the subsidy paid by Australia is $59,529,784.64 a year, whereas included in that item is the total cost of the fleet built by Australia and another shipbuilding program which she has now under way. That is classified as a subsidy. Australia is building her own ships. The Government is operating the ships, and successfully operating them. Last year she made a net profit of $33,000,000 operating her fleet; yet they say this Government can not do anything like that; that we are impotent; that we are incompetent; that we are incapable. Australia is doing it; and they want to charge as a subsidy the total cost of the fleet—$32,093,334—and $9,429,000, to go to make up the subsidy of $42,000,000.

I would like to know, if Mr. Chamberlain were called upon to report to Lloyd's, for instance, what subvention or subsidy the United States pays to her shipping annually, whether he would say we paid $6,000,000 for carrying our mails on the ocean and $3,000,000,000 the cost of our fleet. If he were to report the subsidy paid by the United States anually, he might with equal justification report $3,000,000,000, and $6,000,000 more for carrying the mails. Think of putting out a statement on the subject of subsidies and including in it the total cost of the ships for Australia and her present program of construction as well.

That ought to discredit that whole statement, and I should not take up a minute's time in reading any other item in it. We find that when he gives what Italy is paying, $28,576,000, he says Italy pays that as subsidies. I venture to say that is two-thirds construction. If not construction, it is for some purpose outside of real, bona fide subsidies. Italy can not pay any such money as that for subsidies. She never has paid such an amount.

I want to quote from Mr. Chamberlain himself. I do not know when he made this statement just quoted and appearing in the RECORD of November 28, as it does not seem to bear any date, but undoubtedly he must have made it before December 4 because it appears in the RECORD of November 28. On December 4, 1922, this is what the same Mr. Chamberlain said under the title "The Italian Merchant Marine," appearing in the Commerce Reports:

Indeed, even in July the Government explanation of the budget estimate for 1922 and 1923 seemed to forecast reductions or abandonment of the construction and navigation bounty system.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Chamberlain well knows that the new Government in Italy has to-day practically abandoned those bounties to which he refers here, and no government in Italy will call upon the people or can call upon the people of that country to pay any such subsidies as he set forth in this statement. He knows that. It is perfectly ridiculous.

You may estimate $5,000,000 as the subsidy paid by Italy, and you will be very liberal in your estimate. You may estimate $2,500,000 for England, $5,000,000 for France, and $5,000,000 for Japan, making $12,500,000, and give $5,000,000 to Italy, and you will not be much above the figure given in the report of the minority on this bill, $17,000,000, for these four competing nations, against which we must protect ourselves by appropriating $30,000,000 to our shipowners.

There is a statement on that subject appearing in the hearings at page 89, a statement prepared by the Shipping Board, put out by the Shipping Board, printed by the Shipping Board, but just as soon they had a chance to thoroughly examine it they suppressed its circulation, because it did not suit their views; it did not support this bill. It was, however, entitled as coming from the Shipping Board and was prepared at their request. Here is the statement at page 89:

By the law of 1900 changes in the navigation bounty were made. Foreign-built vessels were excluded and the rates were greatly reduced, namely, from 80 centimes to 45 for steamships and 20 centimes for sailing vessels, with a limitation on the mileage for which bounties could be received from 40,000 to 50,000 miles for steam and 10,000 for sailing vessels. The tonnage also was limited so that bounties could not be received for the excess over 20,000 tons in any year, nor over 40,000 tons in any year after 1903, during the operation of the law of 1896. The maximum tonnage entitled to bounty was limited to 200,000 gross tons and the annual expenditure to 10,000,000 lire.

Of course, the amount of lire paid for subventions and bounties and aids in Italy appears very large, but we know the value of the lire has come down from 14 cents and something to very little over 4 cents in our money. I read further:

By the law of 1911, which slightly changed the provisions, a limitation on bounties is fixed by statute, the limit being 6,200,000 lire annually.

That is the limitation, 6,200,000 lire annually, not dollars. I continue reading:

The total construction and navigation bounties in 1910 amounted to $1,200,000, divided about equally between construction and navigation.

They acquired some ships. They got some Austrian ships, and they built some ships, and I presume Mr. Chamberlain has charged in this statement of the subsidy what it has cost the Government to acquire, construct, build, and purchase ships. I read further:

By the law of 1913 a new form of bounty for Italian-built ships was inaugurated, namely a yearly payment of 2½ per cent of the value of the ship. To receive the bounty the ship must be operated at least 160 days in the year, the amount being proportionately reduced for operation for a shorter time. The total appropriation under this law can not exceed in any one year 2,300,000 lire.

The total under that law can not exceed 2,300,000 lire, each lire being worth now about 4 cents. I continue reading:

Individual lines receive annual subventions for particular services. For example, the Italian-Brazilian lines, for two voyages monthly, receive about $5,000 per round voyage, or $636,000 for a period of five years.

Maybe Mr. Chamberlain has estimated a five-year contract in these figures; I can not say. But the statement is given out as to an annual subvention. This continues:

Two-thirds is paid by the Brazilian Federal Government and one-third by the State of Sao Paulo, which has much Italian labor. Whether this contract is still in force is not known. It expired originally in 1917.

An agreement between Italy and Chile provides for a payment of about $100,000 annually for a service between Genoa and Valparaiso and other Chilean ports. The purpose was to move the nitrate direct to Italy.

Postal subventions are paid by Italy to the amount of about $2,500,000 annually for various services, mostly to far-distant ports.

Taking the statement of this expert who examined the whole question of subsidies and reported for the benefit of the committee considering this bill, entitled "Appendix A to the hearings, report of the history of shipping discriminations and on various forms of Government aid and shipping," we must reach the conclusion that the total postal subventions paid in Italy annually amount to $2,500,000, and the statement is made that as to construction bounties they were to be discontinued in the recent budget.

I have allowed for Italy $5,000,000 for subventions and aids, and I do not believe she will pay more than $2,500,000. I have made an excessive allowance for Italy, therefore.

As to all these countries, the principal aids are subventions. For instance, take Great Britain. I referred a moment ago to the point raised by the Senator from Tennessee about what we are doing to really bring about the establishment of a merchant marine and looking toward providing for cargoes. We have gone on and repealed the Panama Canal act admitting foreign-built ships to American registry. That does away with what we might call free-ship policy. That was done in the merchant marine act of 1920.

Great Britain has never granted general navigation bounties—

Said this author—

nor construction bounties, with the exception of the early European subsidies above mentioned. Practically the only money aid given by Great Britain to its marine is in the form of postal subventions.

The first of these subventions came in 1838 for a mail service between Liverpool, Halifax, and New York.

Mr. McKELLAR. What did it amount to, all told?

Mr. FLETCHER. The postal subvention, after reductions, amounted to about $2,500,000.

I do not care what has been said; that statement I believe. It was made by a student of the subject who prepared it for the guidance and help of the committees considering the bill.

All the writers seem to agree that the growth of the British merchant marine is in no sense due to the small subsidy paid, admitting that the payments are in excess of the postal service rendered. The growth of the British marine was probably due to the early development of British industry, the acquisition of extensive colonial possessions, and the monopolistic or preferred position in colonial trade. The cheapness of construction and the concentration on the business account for most of its success.

The various Provinces of Australia grant postal subventions, including the Commonwealth, amounting to about $225,000. New Zealand pays small amounts based on the weight of the mail carried.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the United States now pays through postal subventions virtually as much as England, as she pays in the neighborhood of $2,000,000 now as postal subventions, and if the figures of the Senator from Florida are correct as to the amount to be paid next year being $6,000,000, we will pay more in postal subventions than Great Britain is now paying.

Mr. FLETCHER. Undoubtedly that is true.

We come next to the reference to France at page 86 of Appendix A in the hearings:

France appears to be the country of subventions par excellence, although in 1910 its merchant marine was outranked by Great Britain, the United States, Germany, Norway, and Japan. In 1881 its enlarged program of direct subventions began. From 1870 to 1913 its net tonnage ranged as follows:

Year.	Sail.	Steam.	Total.
1870	917,633	154,415	1,072,048
1880	641,539	277,759	919,298
1913	601,983	980,433	1,582,416

This simply shows that the most liberal country in the world in granting subsidies made no material progress whatever in the creation of its merchant marine. It is perfectly well known that it was a scandal, world-wide almost, how French ships sailed about the ocean empty simply to draw the subsidy. It did not help the commerce of France one bit, and did not build up any trade, and did not establish a merchant marine. That is a thought worth while in considering the bill. The total postal subsidies in 1911 paid by France amounted to about $5,500,000. They have remained in the neighborhood of $5,000,000 since 1889.

I am willing to accept the statement of Mr. Chamberlain as to the subventions allowed France without taking up the time to go into that any further, which is $5,107,104 per annum. Granting that and assuming Great Britain, France, and Italy, at the figures which I have mentioned, and Japan, at the figures Mr. Chamberlain gives of $4,831,411, we are well within the $17,000,000 for all four of the countries.

Mr. Merrill, an official of the Shipping Board, at page 634 of the hearings, said:

No, sir; practically no subsidy was ever given by England.

Mr. Lissner, one of the commissioners of the Shipping Board, at page 635, referring to Great Britain, said:

They have never given anything, so far as I know, purely as a subsidy to build up a merchant marine.

The report to which I just referred, Appendix A, states:

Great Britain has never granted general navigation bounties nor construction bounties, with the exception of the early Elizabethian subsidies above mentioned.

Those were in 1662 and 1694. The report further states:

Bounties had no noticeable effect on ship construction. Practically the only money aid given by Britain to its marine is in the form of postal subvention.

I have referred to the language in the report.

All the writers seem to agree that the growth of the British merchant marine is in no sense due to the small subsidy paid, admitting that the payments are in excess of postal services rendered.

Referring, as some people do, to the assistance to the Cunard Line by England as if that were a tremendous subsidy, Mr. Jones, in his work on Government Aid to Merchant Shipping, said:

The only instance of a loan to a steamship company by the British Government was the loan made to the Cunard Steamship Co. under the mail and Admiralty subvention contract of 1903. Under this contract the British Government loaned the steamship company £2,600,000 ($12,652,900) for the building of two steamers (the Lusitania and the Mauretania) that should be faster than any afloat and suitable for the use of the Admiralty. The loan was made at the rate of 2½ per cent, which is about 2 per cent lower than the rate at which the company could have borrowed a similar amount in the open market.

It is very likely the British Government could borrow money at a very low rate of interest at that time. Then the author further said:

The British Government is a stockholder in the Cunard Co. to the extent of one share and has a mortgage on its fleet and other property as a security for the loan. The Government has, moreover, the right to charter or purchase at agreed rates all or any of the company's vessels at any time, and requires that the company shall remain a purely British undertaking; that its management shall be in the hands of, and that its shares and vessels shall be held by, British subjects only; that it shall not give preferential rates to foreigners; and that it shall not unduly raise freights.

I think I have shown from the hearings, from an analysis of this statement, from the authorities which I have cited, even from Mr. Chamberlain himself, that the report is well within the limits when we estimate that the total subventions and aid to these so-called chief competitors of ours on the seas—England, France, Italy, and Japan—were $17,000,000 a year. If that is true, of course there can be no support for the claim that we must contribute two or three times that amount and donate that sum out of our Treasury in order to put us on an equal footing with those countries.

Referring to the Commerce Report of September 19, 1922, at page 837, anyone further interested in the subject of Japanese shipping bounties will find an interesting article by Mr. Chamberlain. It confirms the estimate which we have made at what he sets forth in his statement. We have made it in round figures, in our judgment, at $5,000,000, while he makes it at $4,831,411. Japan is not being very well pleased with the result of her subsidy even to that extent. Practically all aid nowadays made by the maritime powers to their shipping is in the way of mail subvention or postal contracts for carrying their mails overseas, and that we have been doing right along ever since 1891. As has been mentioned by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], the amount which we pay in that direction is far in excess of that paid by any other country in the world.

Now I pass to the next question raised concerning the success of the Panama Steamship Line and the United States Lines. In our report we have referred to those two Government-operated lines as doing a successful business. I have based my belief in the accuracy of that statement upon the testimony of witnesses taken before the committees of Congress. If we have come to a time when we should pay no more attention to the people who come here and appear before these committees and give their statements, then we might just as well abandon all hearings on bills referred to committees. We might cease to pay any attention to what witnesses say, and particularly when witnesses come here voluntarily and offer their statements in solemn hearings while we are making an earnest and conscientious effort to get at the truth and seek the development of facts.

If we can not depend upon the statements which appear there—which are uncontradicted, mind you—then I am at a loss to know upon what we can depend. I do not own any ships; I am not connected with the Panama Railroad Steamship Line and know nothing about its business; I am not connected with the United States Lines and know nothing of personal knowledge about them; but I have a right to ask information on the subject; and when the subject is under consideration by a committee of Congress I think I am justified in depending upon the uncontradicted statements of people who are supposed to be and who are reputable citizens.

What do we claim as the basis for the statement that those lines have been doing a successful business? I wish to call attention to the hearings. I will merely refer to page 363 and ask that the statement appearing there, which is entitled "Tentative statement of revenue and expenses of United States Lines, by services and by vessels, for four months ending December 30, 1921," with the note attached, may be inserted in the RECORD. I shall not take time to read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The table referred to is as follows:

NOTE.—The expenses do not include any charter hire, insurance, interest, depreciation, nor repairs made by United States Shipping Board, but do include all expenses incurred by United States Lines; also coal, oil, and advertising paid by United States Shipping Board as well as office rent and wharfage billed by United States Shipping Board.

Mr. FLETCHER. I now take the subject up at page 361 of the hearings. Mr. Rossbottom is on the witness stand, and he states:

The United States Lines is the creature of the Shipping Board. The Shipping Board owns the steamers. They were the steamers that had been chartered and sold on partial-time payments, I believe, to the United States Mail Steamship Co., to be operated between New York and European ports. Then when the United States Mail went into the hands of a receiver these steamers were thrown back on the Shipping Board, and the Shipping Board requested the Secretary of War to transfer me from the Panama Line to the United States Lines to manage the United States Lines until such time as the lines could be sold.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Are they really being operated then by the Shipping Board at the present time?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. They are being operated by the Shipping Board; yes. The names of the steamers are the George Washington, the America, the Princess Matoika, the Hudson, the Potomac, the Lone Star State, the Peninsular State, the Susquehanna, the Centennial State, the Old North State, the Blue Hen State, the Granite State, and the Panhandle State.

Mr. BANKHEAD. These represent about the best types that the Shipping Board own, do they not, Mr. Rossbottom?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Some of them represent the best and some of them represent the very worst.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In what particular do they represent the very worst?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. In plain language, I have what you might call a horse and a mule and a jackass team. [Laughter.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is what we call a "spike" team down in my country.

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. It is the worst kind of a team you could possibly have. I have got the George Washington, which is a real steamer; the America, which is a real steamer, and would be a real steamer today had it not been for the fact that the United States Mail Steamship Co., instead of restoring her to the condition in which the Germans left her, felt that they knew more about the steamship than the Germans did, and reconditioned her to such an extent that she is a mule now.

I have the Peninsular State and the Lone Star State, which are of the 535-foot type. Those steamers are very well adapted to South Atlantic trade, because they have fine accommodations first class, no second-class accommodations, and open steerage for third class. I have induced the Shipping Board to put in closed rooms for the third class. Those two steamers, which cost something like $7,000,000 apiece, are not fitted for the North Atlantic run. Their speed is satisfactory but they carry too few first cabins, no second cabins, and too few third class. The result is that I have the operating expense of a big ship and the operating revenue of a little ship.

Now, the five steamers that we operate in the London service, such as the Granite State and the Centennial State, they were in exactly the same situation. They are smaller. They operated at about 14 knots instead of 18, but they had luxurious first-class accommodations and no third class. Really they were cargo steamers and then the passenger accommodations were installed as sort of an afterthought.

The operating expense of those steamers is just about as heavy as the operating expense of a first-class passenger steamer, but the operating revenue is reduced from a passenger standpoint, because they can not accommodate the passengers. To offset that we have induced the Shipping Board to allow us to install additional berths in these first-class accommodations, so that all these London steamers now are what is known as the cabin type of steamer. Then also we are installing third-class accommodations. We are doing that with the idea of increasing our operating revenue.

The other steamers that I am operating to Bremen and to Dantzig, such as the Princess Matoika and the Hudson and the Potomac and the Susquehanna, are the old German tubs.

Mr. BANKHEAD. They are the jackasses?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Those are the jackasses. They are full fledged. Their operating expenses are enormous and I can not get any operating revenue out of them because people will not travel in them. The third-class accommodations are not fit for pigs to be stowed in, and the ships are old, the steel is crystallizing, and I have all kinds of expenses for repairs on them.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Has your Shipping Board got any vessels that they could put at your disposal that are superior in equipment to those?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Unfortunately they have not. Before I came with the United States Lines they assigned a number of these 535-foot steamers to the trans-Pacific run. If I had 535-foot steamers instead of the German tubs I could make some money in the Bremen run, even with the 535's, but I can not make enough money now out of the George Washington and out of the America to carry along the rest of my invalids.

Mr. BANKHEAD. You are making money with the George Washington and the America?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Yes; there is no question about that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is there a pretty good profit on those two ships under present conditions?

This is what Mr. Rossbottom says. He is testifying here as to the practical results of the operation of this line, of which he is general manager—

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Yes. Of course, in my operation I am not charged charter hire, interest, or depreciation. Those ships are owned by the Shipping Board.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is your average profit per run on those two first-class vessels, not charging in those items that you suggested?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Well, not charging in the interest, insurance, or depreciation, I can tell you just what they have been.

On voyage No. 2 of the George Washington my net operating revenue was $237,638; on voyage No. 3 it was $124,000; on voyage No. 4 is was $148,000.

On the America, voyage No. 3, the operating revenue was $120,000. I am just giving you round figures. On the next voyage of the America it was $49,000. On the next voyage of the America, $33,000.

My total operating revenue, for instance, for the four months ending December 31, for all the steamers in the Bremen service, was $686,292.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is that a statement that you have there of the operation of these vessels?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Yes.

Then follows the statement which I have asked to have inserted in the RECORD. It will be seen that that statement covers "all expenses incurred by the United States Lines; also coal, oil, and advertising paid by the United States Shipping Board, as well as office rent and wharfage billed by United States Shipping Board"; and it shows a net operating revenue of $535,259.43.

Mr. Rossbottom further, at page 376, referring to these tubs, as he calls them, says:

They ought not to be in the business, because their earning capacity is not sufficient.

Mr. HARDY. In other words, you can not make a profit out of the use of utensils or implements that are not fitted for the service and not proper to have in it?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. That is right. The angel Gabriel could not operate those steamers and make a profit out of them.

Mr. HARDY. You could not make a profit out of them, whether they were operated by the Government, by private owners, or public owners, or not?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. No. No man could make a profit out of them. It would be a crime to turn them over to a private operator until they are in a position to make a profit. Any private operator would go bankrupt in trying to operate them now.

Mr. HARDY. Then, your position is, so far as those steamers are concerned, they ought to be dropped out?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. The ones that we can not operate profitably?

Mr. HARDY. Yes.

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Yes. But now there are reasons of policy, of course, why they should be continued for the time being, until they secure other ships to take their place. For instance, the inauguration of an American line to London; there is no American line to London, excepting the United States Lines, and the policy of the Shipping Board, as outlined to me by Mr. Lasker, is that the Shipping Board, in compliance with the Jones Act, is quite willing to incur a loss to maintain a line of that kind until it can be operated profitably. As far as the Bremen service is concerned, if we gave up operating these three or four lame ducks, instead of operating a weekly service to Bremen we would be operating a service only about every 12 or 15 days.

Mr. HARDY. You said three or four of those lame ducks; can you name the ones that are not fitted?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Yes. The Potomac, the Princess Matoika, the Hudson, and the Susquehanna.

Mr. HARDY. Those four?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Those four.

Mr. HARDY. And they are of a kind that you do not think could be repaired and put in shape to make them profitable?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Yes, they can be; but it would be an enormous expense, and I doubt very much whether that expense would be justified, in view of the age of the ships.

Mr. HARDY. They are old and probably would cost more than they would be worth after they were repaired?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Those steamers, I think, are 20 or 21 years of age. It would cost you easily $300,000 to put them in a proper condition; and, after that is done, you could not sell them for $300,000.

Mr. HARDY. About what size are they?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. They are about—they range from 9,000 to 12,000 gross tons and are about 500 feet long.

Mr. HARDY. That would be about 15,000 dead-weight tons, would it not?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. About that.

Mr. HARDY. And it is your theory that we had better keep up some of the lines, even at a loss, than to abandon the vessels that are continually in service?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. I am not prepared to dispute the wisdom of that, unless other ships of those the Government possesses, some 1,400 steel vessels, can be found that are more adapted to that. How about that; are there any more suitable ships in the list of our some 3,000,000 tons of first-class shipping——

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Yes.

Mr. HARDY (continuing). That could be substituted in place of these unprofitable ships?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Are any of those ships now idle?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. They are.

Mr. HARDY. Is there any reason in the world why they should not be substituted and made to earn something, instead of using those that are earning nothing—that are losing money?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. The only reason is the cost of fitting them for the service. There are three steamers that I have in mind that if I had them in the United States Lines with the America and George Washington I would not take off my hat to anybody.

Mr. HARDY. You could run those ships under the present laws and make money out of them?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. If I had the Mount Vernon fitted for first, second, and third class passengers, the Agamemnon and the President Grant fitted as cabin steamers, those three steamers, with the George Washington and the America, would give the Shipping Board a real American fleet in the North Atlantic, so that when the time came to sell to private owners they would have something worth selling and the owner would have something worth buying; but it is going to take money, you know, to fit those steamers up. I do not know how much, probably $5,000,000 or $6,000,000.

Mr. HARDY. And you would have a record that could not be poohpoohed as showing the utter incapacity of our merchant marine under Government operation, would you not?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Either in Government operation or private operation those steamers would make money.

Mr. HARDY. They will make money if operated rightly?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Either under one or the other?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Did I understand you to say those ships that were profitable—the George Washington and two or three others, several others that you named—that you had helped to see they were properly equipped and fitted out?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. No. The George Washington—we have made some changes in her since I have been here. I have induced the Shipping Board to appropriate a sufficient amount of money to convert the open third-class steerage into closed rooms. That improvement will pay for itself in four months. I have also induced the Shipping Board to install third-class accommodations in the Peninsular State and the Lone Star State. I am only going to have those steamers for some four or five months, until they can turn over two other steamers to take their place. With open third-class steerage, I could not get one steerage passenger to sail on them, and I induced the Shipping Board to expend about $75,000, which I told them they could charge to my operating costs, and inside of four months we will have paid back the cost of installing those rooms and have about $50,000 to boot.

That is the result of Government operation, as stated by a man who knows the business. In his testimony he shows absolutely upon his own knowledge that they are making profits, even in spite of the fact that they have four old tubs which are 20 or 21 years of age, and for which he has been appealing to the Shipping Board to substitute good ships which are now in their possession. Why do they insist upon causing losses arising by the operation of unfit, improperly equipped ships when they have idle ships which could be put into that service? As Mr. Rossbottom says, if that were done, even without a subsidy, he would not take his hat off to anybody or to any country anywhere.

That is the plain language of Mr. Rossbottom's testimony. You can not escape it. He is as emphatic as he can be about it, and he knows what he is talking about. In spite of what appears to be an effort to make a failure out of that line by denying them the proper ships and insisting upon their operating these 20 and 21 year old tubs, and by playing politics in other ways with that line, he testifies that they are paying. Notwithstanding that every part and every branch and division of their bureau apparently is trying to make a failure of this line, they can not do it if they will only give this man a chance. He has already demonstrated and he says emphatically and positively that he can operate ships at a profit in that business without any question whatever, without any subsidy, if the ships are at all suitable for the business.

On page 377 he is asked:

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. That is making no charge for interest or depreciation or insurance.

Mr. HARDY. Making no charge for interest, depreciation, or insurance?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Or charter hire. I forgot to put that in. Of course, charter hire would take care of interest and depreciation, anyway.

Mr. HARDY. Yes. If you have interest, depreciation, and insurance, you would not put in the charter hire also?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. No.

Mr. HARDY. Making no charges for those items, in four months you had a net profit of some $635,000?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Net operating revenue; yes.

Mr. HARDY. And that notwithstanding you had some of those ships that were lame ducks and costing you money?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. That is right.

Do you say that is not a successful business? Do you say we have no right to claim that these people have been doing a profitable and successful business, in view of the testimony of Mr. Rossbottom?

On page 378 he gives this testimony:

Mr. HARDY. In this result you also counted in your depreciation, did you not?
Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. No.
Mr. HARDY. Nothing for interest, repairs, or depreciation?
Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Well, repairs.
Mr. HARDY. Nothing except the repairs you had done?
Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. The repairs we make are included in that. The repairs the Shipping Board make, through their engineer of maintenance, those are not included, because I do not get those until about six months later on. They will be charged up to me in the regular course, but I have not received them yet.
Mr. HARDY. They are part of your regular charges?
Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Yes.

That is with reference to the United States Lines; and it is the statement of Mr. Rossbottom, directly made in these answers to questions put to him, that justified, I contend, the averment in the minority report that these lines were being successfully operated.

With reference to the Panama Line, I quote Mr. Rossbottom again. Bear in mind that, upon orders of the War Department, Mr. Rossbottom was taken away from the Panama Line and put in charge of the United States Lines across the Atlantic. I refer to his testimony in these same hearings bearing on the Panama Line, at page 364:

Mr. BRIGGS. What experience did you have with reference to making money on those lines or losing money?
Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. We made money in the Panama Line up to about two years ago, when the depreciation in traffic and the reduction of rates resulted in a deficit, as it did with all other companies operating in that particular trade.
Mr. BRIGGS. Did you mean foreign as well as American lines?
Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Foreign as well as American.
Mr. BRIGGS. To what extent did you make a profit on the operation? Just give us an average; I don't care for details.
Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. I think year before last—I am a little bit hazy as to the exact figures—I think the Panama Railroad Steamship Line made something like about $1,400,000 or $1,500,000.
Mr. GREENE. I can hardly see what is to be gained from these questions, what few of them I have heard.
Mr. BRIGGS. I simply want to ask some of these questions, Mr. Chairman, of the steamship operator's experience and his ability and what he has done along these lines—what the lines he has been connected with have earned, etc.—just general terms. I am not asking for details, but simply asking for a few of the facts in connection with his operations, his experience as a steamship operator, and whether he has conducted his lines successfully or not.
Mr. HARDY. It is a constant statement here that the Government can not make any profit out of anything.
Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Last year I think the steamship line lost something like $500,000. The year before the profit was $1,500,000.
Mr. BRIGGS. How did it run prior to that time, if you recollect, prior to two years ago? Can you give the committee a general idea as to that?
Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Yes; the Panama Railroad Steamship Line ever since it started, with the exception of probably two years, always made a profit ranging from $89,000, which I think was the lowest, up to $400,000, which I think was the highest, up to the time of the beginning of the war.
Mr. BRIGGS. The profits were higher during the war period?
Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Yes, sir.
Mr. BRIGGS. About what return was that on the investment? Have you any idea?
Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. I think the average return on the investment of the Panama Railroad Co. in its ships ranged from 3 per cent up to probably 6 per cent, except during the war, when the return was higher.
Mr. BRIGGS. What was it then?
Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. It was then about 10 per cent.
Mr. BRIGGS. In figuring this per cent, do you include depreciation, interest charges, repairs, and things like that?
Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Oh, yes; we carried every charge that every other steamship line carries.

That is the language of Mr. Rossbottom with reference, now, to the Panama Steamship Line. He was the general manager. Do you say they were not successful? For the past 20 years, every year except two—one during the recent unprecedented depression, and the other several years ago, when they had a rate war on, and they came out with a deficit—18 years out of 20 they made a profit of all the way from eight or nine thousand dollars to $400,000 a year. Is not that a successful business? Nobody should question that, it seems to me.

With reference to the further testimony of Mr. Rossbottom on that subject, he was asked by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], a member of the committee:

Mr. Rossbottom, you said a moment ago, as I recollect it, that the Panama Canal Line is operating at a profit?
Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Yes.

Not "yes, if" or "yes, and," or "yes, but," but "yes."

Senator CALDER. Did you take into consideration the capital cost of the ships?
Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Yes.
Senator CALDER. And the interest upon the capital cost?
Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Yes.
Senator CALDER. In other words, you made a profit, allowing for interest charges?
Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Interest, depreciation, insurance, and repairs.
Mr. CULLEN. That was always a good money-making line, was it not, Mr. Rossbottom?
Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. It was.
Mr. CULLEN. The Panama Line, even before the war?
Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Yes.

In the face of that testimony are we justified in saying that they were doing a successful business? There is the man who had charge of it. Who wants to try to discredit the United States Lines and the Panama Line by saying that they have been failures, and thereby conclude that the Government is incapable of conducting a successful business or managing these ships without enormous loss and waste? These people seem to pride themselves whenever they can possibly demonstrate that they are burdening the people with insufferable losses, or making a most absolute and total failure of their efforts. I never before knew people to brag about their incompetency; and I can not understand, either, what prompts them on every occasion to try to pull down, underestimate, and undervalue this vast property which has been built up by the money of the taxpayers of this country.

If I have a horse for sale and I advertise him, and a purchaser appears, it is incumbent on me to let him look at the horse and tell him the facts about the horse, but if I say to him: "This is my horse, but he is one eyed, he is winded, he is wheezy, he can not eat anything, and he is liable to balk and stall the minute you start anywhere with him; what will you give me for him?" I am not likely to get many bids for a horse like that. These ships are only five years old, steel ships, with wonderful records of efficiency back of them—all of them, so far as I know, and I know the records of many of them—and yet these people want to say they are unfit and that about half of them are not good.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. If the Government shall grant these people these subsidies that they say will make the business so profitable, do they propose to give full price for the Government ships or do they demand that the Government ships shall be turned over to them for a bagatelle in comparison with what they are worth?

Mr. FLETCHER. They propose, then, to let them have them practically on their own terms. If they can not get $30 a ton they will probably take $20, and then they will give the purchasers all the time they want within 15 years to pay for them. They do not propose to ask anything like the real value of the ships. If they get approximately 10 per cent of the cost of each ship, I expect they will be satisfied. That is, of course, absurd—to insist that the Government shall give away the ships and then pay people to run them.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. I wonder if the remedy would not be to get somebody else to sell them?

Mr. FLETCHER. Well, of course, they have not been doing very much in that direction. I am not disposed to be very critical about that. I know that the world conditions are such that we found ourselves, as every other country did, with an excessive tonnage on hand, and we could not sell them; but what is the sense of sacrificing absolutely temporarily unsalable property? You often have property that you can not sell at once, but that does not mean that it is worthless. You may have to hold it for a while. We have idle ships because commerce is not moving. The ships are intended to carry commerce. This United States Lines is doing well. It has been carrying passengers and making a profit, as Mr. Rossbottom has said. The Government line to Panama is making a profit. They carry passengers. They are mixed cargo and passenger ships. A number of cargo ships are idle because there are no cargoes; and putting $50,000,000 into the pockets of a few shipowners will not create cargoes.

With reference to the compensation provided in this bill, I want to call attention to part of the minority report dealing with that matter. I do not believe that that has been questioned. So far as I am advised, this statement which we make in the report goes unchallenged:

For instance, a cargo ship of 5,500 gross tons, such as those vessels built at Hog Island, would receive a minimum compensation. Such a ship, along with practically 1,200 others—with practically 1,200 others, composing our cargo carriers, would have about 200 steaming days a year, and make about 200 miles a day, and receive the one-half-cent rate, which would amount to about $11,000 per annum.

The Associated Press carried that out as "12" all over the country—

That is the amount of compensation allowed for these cargo ships, what may be termed ordinarily as "tramps."

I want to call attention to a resolution passed December 7, 1922, by the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York. The report of the Chamber reads:

Your committee on the harbor and shipping is strongly impressed with the conditions confronting our merchant marine and is of the opinion, substantiated by the experiences of the world's most successful maritime nations, that no nation can create and maintain a merchant marine worthy of its standing as a first-class power without an adequate fleet of tramp ships; and that the establishment and upbuilding of tramp operation and management is the only apparent employment for the vast amount of Government-owned tonnage suitable in type for tramp-ship operation. Furthermore, a merchant marine based upon liner or semiliner service exclusively will not afford the flexibleness in ships necessary to meet adequately the seasonal demands for ocean transportation.

* * * * * * *

The commerce from our shores includes transportation of full shiploads of wheat, coal, oil, lumber, and other commodities of a similar nature. The commerce of our ports includes full shiploads of sugar, coffee, nitrate, etc. These commodities, because of our lack of tramp ships on the deep seas, are now largely carried by foreign vessels. These commodities, with others in part, form the backbone of a good many of our Nation's industries, and tramp ships should be operated to insure their proper and prompt movement.

* * * * * * *

Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York unqualifiedly urges the creation, maintenance, and management of tramp operations as an integral part of our merchant marine, and it recommends that the United States Shipping Board take immediate steps to develop tramp shipping; and, be it—

That is the very point I am making with reference to this bill. It is full of weaknesses. It is impossible as a whole. The weakness of its compensation provision, if we adopt any system of compensation at all, is that it takes care of passenger ships, liner service, and does not take care of the tramp ships, the ships we need.

I want to call attention to the Shipping Board's report, just issued, the Sixth Annual Report of the Shipping Board, page 99. Perhaps that was one thing which called forth this expression from the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York. Just as a preliminary statement, it would be of interest to quote this:

At the beginning of the fiscal year there were 97 managing agents operating 744 vessels. Owing to the falling off in export business and the tremendous losses involved as a consequence it was found necessary to reduce the number of vessels in operation and the active fleet was cut down during the year to 394 vessels as of June 30, 1922. This, of necessity, involved the elimination of a number of managing agents, who at the end of the fiscal year numbered 39.

In the interests of efficiency every effort was made to continue the same vessels as far as possible in the hands of the same managing agents in order that the agents, as well as the ship personnel, might become fully acquainted with the vessels and work them to their maximum earning capacity. There were times when substitutions were necessary by reason of vessels being forced out of position owing to accidents, delays, etc., but these substitutions were avoided wherever possible.

At the beginning of the fiscal year the above fleet was divided into two services, viz: The regular line service and the so-called tramp service. There were approximately 400 steamers operating in the regular line service and approximately 300 steamers in the so-called tramp service. It was evident from the beginning that these so-called tramp steamers were losing considerable money, and as no definite results could be attained in the interests of the American merchant marine by keeping these steamers in service they were promptly withdrawn and laid up, the board restricting its operation to the building up of regular trade routes considered essential to the future of the American merchant marine, as required by the merchant marine act, 1920.

Perhaps it was because of that announced policy on the part of the Shipping Board that this chamber of commerce awakened to the situation, and now make appeal to them to reverse that policy, or at least to be certain to take care of the "tramps," which they have laid up and taken out of the service. We had 300 of them in the service, they say. They are the ships which carry cargoes. They are the ships which do the world's trade. They have been from the very beginning of time the ships that carried the commodities of the world from market to market. They never were subsidized by any nation on earth, from the days when Tyre was a great Phœnecian port, up to this time.

Those ships are the very ships about which the Shipping Board does not seem to care anything at all. They are the ships upon which we must depend to take care of our trade. They take them out of the service and tie them up. The "tramps" carry nearly 80 per cent of the world's trade. They are the ones about which apparently this board cares nothing, and they are the ones which would get practically no benefit under this compensation clause. Who is going to buy a ship for hundreds of thousands of dollars simply because he has a prospect of getting $11,000 a year subsidy from the operation of that ship? That is all that is allowed the cargo carriers, about $11,000. I read from the minority views:

It is not conceivable that this amount would induce purchasers to acquire those ships or be a very material figure in their operations.

On the other hand, for instance, the George Washington, 25,000 gross tons, would receive approximately $300,000 per annum.

This ship on a recent voyage, just completed, made a profit over expenses of $140,000.

Think of that. We are asked to pass legislation putting in the pockets of the owners of the George Washington $300,000 a year, when on her last voyage, just completed, she cleared $140,000. They do not dispute that fact. Yet here are the idle cargo carriers lying at our docks, which may get only $11,000 a year under this compensation clause. I read further:

Is there any need for taxing the people $300,000 a year to be paid out of the Treasury to this particular ship directly when she is, even in present circumstances, able to make a profit of $140,000 per voyage?

I am dealing with figures which are down to date, not something which happened in 1919, 1920, or 1921, but in the present. I have been trying to get these people to bring the actual losses from operation down to date, not make guesses as to what is going to happen after September or October. These are actual figures. I read further:

Her sister ship—America—made a net profit of $45,000 on her last voyage, and she would receive out of the Treasury annually a gift of $300,000 under this bill.

These ships are 18½ knots, and it is estimated that they would sail 400 miles a day and have 220 sailing days, and they would receive 1.3 cents per gross ton for each 100 miles.

Does anybody question that? I have not heard anybody question it.

If these passenger ships carried mail they would receive the mail subsidy in addition to the compensation mentioned.

The Standard Oil Co. has approximately 100 ships, aggregating 700,000 gross tons. Even at the minimum rate they would receive, as the bill was introduced and reported—

That is what has been indorsed all over the country, and that is what the committee reported—a subsidy in the shape of direct compensation, it is called, of about $1,500,000 a year, notwithstanding they are engaged primarily in carrying products of their own. The bill was amended so as to eliminate this particular contribution to them as respects their own goods.

That is all. They get benefits besides that, but they are not allowed to enjoy this compensation, so much a ton per 100 miles, on their own goods. They were built to carry their goods. I read further:

The United States Steel Corporation has 35 ships, aggregating 200,000 gross tons. They are engaged in carrying their own products primarily, but they would receive out of the Treasury, as the bill was reported, and from this direct compensation, approximately $500,000 a year. This, too, was eliminated by amendments, as applied to their own products.

The United Fruit Co. has 22 ships, 100,000 gross tons. On this compensation basis they would receive, as the bill was reported, about $250,000 a year, although they were built and are operated primarily for the transportation of their own commodities. The amendment applied to these vessels respecting their own commodities.

The William Penn, 7,600 gross tons, our only ship equipped with the Diesel engine, recently made a voyage to the Orient, and her net profits were $30,000—her speed 10 knots.

The operating expenses of these ships equipped with the Diesel engine is about two-thirds of the oil or coal burners. The oil burner is generally cheaper than the coal.

Under this bill the Minnekahda, 17,281 gross tons, 16½ knots, would have a rate of compensation 1 cent, and her subsidy would amount to $150,000 a year. She is owned by the Atlantic Transport Line, affiliated with the International Mercantile Marine. We never understood they were in need of a subsidy or of any direct aid by way of compensation.

The Pacific Mail has 12 ships. They are rather slow and small, and they aggregate 60,000 gross tons, and the amount of compensation or direct subsidy for the entire fleet would be about $150,000 under this bill.

It will be seen that one ship of 17,281 gross tons would receive as much compensation as an entire fleet of 12 ships of the aggregate gross tonnage of 60,000 would receive.

The Leviathan will be entitled to receive of this direct compensation $1,250,000 per annum, which may be doubled.

That is the latitude they would have. Starting out with a contract on the Leviathan for $2,250,000, make that contract for 10 years and before it expires make it for 5 years more, and you have $2,250,000; for 10 years, $22,500,000, given to the Leviathan, and possibly half as much in addition within the 15 years.

The liners—the passenger ships—are most liberally provided for, but even under the theory of the bill there is a neglect of the cargo carriers—the trading ships—the ships which move the world's commerce and have done it from time immemorial and are continuing to do it to-day, as this resolution which has just come to my hands to-day from the Chamber of Commerce of New York recites. Yet the Shipping Board is deliberately tying up every one of those ships, taking them out of the trade, and confining themselves to liner operations.

I think I have clearly demonstrated that what we have said in the minority report with reference to the successful business of the Panama Railroad Steamship Line and the United States Lines is fully borne out by the testimony before our committees; that what we have said about subsidies in that report is likewise borne out, as is what we have said with regard to the losses from operations not being clearly stated. However, I want to make one other reference in connection with the operation of the Panama Steamship Line, and that is found on page 2452 of the hearings. A statement there appears showing the result of the operation of the Panama Steamship Line from 1911 to 1920, inclusive, and I ask to have that statement included in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BALL in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

Statement showing result of operations of the Panama Railroad Steamship Line from 1911 to 1920, inclusive.

Year.	Net revenue.		Net income.
	Profit.	Deficit.	Profit.	Deficit.

Mr. FLETCHER. There are some statements in the hearings, made a part of the hearings, with reference to that subject, but they would be merely cumulative. I have already put in the RECORD the positive statement of Mr. Rossbottom, and I do not need to burden the RECORD by referring to other hearings at different times where the subject was considered and which simply bear out and confirm what he said before the committee which was considering this particular bill.

Yes, Mr. President, we need a merchant marine, but that is not the same thing as saying we need to give a subsidy of at least $30,000,000 a year for 15 years to induce a few people to own and operate it. Emphatically, we need a merchant marine. With equal emphasis I say a subsidy bill will not give it to us. It never has given it to us or to any other country. One way we may judge of the future is by the past. One lesson we ought to remember is the one we learned by experience. Another way of getting knowledge is by the study of the experience of others. These lessons are the same. Subsidies never established a permanent, substantial merchant marine for any country. There are many factors essential to establishing a merchant marine—banking facilities in foreign countries, competent commercial agencies, energetic representatives, proper organizations, representatives at all important ports with power to adjust differences, settle claims, speed operations, handle papers, place insurance, conduct financial arrangements, men who know the business. Much deeper than subsidy we must go to develop competitive strength in our shipping. A temporary stimulant will not accomplish the object.

But there are people who say we must do something. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] said, "If you do not like this, propose something else." My contention is that we did propose something else in the merchant marine act of 1920, and that all that is needed is to live up to and enforce the provisions of that act. When departure in policy is proposed it is not incumbent upon those who propose it to demand of those who believe it unwise and vicious and unsound that they shall compromise with it by offering amendments. The only answer is its opposition and defeat.

But there are others who say, "You ought to do something. We are in a bad situation." All right; we are doing something. We have the act of 1920, as I have said. We have the ships. About one-third of them are being operated. Some of those are making a profit. They are earning considerably more than their expenses. Their earnings exceed every legitimate charge against them. They are not interfering with privately owned ships. Let us continue them in that service.

Others are losing money. Unless they are employed on new routes which give promise of a growing trade which will soon show a profit of transportation, they should be tied up. If they can be chartered on a bare boat basis, let us do that. It is an inexcusable waste to employ 100 vessels to do the work of 10. The vessels tied up are available to meet the demand when it comes. As sure as time elapses there will be an increase in foreign trade. We are now at a low ebb, if not the lowest ebb, and there is an excess of tonnage. There were two successful Government organizations, as we have shown—the Panama Steamship Co. and the United States Lines. The ships that are causing losses so loudly proclaimed should be turned over to them. Stop the losses in that way. If that is not feasible, let the Government directly operate those ships just as it is doing the United States Lines, which is not suffering losses. It is a question of proper administration and efficient management.

As to idle ships, it is a question of cargoes, and they will not be forthcoming by paying money out of the Treasury to a few owners or operators. It is folly to tax the people to pay a few owners to sail empty ships flying our flag. When trade revives, overseas business improves, and commerce increases there will be a demand for those ships, and we can then dispose of them to advantage. I venture the prediction that within three years the ships we now offer at $30 per ton will be worth $70 per ton.

This will come about by natural and economic causes, not by any subsidy. Unless that happens before November, 1924, the party in power need not go to the trouble of putting up a ticket in the next national election. If they add this subsidy to the tax already bearing down the taxpayers, they may make the false claim that such a step hastened and increased the revival of commerce and of business prosperity, in which case the taxpayers may well say, "We are paying for that increase in good money, and we see nothing gained by taking money out of one pocket and putting it in the other." There will be an increase in trade, but it will not be due to any subsidy, no matter what it may be made.

I have said there is no need of keeping up the losses which it is claimed we are suffering. Nothing but stupidity, or determination to see failure, or reckless disregard by interests or bad management or some unnecessary condition could produce any such losses as are asserted.

We could tie up every vessel we own, care for them, keep up their classification, and insure them for not to exceed $12,000,000 a year. That would then be the outside maximum loss if every ship the Government so owned was put out of commission and tied up. We could apportion them to the 22 or more deep-water ports of the country, keep them in fresh water, and have them properly cared for, ready for charter or sale or use on short notice, at a total cost not exceeding $12,000,000 a year. As cargoes offered, as merchants, shippers, or others develop the business the vessels would be available for profitable employment. We showed a condition like that on yesterday when we discussed the use of our ships at the time of the great emergency in bringing coal to our people from England.

All the while we would have the satisfaction of knowing that we were not dependent upon any foreign country to move our products, commodities, or goods to foreign markets, or to bring to us the things we need. Nor would we be wanting in merchant ships should they be needed to serve with our Navy. When opportunity arose, as demand developed, when conditions warranted, the vessels would come out, enter upon employment, serve our commerce, and make profits which would go into the Treasury to be credited on the expense of the care and upkeep of the fleet. There are numerous ways to stop the loss so loudly proclaimed if those in charge of affairs would only see something besides the MO 4 contracts.

Mr. President, I have heretofore made some reference to those contracts; they are mentioned in the views of the minority on the pending bill; but there is a feature of them which I have not before mentioned and as to which I beg to use the name of a distinguished Member of the other House, a member of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, who attended very diligently to the hearings, Judge DAVIS. In his able speech on this bill he mentions a matter which had escaped me until I read it again to-day and which adds to the enormous cost of the MO 4 contracts. I beg leave to quote from his speech at page 147 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of November 4. Referring to Chairman Lasker not having changed the MO 4 contracts, he says:

> He has not only made such change but he called the managing agents of Shipping Board vessels together in Washington, June 21, 1922, and voluntarily adopted and announced a policy of paying such managing agents additional compensation in the shape of husbanding fees, under which since that time operators handling 5 vessels or less receive $400 per month per ship in addition to the regular commission previously paid, and operators handling up to 10 vessels receive $400 per month per ship for the first 5 ships and $250 per month for each additional ship. It was announced by the Shipping Board at the time that this allowance of husbanding fees would add $1,200,000 annually to the cost of operations, but it was estimated that more than this amount would be saved by new arrangements for subsistence—the allowance for subsistence being reduced from 80 cents to 65 cents per day per man at that time—stevedoring, and general supplies.
> Why should not the taxpayers have been given the benefit of such savings? Why were these additional voluntary bounties given to the managing agents, and by what authority? Was it done for the purpose of preventing a showing of profits, to the end that they might make out a stronger case for this ship subsidy bill?

There we have a continuance of the iniquitous MO 4 contracts by which the Shipping Board stands all the losses, the operating agents get 5 per cent commission on the business, and they are given here this additional amount, which is called "husbanding fees," besides. That is a monstrous thing. While I have Judge DAVIS's speech before me in connection with the testimony of Mr. Rossbottom, I wish to quote from his speech also, at page 137, November 24, as follows:

The Shipping Board is operating but 13 ships directly, or at least that was the number operating at the time of the hearings. They are operated in the name of the United States Lines, of which Thomas H. Rossbottom is manager on a salary of $10,000 per annum. He is managing it for the Shipping Board, and although he has been operating these vessels in the North Atlantic trade, which is recognized as embracing the sharpest and the most pronounced competition of any section of shipping in the world, and although in part he was operating some "old German tubs," as he termed them, 21 years old, which he said no man could operate at a profit anywhere, yet with a few good vessels he has been operating the fleet at a substantial profit, and that, too, under the worst depression in the history of shipping and in competition with the strongest maritime nations on earth.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Oh, I know the gentleman from Pennsylvania is going to say that that did not include interest on the investment.

Mr. EDMONDS. And depreciation and advertising.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. It included advertising. Mr. Rossbottom said that it did include advertising, but the profits he reported did not deduct anything for interest and depreciation. But the profit was sufficient to count and overcome interest and depreciation and still leave a profit, and he said if they would give him all the fleet like some of the ships he had he would not take off his hat to any nation on earth under any conditions. [Applause.]

You will find these facts fully stated in the hearings, and in this connection I want to say that if every Member of the House would read the hearings from beginning to end I know that this bill would not have any more chance of passage through this House than the proverbial snowball.

I have already referred to these alleged losses, and without going into that any further I desire to say that it seems to me we must appreciate that in any case these losses, whatever they may be, need not continue. They furnish no argument of justification for any subsidy whether they are maintained or lessened or not.

With reference to some other provisions of the bill, for instance, that with regard to the Army and Navy transports, I desire to say that one would suppose the Shipping Board had enough ships on their hands; one would suppose they would shy at taking over any more. They groan over the burden of tonnage which they wish to get rid of; they fairly boast of the terrific losses incurred in operating the ships; apparently the greater the loss the greater the glee; and yet they ask in this bill that with respect to the Army and Navy transports which have been rendering splendid service, economically and efficiently, the President be authorized to transfer to the board or to place out of commission any of the vessels now or hereafter engaged in either of such services.

I wonder if this board will not next ask us to have the Panama Steamship Line turned over to them. The audacity and assurance of an organization which shrieks its inability to operate ships without tremendous loss and enormous drains on the Treasury, and proves it to the satisfaction of the public, wanting to take over ships from the Army and Navy, both of which deny that they are incapable or incompetent, and certainly do not confess and establish and publish that they are, makes one gasp and wonder what next.

The joint committee sought to prove, and their information was it could be clearly shown, that the discontinuance of the Army and Navy transport service and the making of contracts with private parties, which such a discontinuance would bring about, would cost the taxpayers $5,000,000 a year. The majority of the committee refused to summon the witnesses by whom it is believed these facts could be fully established. Title V, section 501, of the bill will work that benefit to private shipping concerns at a cost to the Treasury approaching $5,000,000 per annum.

CONSTRUCTIVE PROGRAM.

There are those who say: "Propose something to help us get rid of or utilize these idle ships; suggest some constructive program." Very well; I have done that in what I have said. Abolish this organization that proclaims its failure and turn the ships over to real Government operators who have demonstrated their ability to make a success of what they undertake in the use and management of merchant ships. Otherwise reduce the enormous and unnecessary overhead; discontinue the MO 4 contracts, and operate directly the profit-producing ships and tie the others up for the present. Otherwise distribute them to the different ports, care for them, and encourage the ports to take advantage of them, and get them in service as soon as possible. Either of these processes will put a stop to the harrowing losses which are stressed as a basis for subsidy raids.

Let us consider what has been taking place while subsidists have been engaged industriously in circulating and publishing propaganda to support their designs on the Treasury. They have deterred investment in shipping securities for years past by proclaiming that Americans can not compete with foreigners in the operation of ships; they have discouraged people from buying our ships now by saying that many of them are poorly constructed and will have to be readjusted and reequipped and refurnished; they have for years discouraged and restrained financial interests from assisting in any way in the development of the shipping industry and the shipping business in this country, waiting, and laying the foundation for their appeal for governmental aid and subsidies.

Without any subsidy whatever—and this is what we have seen—the privately owned American mercantile marine has been making progress unequaled by any maritime power in the world. Apparently no one knows that. According to the arguments and the advertising statements of the subsidists, America is in a pitiable plight respecting her shipping interests. Let us look at the statistics on that subject for a moment. Referring, for instance, to the sixth annual report of the Shipping Board, we find under the head "Total United States merchant marine and tonnage employed in foreign trade," at page 111, that in the year 1800 our total merchant marine was 1,458,738 dead-weight tons, of which in the foreign trade 1,000,661 tons were employed. Of course, those were years when American ships were carrying a very large proportion of our trade. In those times American ships were about 30 or 40 tons, and they sailed around the Horn—brave, energetic fellows—and pushed our trade into China, where the most we had to offer was ginseng and rum, and brought back from China tea, silk, and like commodities. In other words, our trade in those days was comparatively small and the American ships carried a relatively large proportion of it.

I wish to put the whole table in the RECORD, not the illustrations, but merely the figures as to the total merchant marine and tonnage in foreign trade and the years as the figures are given on page 111 of the report.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Total United States merchant marine and tonnage employed in foreign trade.

Fiscal year.	Total dead-weight tonnage, merchant marine.	Dead-weight tonnage in foreign trade.
1800	1,458,738	1,000,661
1810	2,137,175	1,471,529
1830	1,920,251	874,486
1840	1,787,664	808,345
1860	3,271,146	1,144,257
1850	5,303,181	2,159,544
1860	8,030,902	3,569,094

1920	25,027,342	15,602,631
1921	27,538,464	16,819,943

Mr. FLETCHER. In 1922 our total merchant marine was 27,784,989 dead-weight tons, and in the foreign trade 16,279,371 dead-weight tons were engaged. That means, I take it, that we have that amount of tonnage registered and documented for the foreign trade; it does not mean that that tonnage is actually engaged in the foreign trade, and, to that extent, the statement may be a little misleading.

Then, on page 117 of this report we have a statement showing United States shipping in foreign trade. The black lines indicate the percentage by value carried in American bottoms and the white lines the percentage by value carried in foreign bottoms. Without the illustrations, I should be glad to insert this table in the RECORD, giving the years, the value in millions of exports and imports, and the percentages marked "Foreign" and marked "American."

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, on the subject of the growth and development of the American merchant marine I wish to put in first the statement by Mr. Lasker, as chairman, dated December 2, 1922, in answer to certain questions which I propounded to him at that time. Among other facts it shows that they are operating now 410 vessels, with a total dead-weight tonnage of 3,348,619. That is the dead-weight tonnage of the Shipping Board now being operated. Therefore, assuming that all that is engaged in foreign commerce—it is not, but just for the moment let us suppose that it is—we may be able to reach a more or less definite conclusion as to how much privately owned American tonnage is engaged in foreign trade.

Referring to the report of the Department of Commerce, Bureau of Navigation, November 1, 1922, giving American documented seagoing merchant vessels of 500 gross tons or over, we find, at page 40, a table headed, "Comparison of trade of vessels in the preceding list on specified days." It gives the total number of American seagoing vessels in foreign trade as 2,219; tonnage, 9,717,356. Total number in the coasting trade, 1,391; gross tonnage, 2,542,923. The total number of American vessels, therefore, registered and documented, is 3,610, with a gross tonnage of 13,200,279. If we should deduct the 3,348,619 dead-weight tons operated by the Shipping Board, we would have in foreign trade American vessels of 9,717,356 tons less 3,348,619, being 6,368,737 tons of American shipping engaged in foreign trade. That, however, is somewhat misleading, I am afraid, and it is very difficult, if not impossible, to know exactly what tonnage we have under our flag in foreign trade; but all of those vessels so registered and documented are not engaged in foreign trade. Some of them are engaged in coastwise trade, although they are qualified to engage in the foreign trade.

I offer this complete table, furnished me by the Shipping Board and carrying the information that it purports to carry in response to the questions propounded, showing the situation to-day concerning the Government-owned vessels. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD at the close of my remarks, marked with the initials of the Shipping Board, "S. B.," together with the letter of transmittal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the table and letter will be printed at the close of the Senator's remarks.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then I offer, to be printed in the RECORD, a copy from the Bulletin of the Department of Commerce, Bureau of Navigation, November 1, 1922, showing the list of American-documented, seagoing merchant vessels of 1,000 gross tons and over. Without troubling to read it, I ask that that be inserted in the RECORD, following the other statement, marked "A"; also "B," attached; also "C," attached; also "D," attached.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then a further statement showing world tonnage at different dates—world tankers, world oil burners—and a comparison of ownership of documented vessels on specified dates; and attached to that is a copy of the statistics furnished in this Commerce Report, which I ask also to be attached as a part of my remarks at the close.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, they will be incorporated as requested.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I submit that these data contradict any sort of inference that the United States is in a bad way regarding the American merchant marine; and all this has been built up without any subsidy, if we may for the moment disregard the mail-contract subvention which we have heretofore referred to. There has been no subsidy policy adopted by the Government. These statistics will show what our shipping was in 1914 and what it is to-day. They will show the development in a really marvelous way of American shipping interests. The American mercantile marine privately owned in overseas trade, I submit, has been "doing fairly well, thank you," and winning its own way standing on its own sea legs, and, I am persuaded, needs to ask no favors. All it wants is for Congress to cease hindering and hampering it by such provisions as the amendment to the tariff bill whereby it is proposed to tax American ships 50 per cent on repairs they may make in foreign yards, thereby increasing their insurance and adding to their operating cost.

Most of the American lines, coastwise and foreign, have increased their fleets out of the profits they have made. I know that is denied in some quarters. It has been claimed that many of these private lines are losing money, and have been losing money for some time past. An illustration was made of a certain line that was claimed to have charged off to profit and loss $1,500,000 last year, or something like that. The truth about it is that that line did not lose that money in operating ships at all but in respect to some oil speculations and pipe lines in France.

The facts in connection with how these American privately owned lines are succeeding appear pretty well in these hearings. Eight men owning ships testified before the committee. Not one of them claimed that they were losing money. No one asserted any such thing as that. I have here, in response to that statement which has been made and published in the RECORD, a letter from Mr. Philip Manson, dated December 13, which has just reached me, in which he refers to some of these statements, and particularly a statement made by Mr. Craemer, who is the special assistant to the vice president in charge of finance, I believe. He analyzes Mr. Craemer's statement, and I think I will take the liberty of quoting from what Mr. Manson writes, because he has been a student of this subject for years; he has had experience in shipping and keeps thoroughly well posted about what is going on. He writes:

Craemer says that "the profits earned by American shipowners during the war were restricted by governmental action, so that the return on his investment was very materially less than that earned by his foreign competitors." Governmental restrictions on the earnings of American shipping took place only after we entered the war. For nearly four years American ships were totally unrestricted as to earnings, and the highest rates were charged by American ships. Great Britain's shipping, the only competitor we need consider, was restricted all through the war and was commandeered by the British Government upon terms very much less favorable to the owners than was the case with American shipping when our Government, functioning through the dollar-a-year advisors, consisting of the principal steamship owners themselves, fixed the compensation for their own ships. One could write volumes on this, and it is particularly aggravating to have a Shipping Board official now falsify the facts in aid of the infamous subsidy bill. He says further that "during the period of the highest freights all American ocean-going tonnage was under requisition to the Government and the owners' return limited thereunder to the comparatively moderate charter rates established by the Shipping Board." This statement is misleading in two respects: The highest rates prevailed during the period prior to our entry into the war, and the charter rates established by the Shipping Board, as I have already stated, were far from being moderate.

Craemer says that "Government taxation reduced the earnings of the American owner to a point far below that of his foreign competitors." Our taxation never approached in severity that of Great Britain.

In his attempt to show the meagerness of the earnings of American steamship companies Craemer shows that during the last six years, including the bad year of 1921, the Atlantic, Gulf & West Indies Steamship Co. averaged only 8.52 per cent on its "invested capital," in which he includes over $28,000,000 stock, all water. The actual invested capital of that company would fall far short of its bond issue, which totals only $24,000,000 in round figures.

Craemer also repeats the buncombe regarding the change in the par value of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. stock from its former utterly fictitious figure of $100 a share to $5 a share, and says that this was done to wipe out a deficit. This is utterly false. The cash distributed by that company to its stockholders from the proceeds of the sale of its fleet of ships to the I. M. M. Co. was far more than the real worth of that stock, reckoned on a basis of invested capital, and the changing of the par value of that stock afterwards was purely a bookkeeping transaction. In fact, the stock sold for more than $40 a share for a long time after the change to $5 par. This company also averaged a "beggarly" return of only 18.50 per cent during the last five years, including the bad year of 1921, when most companies showed losses, this being true for 1921 of practically all commercial companies as well as steamship companies.

Then Craemer says, referring to the earnings of the I. M. M. Co., that its earnings during the last four years averaged 8.01 per cent on its "invested capital," and the value of his statements is indicated by the fact that he includes in the "invested capital" of the I. M. M. Co. a total of about $100,000,000 common and preferred stock, all of which is sheer water.

Then, after showing average earnings of 16.38 per cent for the United Fruit Co. during the last seven years, he undertakes to belittle that by saying that it is mostly from other than shipping operations. The fact, however, is that its shipping business, no matter what proportion it bears to the whole, is its most profitable business.

He winds up his bunk statement, to use one of Lasker's characteristic expressions, by saying that other industries earned larger profits during the war, as if that made any difference, even if it were true. He also attempts to make capital of the fact that the common stock of the I. M. M. Co.—all the most worthless water, having value only for its voting rights—has never paid a dividend, and the dividends of the preferred stock of this company being 42 per cent arrears, although that stock is also all water. He makes similar argument in regard to the common and preferred stock of the A. G. W. I. Lines, which, he says, have had dividends for only a few years, the fact, however, being that these stocks are also water and represent no actual money investment. Of the Luckenbach Line he says: "The Luckenbach Steamship Co. has never declared a dividend." This must be a trick play on the word "declared," because everyone knows that the Luckenbachs have made millions during and after the war, and are constantly adding new ships to their extensive fleet even now, notwithstanding that subsidists say that it is impossible to operate ships under the American flag. The recent hearings before the joint committee contain evidence as to the very large earnings of the Luckenbach Steamship Co. The statement regarding the Luckenbach Line in Craemer's letter is, however, characteristic of the dishonest character of nearly everything else stated in that letter.

He (Craemer) also refers to the fact that the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. has paid dividends during only 9 of 49 years of its existence—that is, the last 49 years. As you know, I have several times exposed, before committees of Congress and in the public press, the manner in which the stockholders were swindled out of their dividends for many years by the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. when it was controlled by the Southern Pacific Railroad Co., so I will not take the time or space to repeat it again here.

That bears on the question of disabusing the mind of the public regarding these losses, or claimed losses, that private shipping has been enduring. As a matter of fact, the shipping business has been a very profitable business in this country, and many of these lines have made enormous amounts of money. They did before the war. However, I am putting in this material to show that American shipping has developed and prospered wonderfully in the past years, since 1914 particularly, and that without any subsidy whatever. Just now some of them feel the depression. In some instances they must pass dividends, but that is the case all over the world. "Normalcy" approaches with divers' weights, but conditions ere long will become either very much better or very much worse. In either case subsidy will not be effective.

It has been charged by ardent advocates, propagandists, and subsidy-soliciting beneficiaries that opponents of this measure are actuated by partisan political motives or prejudices. This is really unworthy of notice. The chairman of the committee has stated that the bill raises questions about which honest men differ, and which are clearly controversial in their nature. I have advocated for 10 years the importance, and, as I saw it, the necessity, of building up and establishing an adequate American merchant marine. It is simply a question of the ways and means of accomplishing that end. We all agree on what is desired. How to do it is the question.

I have always opposed subsidy as a policy. I do not believe in the principle. I am convinced, and have always been of that thought, that subsidy will retard, not establish, a mercantile marine. I have studied the history of subsidies, and in my judgment the countries which have done most in that direction have accomplished least. Farmers' organizations throughout the country are against subsidy, and have declared against this measure. That confirms and enforces the views I hold. The American Federation of Labor is strongly against the bill. That, again, does not change my view of the matter; it accords with the conception which I have formed.

Neither is it because the Democratic Party in its platforms has repeatedly declared against subsidy as a policy of the Government that I hold to the view expressed in a speech here last July, and to the minority views set forth regarding this very bill. Numerous disinterested newspapers earnestly oppose this measure and protest against it. All these forces simply tend to confirm my conviction that the policy is wrong.

In that connection I noticed recently in the Washington Times of December 11, 1922, what appears to be a sort of change of heart or mind. Heretofore this publication has been urging the passage of this subsidy bill. In this editorial they say:

> The Government of the United States should establish the first navy of democracy and go into public ownership of seagoing vessels on the most gigantic scale.

How are you going into public ownership of vessels when the purpose here is to have all vessels pass to private hands? I read further from this editorial:

> This Nation should do its own carrying, and the carriers—great ships of high power and high speed—should each of them have on shore a sufficient number of cannon and movable steel decks to be used in case of attack.
> The Government should have on lakes and rivers boats of the highest speed, earning a living. They could carry passengers, carry the mail. They should be equipped with torpedo tubes.

That does not sound like what they have been heretofore advocating, it seems to me; at least, that is what I claim. We are not losing anything when the United States Government has and owns these ships, and until the time comes when they can be reasonably and properly turned over to private hands we are in position to be independent as to our shipping, protect ourselves in time of trouble, and take care of our commerce in time of peace.

I believe the principle asserted by the bill is unsound and unwise, and that the legislation will result in harm to our shipping industry. It itself defeats the purpose of its advocates, and it will hold back rather than help the progress and proper development of our merchant marine. It will cause the concentration of ships in a few hands, where they will be used to enrich their owners rather than serve American commerce.

It will cause the focusing of routes of trade in a few selected ports against the interests of interior shippers and to the destruction of other important ports along our stretch of ocean and gulf coasts. It offers a premium on inefficiency. It vests the power of life and death over ports and terminals, over routes and shipowners and shipbuilders, in a board which might exercise that power in a way that would be destructive of the general good and the public interest. It contains provisions particularly vicious and indefensible, in that it permanently appropriates (page 25 of the bill, subdivision (d)) all moneys in the merchant marine fund for the purpose of making payments for compensation contracted for within the limits of $30,000,000 a year, and the refunds of overpayments as mentioned in the bill.

In this merchant marine fund will be all the tonnage duties, tonnage taxes, or light money, amounting to approximately $4,000,000 a year; also 10 per cent of the amount of all customs duties paid under law, which will doubtless approximate $45,000,000 a year; also 50 per cent of the earnings in excess of 10 per cent net, the amount of which is questionable. These funds are by this bill permanently appropriated for 10 years with authority in the Shipping Board to continue it for five years more, to be expended on the orders of the Shipping Board, with no power or right or authority reserved to Congress over such funds during that period. Thus $450,000,000 are, in effect, appropriated and placed at the disposal of the Shipping Board, to be disposed of as it sees fit in the making of contracts for subsidy with the various applicants.

Another provision allows the board to double the subsidy contracted for, and in case the subsidy is increased outside the contract, or without a contract, Congress will have the poor privilege of making appropriations to cover such increases.

The House provision, at page 23 of the bill, line 18, provides:

> No expenditures shall be made from the "merchant marine fund" except out of the appropriations made annually therefrom by Congress for carrying out the purposes of this act.

That the committee proposes to strike out. A very substantial and vital change is reported by the committee in that respect. It destroys all control by Congress over the disposition of that merchant marine fund. Striking that amendment out makes it necessary to insert, on page 25, line 16, the word "permanently," and to strike out the words "authorized to." Then inserting the proviso in section 410 "that no expenditures shall be made from the merchant marine fund because of any increased compensation granted under the terms of paragraph (c) of section 410, except out of the appropriations made annually therefrom by Congress," is really a species of camouflage. There is nothing substantial in that amendment. All the Shipping Board has to do to make it utterly a nullity and valueless is to put in their contracts provisions for such increases as they think they may be possibly prompted to make hereafter. This simply provides for such increases as are made outside of the contract or where there is no contract; but where there is a contract which in itself provides for increases that provision does not apply, and all the Shipping Board has to do is to put into each contract a specification as to the amount of compensation and then provide for such increases as the board may think in the future it may make. So there is nothing of any value in that amendment. No substantial change of any material moment is made by the adoption of it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the Senator permit an observation there?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I just want to say to the Senator that I do not agree with his construction of that provision, but if his construction is correct, or if there is any doubt about it, I am in favor of making it perfectly plain, because it was not my intention, at least, that that provision should be gotten around by a mere provision in a contract. If there is any doubt about that I am in favor of making it perfectly clear.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am glad to hear the chairman say that. I am quite sure that if he studies it very carefully he will reach the same conclusion I have reached about it, and I hope he may be able to modify the amendment so as to reach the view he has of it, but as it is framed at present it seems to me utterly worthless.

The appropriation is permanently made for 15 years to take care of such increases as they may decide to make and as they could make if they make mention of them in the contracts. Other benefits of the bill I will not take the time now to review. I call to mind, first, the mail monopoly, $5,000,000 benefit to American ships. Second, the loan fund at 4½ per cent. Third, insurance; a good deal of help is provided under that provision. Fourth, reduction of taxes by reason of depreciation, wear and tear, and obsolescence. It is unusual to make an allowance for obsolescence, which may be deducted. Then the most extraordinary provision under the head of depreciation is that allowance may be deducted for decline in value of the ships. In other words, AB bought ships in 1914, we will say, and paid $200 a ton for them.

To-day the market value of those ships is $30 a ton; and it will not be over that, because we are fixing the market price of ships when we are offering our tonnage at $30 a ton. Now, AB comes in and says, "My income this year was $100,000, but the depreciation in the value of my ships from $200 a ton down to $30 a ton wipes out that $100,000." That is the meaning of that provision.

Fifth, direct compensation. Thirty million dollars a year is appropriated out of that fund, and it may amount to $45,000,000 from duties and $4,000,000 from tonnage dues, making $49,000,000. Besides that there may possibly be some further excess profits above 10 per cent. I do not figure much on that, because they can well manipulate that by increasing salaries and otherwise.

Sixth, immigration. That is a very helpful provision in the bill if we can carry it out, and I can see no reason why we could not. Mr. Rossbottom in his testimony regards that as the one essential thing. That is the only help he has ever suggested to American shipping—to provide a way whereby American ships should bring immigrants to this country.

Seventh. Officers and supplies of the Government must all be carried in American ships. That is another provision of a helpful nature—the Army and Navy transport provision providing that hereafter those transports must be taken out of that service and turned over to the Shipping Board or tied up and all supplies, officers, men, and so forth, must be carried hereafter in private ships under private contracts. There would be $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 a year more.

Ninth. Through routes by rail or water from shipping point to destination and the foreign bills of lading provision are of value to American shipping.

I have no objection to things of that kind; that we ought to provide for and I think we have done so in the merchant marine act of 1920. Then we ought to stop, as I said, hindering and hampering and interfering with our merchant ships by imposing such duties as 50 per cent of the cost of repairs in foreign ports on American vessels, and other things of that sort.

Mr. President, I may have a few observations to make a little later on with reference to some phases of the question which have escaped me in the discussion up to this time, but at present I feel that I ought not longer to tax the patience of the Senate, and therefore I yield the floor.

APPENDIX.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
Washington, December 2, 1922.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I regret that I have not been able earlier to furnish you with the information requested in your letter of November 25. I was anxious for you to have just as complete information on the questions raised as possible, and the necessity for compiling this information, together with the demands on the departments concerned to furnish information to Members of the House who were actively directing the shipping bill during the last several days, has occasioned the delay. I hope it has not inconvenienced you.

The answers are given on the attached sheet.

With kindest regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

FINANCIAL AFFAIRS OF EUROPEAN STATES (S. DOC. 274).

Mr. LODGE. There was sent in by the President in response to Senate Resolution 208, of January 16, 1922, information regarding the revenues, expenditures, and deficits of the European States. It was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is a very valuable and important collection of statistics relating to the revenues, expenditures, and deficits of European States. I report it back and move that it be printed as a Senate document.

The motion was agreed to.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13316) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 947) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

MEMORIAL BRIDGE ACROSS DELAWARE RIVER.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There was passed to-day Senate Joint Resolution 249, which I think was passed under the apprehension that it was an ordinary bridge bill. It is in fact a bill appropriating $400,000 for the Government of the United States to act in conjunction with New Jersey and Pennsylvania in the building of a memorial bridge. The introducer of the joint resolution has agreed that the vote be reconsidered and that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. So I ask that the votes by which the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading and passed may be reconsidered and that the joint resolution be referred back to the Committee on Commerce, and then that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the votes will be reconsidered and the joint resolution referred to the Committee on Commerce. Without objection, that committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution and it will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

RURAL CREDITS.

Mr. SIMMONS. I introduced April 20—calendar day, May 9—1922, the bill (S. 3578) to provide credit facilities for the preservation and development of the agricultural industry, including live stock, in the United States; to extend and stabilize the market for United States bonds and other securities; to create an agency for the liquidation of commercial assets owned by the United States, for acting when required as depository of funds belonging to the United States, and otherwise performing services as fiscal agent of the United States, and for other purposes.

This bill was referred to the Finance Committee. The Finance Committee has never taken any action upon it. The Committee on Banking and Currency is now having hearings with reference to the various credit bills which have been introduced. I ask unanimous consent that the Finance Committee be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 3578 and that it be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BREEDING OF RIDING HORSES FOR THE ARMY.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, transmitted pursuant to law, relative to expenditures under the appropriation for the encouragement of breeding suitable riding horses for the Army, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ORDER FOR RECESS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, there is an appropriation bill on the calendar which we would like to take up to-morrow, and I would like to get a little more time to be given to the shipping bill. So I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning instead of 12 o'clock. We will have the morning hour, and hope to pass the appropriation bill in that time, and to reach the consideration of the shipping bill by 1 o'clock at least.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not disposed to raise any question about that suggestion. I do feel, however, that the Senator must concede that we have not interfered with the progress of the shipping bill in any way.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true.

Mr. FLETCHER. I know there are a number of committees meeting now considering very important measures, and they meet about 10 o'clock, though they usually do not get started until half past 10. If we meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow we might as well abandon the committee meetings.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I thought probably there might not be many Members especially concerned in the Department of Commerce appropriation bill and that we could take that up in the morning hour.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not believe the Senator will save any time by meeting at 11 o'clock. I think if we began at 12 we would get along just as well.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to say to the Senator that there are hearings now going on before the Committee on Banking and Currency which are very interesting, and quite a number of Senators who I know are interested in that class of legislation, and who are not members of the committee, are attending the hearings.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Would there be any objection to recessing until 12 o'clock and possibly laying the shipping bill aside in the hope of passing the Departments of Commerce and Labor appropriation bill? Then there might be other matters that could be taken up. I feel that we should give more time to the shipping bill under the circumstances. There is other legislation that will be coming in, and I would like to get as far along with the bill as possible. I do not want to press the bill unduly, however.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator what appropriation bill he expects to come up to-morrow?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The bill making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Are there many controverted questions in the bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think there are any controverted questions in it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know of any. I presume it will pass as quickly as the appropriation bill which we had under consideration to-day.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think probably more quickly.

Mr. FLETCHER. I shall not make any objection to taking a recess until 12 o'clock.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate closes its session to-day it shall take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at 5 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously made, took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, December 15, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 14, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Father in heaven, about Thy name cluster all the sacred hopes of the human breast. In the unfolding mystery of Thy power and compassion are hidden the aspirations and joys of future years. Each day-dawn marks the extended hand of Thy mercy. As Thou dost thus minister unto us, may we minister unto others. O bless us for the good that we may be able to do. Help us to do with all faithfulness the duties that are set for us. Fill us with all good purposes and send us forth in the service of our beloved country. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, on to-morrow I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] intends to call up the contested-election case of Paul against Harrison, seventh district of Virginia. A considerable amount of debate is desired on that case, and I wondered if gentlemen on the other side would have any objection to beginning the session an hour earlier than usual in view of the fact that about five hours of debate is desired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if that inquiry is addressed to me, I will say to the gentleman that I know of no reason why we should meet at 11 o'clock to take up that matter. If the gentleman wishes to consider the appropriation bills and meet at 10 o'clock or 11 o'clock, I have no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. We desire to give as much opportunity for discussion as possible, and yet we desire and expect to close the case during the day. Gentlemen of course prefer to conclude the day's business at a reasonbly early hour.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion? To relieve the mind of the man who is to be murdered, he is asked to arrange to get a pistol. The gentleman wants this side of the House to arrange to cut off one of its Members' heads. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. On the contrary, I simply desire to have an opportunity to present the arguments in the case and give gentlemen on the other side an opportunity to present their arguments. If they can prove that the Member was elected, of course, he will retain his seat. If we prove that our man was elected, we shall seat him. I know of no reason why we should not begin early in order to get through at a reasonable time. It will accommodate gentlemen on that side as well as gentlemen on this side.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman submit any request?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not want to embarrass anyone, but I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, I understand that the House is not going on with the important business before the committee—that is, the appropriation bill—but is going to take up another matter that could have been settled long ago if the majority wished to. I object.

THE NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13374, the naval appropriation bill, and pending that motion I wish to ask unanimous consent that there be three hours of general debate, one hour and a half to be controlled by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and one hour and a half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that there be three hours of general debate, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and one-half by himself. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee) there were 46 ayes and 2 noes.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present; the Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 277, nays 2, not voting 151, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. LONGWORTH in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I should like to proceed for a short time with a general statement relative to the bill, and later on I shall be very glad to yield to interruptions for information.

There are three factors that largely determine the amount of money to be carried in the bill. When those three factors are determined the sums carried are almost wholly a matter of mathematical calculation. The first is the number of ships to be kept in commission. The second is the number of men and officers, and the third is the amount carried for new construction.

As to the number of ships to be kept in commission during the coming year the list is almost identical with the list of ships presented to the Congress last year by the Committee on Appropriations, as required for a well-balanced 18-battleship fleet. Some 324 vessels have during the current year been kept in commission, constituting the so-called 18-battleship fleet. All other ships have been put out of commission. During the coming year the same fleet is to be kept in commission as was provided for last year. That being the case, the amount carried in the bill for repairs and for fuel and general upkeep of the ships is almost identically the same as that carried in the bill for the current year.

As to the personnel, the committee has provided in the bill for the present personnel, 86,000 men, and the officers that are in the Navy at the present time, plus those to be added from the Naval Academy in June. The committee, in deciding on the strength of the personnel, were moved by the fact that the question was thoroughly gone into only a few months ago by the Congress. Probably no question has been more completely canvassed than that was at the time the current bill was under consideration. The Committee on Appropriations recommended an enlisted force of 67,000 men, but the House, exercising its right in the matter, after full and complete consideration and debate, fixed the number at 86,000, and the Committee on Appropriations has accepted the judgment of the House as final until the House determines otherwise.

I think perhaps it may be a matter of some interest, however, to the House to know the disposition of the 19,000 men which the Congress allowed in addition to those recommended by the Committee on Appropriations. Gentlemen will recall that the number recommended by the committee last year for the fleet was approximately 50,000 men and about 17,000 men for the shore activities. The contention was made that the number was insufficient, particularly for the fleet, and that a larger number should be supplied for the ships. On the 30th of September last the number of men carried upon the ships of the fleet, the 18-battleship fleet, about which there is no dispute, amounted to 52,538. The number suggested by the committee last April was 50,000. So that there are on the ships of the Navy at the present time out of the 19,000 extra men allowed only 2,538 men. It is only fair, however, to state in this connection that there are 3,889 men on ships that are being decommissioned, destroyers and other ships not any part of the battleship fleet; and on the 30th of September there were 1,700 men on transports being transferred from one ocean to the other. It is the intention, we are advised by the Navy Department, that those 5,589 men shall be added to the ships of the battleship fleet, and when added will make a total of approximately 58,000 men for the fleet and 28,000 men for the shore activities.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I note that on page 4 of the report there are listed among the number in excess of that which the committee was disposed to allow, 700 prisoners, 1,841 hospital patients, and several others. It does not seem to me that it is fair to charge this excess, and figure that these prisoners and hospital patients should all be chargeable to the excess.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think the gentleman will possibly recall that we allowed nearly 10,000 men for the regular shore establishments in the report last year, and then an additional 7,000 men were allowed to cover those in hospitals, in prisons, in transit, and under training. The number in the hospitals, the number in training, the number of prisoners, and the number in transit were lumped together as amounting to about 7,000.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. But of course that was an estimate on the part of the gentleman, and apparently his estimate was wrong, at least in so far as the number in the hospitals and the number in the prisons is concerned. It has no relation whatever to the excess.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No; I think we included the number actually in the hospitals and actually in prison.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. As I gather from the gentleman's report, he is seeking to justify the stand of the committee by charging up to this excess all of the men in the prisons, all of the men in the hospitals, all of the men in the recruiting service, and so on. It does not seem to me that that is quite fair.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I have no desire to justify anything. I was simply furnishing the information as to the disposition of the additional men allowed.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I rather read from the report that it is in the nature of a justification.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think it is. I think the gentleman has stated the case very well, but that was not in the mind of the committee. As I say, there were some 10,000 men assigned to the particular stations, and then an estimate was made of the number who would be in prisons and hospitals and under training and in transit amounting to about 7,000 men.

We find, however, that this list of unavailables and unassigned men amounts to 23,754. This is a vast expense which brings no adequate returns to the Navy, and the committee believes it unnecessarily large.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. That is true; but there are some of these items that are properly chargeable to shore duty, it seems to me.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is true.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. And that would tend to justify the gentleman's position; but at the same time it would seem to me that items such as in transit and hospital patients have nothing whatever to do with it. There is no way of figuring in advance how many men may be taken out of the fleet to be placed on shore because of illness, or how many men may be taken out of the fleet to be put in prison.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; there is. The averages are pretty constant. The number of people who become sick out of a given number, whether in civil life or in the Navy, is very constant.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Does the gentleman think that the increasing of the fleet had anything to do toward increasing the number of prisoners and the number in the hospitals more than the proportionate increase that would come from the increased number?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I would not think so; no.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Why charge that up to the excess?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I was just locating the 19,000 excess men for the gentleman.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Can the gentleman tell us the number of men on the ships and the very large number on land, the number on land being practically the excess that was forced on the committee last year, and will the gentleman tell us something about what these land sailors are doing on land except to wear a uniform, draw their salaries, and consume their allowances?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Well, there are a good many of these matters that hinge on the policy which is being pursued. For example, take on page 4 of the report, you will find practically 7,000 men in the training schools, or were on the 30th of September, 1922. You can readily see that that number could be greatly increased or diminished, depending upon the length of the course given to the boys in the training school. For instance, if they are given one month's training, just long enough to be sure they would not communicate the mumps or the measles to the fleet, if you had 7,000 men in the training schools and graduate them every month you would have a supply of 84,000 men in the course of the year, whereas the net shrinkage of the Navy during the coming year is only 21,000 men. If you train them two months, 7,000 men, it would mean 42,000 men supplied to the Navy, and so on. So it is quite apparent that boys are being kept about four months on shore for training in order to require 7,000 men in training to fill 21,000 vacancies. If you graduate them three times a year, 7,000 at a time, that would be 21,000 men. Of course there are two schools of thought about that in the Navy. During the war the custom was to keep the boys in the training schools on shore only long enough to see that they did not come down with these communicable diseases, and then put them in the fleet where they could serve in the lesser positions, mixed in with a large number of trained men. But in time of peace, when the necessity for men is not great, the boys are given about four months training on shore.

That policy makes it necessary to keep in training a much larger body of men with a correspondingly increased cost. If the Navy Department adopted a policy of keeping boys in the training school a shorter length of time, say two months instead of four months, this number of 7,000 could be cut in two, or making a saving of 3,500 men on that one item.

Again, former experience indicated that there is a loss on account of training, sickness, prison, and so forth, of about 7 per cent of the enlisted force. This percentage has kept growing and growing until now there is 11 per cent shrinkage or loss. Eleven per cent of all the men in the Navy are unavailable for duty all the time, instead of 7 per cent, as was the case only a year or two ago. A close study of this situation, I am certain, would result in a great economy of men. So you go down through this list and other economies of men can readily be pointed out. The committee, however, did not present this table for the purpose of raising anew the controversy of last year, but simply to show the disposition of the 19,000 men which the Congress allowed in addition to those allotted by our committee. But 2,500 of these on September 30, 1922, had found their way onto the ships.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I note here in the analysis of the table of appropriations for the current year and for the next fiscal year there is an increase of a few hundred thousand dollars in the total amount. I imagine that might be largely increased by the personnel, is it not? I am asking that question for this reason: I will state to the gentleman we have been having some assurance that, on account of the operation of the reduction of our capital ships put into effect by the terms of the arms conference, it would result in a reduction of the total expenditure for our naval program, but there is not very much encouragement in the total increase here for the fiscal years 1923–24.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. As I stated at the beginning, if you had 86,000 men last year and 6,615 officers, and retained 86,000 men this year and 6,615 officers, and you keep in commission 324 vessels, the same vessels kept in commission last year, nearly all the elements of cost, of course, will be repeated. You can not reduce the bill unless manufacturing costs are reduced or unless provision prices decline below last year unless you reduce the size of the Naval Establishment.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the Navy in order to keep up the commissioned personnel have to have so many men; in other words, if the men are decreased the commissioned personnel decreases?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It is not quite accurate, because the commissioned personnel is based upon the authorized strength and not upon the actual strength.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, in that connection, let me call the gentleman's attention to one practice that has continued in the department. Say the recruiting officer goes through the country and gets young men, young boys, of 15, 16, or 17 years of age to run away from home without the knowledge and consent of their parents; they enlist in the Navy, and the parents come along and send us affidavits showing that the boys were under 18 years of age and enlisted without their consent and knowledge. The department, instead of releasing those boys as the Army does, and sending them back home, intimates to the parents that their boy may be dishonorably discharged and prosecuted for making a false representation, and sometimes thus scares the parents into letting the boys serve on. Does not the gentleman think that the time has come for the Congress to indicate to the department that in cases of that kind the boys should be released and sent home?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think the gentleman is quite right about that, and I was under the impression that that was the policy of the Bureau of Navigation.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Of course there are questions of discipline that must be taken into account in individual cases.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. While it is true that there has been an increase in the appropriation for this year over that of last year——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No; it is less this year.

Mr. TOWNER. Less this year?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. The total, as I find here for 1923, is $294,000,000.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is the direct appropriation. The gentleman is correct about that.

Mr. TOWNER. Now, I was going to call attention to this: Notwithstanding that fact, there is a reduction in the Budget estimate of a few thousand dollars in the appropriation recommended for this year.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That comes about in this way: The Committee on Appropriations, of course, followed the Budget very carefully in the main, but where we were convinced that an error of judgment had been made, as I will point out directly, we increased the Budget recommendations.

Mr. TOWNER. I note that particularly in one instance—and I think the committee is deserving of credit—in the estimated appropriation for the completion of the 56 vessels which under the terms of the treaty we are to complete in order to make our quota what it ought to be under the agreement, the Budget estimate amounts to a total of $41,000,000, but the showing was made, as I understand it, before the committee that more money could be expended during this next year to advantage by increasing the appropriation, and with that in view the committee did increase the appropriation, as I understand it, $14,000,000. Is that correct? And, notwithstanding that increase in the estimate, the total which is reported in the bill is less than the Budget estimate by some thousands of dollars.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. I merely wanted in a way to challenge the statement made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. I propose to answer it when I have an opportunity.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Let me go on. I think that is a question open to more or less controversy, and I fear I may be taking time I have promised to others.

Mr. ROGERS rose.

Mr. BLANTON. I can give many specific instances.

Mr. HICKS. And I can give many specific instances where the gentleman is in error.

Mr. BLANTON. Not as to boys from my district.

Mr. ROGERS. That is what I wanted to inquire about. But I do not want to open up the question.

Mr. SNYDER. The question is whether the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] agreed with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] in the statement that the recruiting officers did deliberately enlist boys under 16 years of age. The gentleman from Michigan did not intend to agree with it, I am sure, but the way he answered the question might indicate that in a measure he agreed with it.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What I intended to say was that in cases where a young lad had been induced by prospects of travel and other attractions to misstate his age I have somewhat doubted the advisability of giving the boy under those circumstances a dishonorable discharge.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] said a moment ago that there is no substantial reduction as yet by reason of the work of the disarmament conference.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am coming to that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman is going to cover that?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Now, as to new construction, I think the committee will be interested in knowing the situation as to the ships that are to be completed under the terms of the treaty. On the 1st of July, 1922, it was estimated that $131,000,000 would complete those ships—54 ships. When the officers were before the committee this time the estimates had grown to $150,000,000 from the same date, or an increase of $19,000,000, required to finish the ships that the treaty permits—$150,000,000 instead of $131,000,000—and they said that the increase had come about by reason of changes in the plans, by reason of increased cost due to the slowing down of construction, and by reason of the fact that the officers who made the first estimates had made them too low. But be that as it may, the amount remaining after the current year's appropriation is exhausted will be $88,500,000, based on the new figures, and this bill carries $55,000,000, which will leave to be appropriated hereafter $38,500,000 to finish the ships we are completing under the treaty.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Can the gentleman tell what officers they were who made the estimate of $131,000,000?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think Admiral Taylor made the estimate in July, 1922, and he is really one of the best officers in the Navy and is one of the best ship constructors in the world. Of course it is pretty difficult. These contracts are on the old cost-plus basis, I will say to my friend from Wisconsin, and they are not an economical kind of contract. It is very difficult for the department to regulate the cost under that sort of contract.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have always understood that Admiral Taylor, who, as everyone knows, is one of the most prominent and one of the most reliable and one of the most competent officers of the Navy, is the one who made that estimate of $131,000,000, which has now been increased to $150,000,000.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is correct.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. When were these cost-plus contracts entered into?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Well, these ships were contracted for, some of them, prior to our entry into the war, or about the time of our entry into the war. Some of them are contracts of long standing.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield to me for a question? I dislike very much to take his time.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am very glad to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman has reported a great deal of useful legislation to the House which will live for many years to come. I should like to ask the gentleman about this naval reserve. It seems to me it is costing the Government about $800 per year per man. The gentleman is very familiar with it, and it will be interesting and instructive to us to have it explained.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will my friend allow me to finish the discussion of the particular matter to which I am now referring, and then I will be glad to come to that later?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that of this $55,000,000 there is a direct appropriation of $20,000,000 from the Treasury, and the remaining $35,000,000 is a transfer of funds from what is known as the naval supply fund and the clothing and stores fund. It was possible to transfer this money from those funds because they are revolving funds, which, owing to the purchases made during the war to meet the needs of the Navy, have become abnormally large. As various bureaus since that time have drawn supplies they have paid for them out of their appropriations, so that there is an accumulation of cash at the present time in the naval supply fund amounting to $22,000,000, and there are in the fund also stores to the amount of $250,000,000 more. Of course, there is no need whatever for any of the cash in that fund, and there is no need of carrying such a large stock of stores. We took this method of reducing the revolving fund of the naval supply account by $30,000,000 during the coming year, and by the same reasoning reduced the clothing fund by $5,000,000, making $35,000,000, which will be transferred to the building fund in order that the overhead may stop and that the ships may be completed at a much earlier date.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. In years gone by it was called to the attention of the House that the Navy Department had funds available on hand which could be utilized for various purposes that had been appropriated 50 or 75 years back. I wish to inquire whether the committee has attempted to check the utilization of those funds, and how many funds of the character just instanced by the gentleman are now available?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. We went into the matter of the available funds with a good deal of particularity. I have forgotten just the pages of the hearings on which that appears, but these two funds I am speaking of are revolving funds. There are two or three sources of supply open to the Navy where they simply draw. For instance, if appropriations were made last year or during the war for the purchase of certain supplies for a particular bureau and such supplies have been purchased and are on hand, the various bureaus can draw from such stock without using their current appropriation. Of course, it is like every other business. You could not from day to day go out and purchase what you need. You must have a stock on hand from which to draw and then you replenish the stock. Otherwise the Navy, designed for the defense of the country, might find itself in a position where it could not function if any emergency arose. But because of the war and because of the scrapping of ships, from which supplies have been put in storage, these stocks have grown enormously, and the various bureaus of the Navy Department have access to these stocks, goods which are not carried in this naval supply account at all. The bureaus simply draw what they need. Last year the Bureau of Engineering drew about $5,000,000 worth of material on hand for which it did not have to part with any of its appropriations. In a sense, of course, it augmented its appropriations to that extent. Now, those are about all the different methods I know of in which the Navy Department can supply itself with goods without paying for them out of current appropriations.

Mr. STAFFORD. The constitutional provision with which the gentleman is acquainted limits the availability of appropriations for armament, making them available for only two years. I assume that limitation does not apply to the Navy as such. Otherwise this case that I instanced where funds dating back nearly a century were still available for use of the Navy would not have been applicable for the purpose for which they were appropriated.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say to the gentleman that I know of no such funds. Of course, the gentleman can see that there are in store goods which may have been carried for a great many years.

Mr. STAFFORD. As far as the available supply is concerned; yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. And the longer they have been carried, of course, the less valuable they are.

Mr. STAFFORD. As far as available supply is concerned, that is one thing. I am calling attention to appropriations that have not been expended and which are still available.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am referring to current working stock, goods that have been drawn perhaps out of the naval supply account but not used, or perhaps turned back. For instance, they might turn back guns, use them on a ship for a while and then take them off and turn them back into the general stores of the Navy. The same thing might be true with ammunition of all sorts.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was not directing my query to the case of supplies that had been purchased. I was directing my attention to the availability of appropriations passed many years ago, particularly during the war period.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I do not believe that the Navy has access to any cash that I have not mentioned.

Mr. BUTLER. Right there will the gentleman permit just one question?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Of course, these figures are very large, amounting to about $1,000,000,000 for the naval supply fund. Is it not a fact that a good deal of that is made up of material that is either obsolete or will be in a short time?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; no doubt a good deal of it is obsolete, but the large sum which the gentleman from Pennsylvania mentions includes guns and all sorts of ordnance. We carry surplus guns for all the ships, so that if anything should happen to a gun we would have in store another gun to take its place; and if you inventory all of that stock. I think in ordnance alone it amounts to something like $400,000,000 or $500,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Four hundred and forty million dollars.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. But really that is a part of the Navy.

Mr. KNUTSON. That should be carried as a part of the armament and not as stock.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. They have access to it.

Mr. BUTLER. The amount carried is what has been paid for by the Navy, on hand to be used if there is any demand for it, but in the meantime a great deal of it is bound to become obsolete.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman would not want the impression to go into the RECORD that the Navy is carrying a billion dollars' worth of surplus stock.

Mr. BUTLER. Whatever I have said I am perfectly willing to have go into the RECORD.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. As a matter of fact, for much of this stock there is no general market value.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I would not say that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. We might sell it to other nations, but there is no market for it.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What the gentleman says is true about the ordnance; but we have large quantities of salable merchandise on hand, and the Navy Department is selling it as fast as it can when the market is right for such goods, and the proceeds of those sales revert to the Treasury.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If we carry the ordnance at cost price it makes an unfair representation as to market value.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It would have to be understood that a great deal of the ordnance is simply reserved guns and reserved ammunition, which any sensible government would carry, so that if its ships were in an engagement and a gun was put out of action there would be another gun available to be put aboard. In addition to that there are a good many hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of stores which are valuable and can be converted into cash.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I want to ask the gentleman whether the dismantling and destruction of the vessels on account of the four-power pact will not result in a good many surplus accessories, and would not it be possible, for the benefit of the Government, to transfer them to other departments? I have in mind particularly the customs service throughout the country, which is largely handicapped by lack of equipment, small boats, and so forth, in order to carry on the service. I know of a great many boats of that character in storage, and this service is sorely in need of those boats, as well as other departments. Yet it has been impossible to acquire them on account of the red tape existing which prevents the transfer.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I doubt whether the Navy Department would have the authority to dispose of property in that way without being authorized to do so by Congress.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Have not transfers been made?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Only where there has been some provision of law authorizing them to do so. When the time comes for scrapping the old battleships I imagine that the Navy Department will have to have an enabling act from Congress brought in by the proper committee.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I want to bring the situation to the attention of the gentleman's committee that there are in various navy yards throughout the country boats of the character I have referred to which for many months have been surplus. Attempts have been made, but have proved absolutely futile, to get them for other departments, and I think it is a question that ought to be looked into.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is it not a fact, and do not the hearings show, that the Navy Department has shown excellent business ability in disposing of the surplus stock?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; they have disposed of it to excellent advantage.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will.

Mr. McKENZIE. As to the sale of the surplus guns, I believe we have a statute covering that, and the Navy Department can not sell those guns to foreign nations or to individuals who might use them for speculative purposes such as occurred a few years ago.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think that is true.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. RANKIN. When this bill was before the House those who opposed the increase in personnel of the Navy were under the impression that there was at least an implied intention to use these extra men in operating something like 100 smaller craft—destroyers—which we thought would be in violation of the treaty growing out of the disarmament conference. I would like to ask the gentleman what has been done.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The Navy Department has not operated the 200 extra destroyers. We have about 300; 103 are in commission, and the balance are entirely out of commission. They are oiled and greased and are kept in first-class condition, but have not been operated and will not be the coming year.

Mr. RANKIN. I want to ask the gentleman if he will state before he concludes his remarks just what has been done in reference to scrapping these vessels provided for in the treaty.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Nothing at all, because the treaty has not been ratified.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I remember when the last naval bill was before the House the gentleman from Michigan made a speech, which to my mind was unanswerable, setting forth the fact that the Navy needed a number of thousand men less than was provided for in the bill. I understand that since then the Navy has acquired additional men, and I would like to ask how much the personnel of the ships in commission has been increased as the result of the increase in the personnel.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. About 2,500 men of the 10,000, on the 30th of September, had been added to the number allowed in the bill for the personnel of last year for the fleet, or in all 52,500.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Presumably all the rest of the thousands of men are on shore duty.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If the four-power pact should be ratified, how much of the appropriation in this bill will be spent on any of the ships which we are to mutilate and destroy?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I did not get that question.

Mr. BLANTON. If the four-power pact is ratified, we will destroy certain specified ships?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is right.

Mr. BLANTON. And some are yet under construction?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Are we proceeding with the construction of those ships?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No; the construction has been suspended on all ships not to be finished under the treaty.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, we are not spending any money at present on those ships?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The gentleman referred to certain saleable stock possessed by the Navy. What stock is that?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It is a vast quantity of all sorts of things. For instance, I think they have a good many million dollars' worth of copper on hand, but the copper market is not very good at the present time and the Navy Department does not think it is the right time to sell it. I merely use that as one illustration.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. LANHAM. With reference to the appropriation for the Bureau of Aeronautcis, being a lump sum of $6,290,000. Will the gentleman give me some information as to what amount of that is intended to be used for helium?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Five hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. FESS. Has the gentleman discussed whether we will realize anything out of the salvage of these vessels that are to be disposed of?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think that it will not cost the Government anything. Just how much we will get out of the old battleships and others to be destroyed I do not know.

Mr. BUTLER. Some information will be sent here in a few days which will perhaps give us some light.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The treaties have not been ratified, and legislation with reference to the destruction of these ships comes from another committee. I have never inquired about the matter.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, part of these stores on hand include about 1,700 Liberty motors manufactured for war purposes. We are constantly drawing on that surplus fund to equip our new airplanes, and by an expenditure of $3,500 for new improvements we are bringing those old-type motors up to standard type and are gradually using those motors from stock without purchasing new ones.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. SEARS. I am interested in the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS]. I understand that recently in the State of Florida airplanes equipped with Liberty motors which had never been unpacked were sold for from $400 to $600 each. Could we not have saved some money by taking those motors and not making such a large appropriation?

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Michigan will permit, I would say this to my friend from Florida, that much of the aviation material, for instance, stored at Pensacola, is obsolete at the present time.

Mr. SEARS. But this is not stored at Pensacola.

Mr. HICKS. I mention that only because we have it stored at Pensacola, Brooklyn, Norfolk, and it does not make any difference where it is stored, it becomes obsolete just the same.

Mr. SEARS. The point I am making is that this has never been unpacked, had been there about three years, and I did not believe it would become obsolete so soon.

Mr. HICKS. It becomes obsolete not merely because it loses its efficiency because of type but because of deterioration due to time. The glue in the fabric will become almost useless in two or three years, and all of the fabric has to be ripped off and renewed. There is a bug that gets in under the fabric and destroys it.

Mr. SEARS. These planes to which I refer had evidently been operated upon by some bug, because those who bought them from the Government at the price I have mentioned made very nearly $3,000 apiece after killing the bug.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] inquired about the Naval Reserve Force. The amount carried in the bill for the Naval Reserve Force is the same as the current year. The Navy Department and the Bureau of the Budget suggested a million dollars more, and the committee was heartily in accord with the policy of promoting the Naval Reserve, and yet we could not escape the conviction that it was not organized as thoroughly as it should be, and that there must be great waste of money in connection with it. This was particularly brought to our attention when we asked the officers in charge to give us the location of the various units of the Naval Reserve.

I think gentlemen will find that on page 151 of the hearings. That shows that the Naval Reserve is scattered all over the United States. Sometimes a unit is made up of five or six officers and one or two men. In many cases there are more officers than men. It seemed as though we ought not to increase the amount for the Naval Reserve until legislation had been adopted putting it on a different status. For that reason we left the appropriation as it is at the present time. It is an enormously expensive thing to have the Naval Reserve in such small units far back from the water, consisting of four or five officers and half a dozen men.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is it the policy in the Navy to pay the reserve officers in the Navy any salary other than that which they would receive when attending school or maneuvers?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. They have not been doing it, but they expect to put them into the pay class—I forget the number—on the 1st of January, so that the officers and men will get pay for the balance of this year upon the basis of one month.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman understands, of course, that in the Army a reserve officer receives no compensation except when attending the reserve officers' school or while on duty.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think there was some discussion and dispute perhaps about the two services, and it all convinced me that the Naval Reserve had not been perfected to such an extent that we ought to add another million dollars to the appropriation. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] is interested particularly in this Naval Reserve, and is in sympathy with it, and he has had for some time, I think, an idea of connecting it up in some way with the merchant fleet, which would seem to be more effective, but in any event legislation is pending in his committee.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, it is my great regret that the gentleman from Michigan will not be here to assist some of us in providing for a better naval reserve.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, there will be plenty of good men left.

Mr. BUTLER. But none better fitted for the work than the gentleman from Michigan. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, just a word about the last five or six lines in the bill, and then I desire to conclude. The committee put into the bill a request that the President enter into negotiations with the nations that were here in conference upon the limitation of armament, with a view of reaching an understanding or agreement relative to limiting the construction of types of ships of 10,000 tons and less. Of course, you all understand that the Conference on the Limitation of Armament did not go any further than to limit capital ship construction. That left the nations of the world free to go ahead and build without restriction or limitation ships of 10,000 tons or less.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Just a moment; let me finish this item and then I will be glad to yield. We put this request in the bill, actuated by the belief that unless it is done much of the splendid effort of what has heretofore been done will be nullified or at least actuated by the fear that much of the former effort would be nullified.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Just a minute. The last information that we had before the Conference on the Limitation of Armament as to the cost of completing the 1916 program, if no conference had intervened, was $353,000,000. Under the terms of the treaty we will finish ships whose cost will aggregate $150,000,000, so that we made a saving in cost of construction of $203,000,000 by discontinuing the program, less some $75,000,000 which it will cost to settle with the contractors. So we made a net saving in cost of construction by the treaty of $128,000,000.

Mr. HICKS. Has the gentleman figured the cost of the new airplane carriers taken from the old battle cruisers?

Mr. BRITTEN. What will the country gain by the saving of $120,000,000 if through that armament conference we slide back into second place, while England is modernizing all the old ships, placing heavy guns on them, deliberately taking advantage of the situation, which is going to be costly to us?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. We save $128,000,000, and we probably have saved in the annual cost of the Navy, supposing all the ships when finished would be put and kept in commission, in addition to the fleet we now have, which is hardly likely, but if it were done we will save perhaps a couple of hundred million dollars a year. On the other hand, if when the new ships are completed we put out of commission or put in part commission the older ships the saving in annual cost would be largely reduced. Now, then, there was no limitation as to the ships that could be built below the line of the battleships, and I understand from what I have read in the papers and from official information that the Navy Department recommends the construction of sixteen 10,000-ton ships at a cost of $10,500,000 apiece, making a total of $168,000,000. That it recommends that the battleships that we retain under the treaty be remodeled at an estimated cost of somewhere about $30,000,000; that it recommends three mine-laying submarines at a cost of $4,000,000 apiece be constructed, or $12,000,000 in all for mine-laying submarines. That three scout submarines be built at a cost of $4,000,000 apiece, making $12,000,000 more.

That an additional airplane carrier be constructed at a cost of $22,000,000; that six gunboats be constructed at a cost of $8,100,000; and that additional aircraft be constructed at a cost of $19,000,000 more, making a projected program of $331,000,000 as against a saving of $128,000,000, which we make by discontinuing the 1916 program.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman think that they had better meet again?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. So the committee was strongly impressed with the necessity of a limitation being placed upon the construction of the smaller ships by international agreement, if the fruits of the Conference on the Limitation of Armament were not to turn to ashes on our lips.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will yield.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I know that the gentleman was very successful last year in placing legislation of this kind on an appropriation bill when he attached the so-called Borah amendment to the naval bill——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman is wrong about that; that was a Senate amendment.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Well, it was adopted by this House through the instrumentality of the gentleman's efforts which he put forward in that direction requesting the President of the United States to do something that he had been in the process of doing for four or five months; in other words, stealing his thunder. That is a matter of history. It was adopted and the conference was held.

I want to say the gentleman is again requesting the President of the United States to do something which we and everyone knows that he has been engaged in doing for several months past. Would it not be much better verbiage to approve that which the President of the United States is now doing rather than to request him to do something that he has been doing for several months past. I do not like the verbiage of that portion of the bill. I think that it carries with it a false implication to the country and to the House.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am not interested at all in any particular language. I only hope the gentleman agrees with me in the idea.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I do agree with the gentleman in the idea.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Then all is well.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. The disarmament treaty has not been ratified by any other nation?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, yes; it has been ratified by Great Britain and Japan.

Mr. LONDON. And they are carrying out the terms of the treaty?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Under the terms of the treaty, it does not become effective until the exchange of ratifications. That can not take place until France and Italy join.

Mr. LONDON. In other words, the acceptance by Great Britain and Japan is conditional upon the acceptance by France and Italy?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Just what the United States, Great Britain, and Japan would do in the event that France and Italy should finally refuse to ratify the treaty I can not say.

Mr. LONDON. Have Great Britain and Japan carried out the reduction of the program?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. They have not. I do not think any nation has undertaken to destroy any of its ships, although possibly Great Britain has scrapped some of its old ships which she had already begun to scrap before the conference.

Mr. LONDON. In other words, there have been no results thus far?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No ships have actually been destroyed, but in many cases construction has been suspended.

Mr. BLANTON. In view of what the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER] says, I think the gentleman should incorporate in the provision a congratulation to the President for having stopped bootlegging in the United States.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. In reference to the question propounded by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON], have we not accomplished by this agreement just this: We have traded the 16-inch gun off for two 8-inch guns?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; and we have lost the opportunity to become the first naval power on earth. We shall probably be the second or the third.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not agree to that.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If the hopes entertained by the whole world are to be realized and permanent benefits are to follow the work of the peace conference, this hole will have to be stopped through which 10,000-ton ships can be constructed by any nation without any limitation. Otherwise competition in building of armament will not be suspended but merely directed into a new channel. It is to prevent this that the committee has asked the President to take the action indicated.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman from Michigan, in response to the question of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON], said that so far as he knew none of the nations were carrying out the terms of the naval treaty. As I understand it——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is as to scrapping.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes; as to scrapping. But as to new construction and continuing construction of those ships prohibited by the treaty, that has ceased, has it not?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, of course no nation is constructing ships that the treaty forbids.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Then that has been accomplished?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes. But the information that comes to the Committee on Appropriations relative to the proposed construction of other ships not forbidden by the treaty is sufficient to give an ordinary citizen the nightmare.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to make a statement of 30 seconds right there in his time?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. The information desired by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] is likely to be furnished to this House by next Monday. Last Friday the House agreed to a resolution making inquiry of the Navy Department, or of the Secretary of the Navy, as to how much scrapping has been done by the United States and each other nation since the conference. Cablegrams have been sent abroad which will obtain the information, I hope, before the gentleman reaches the end of the bill, so that he will be able to answer the question in the House.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. Referring to the provision at the end of the bill, in order to make that provision effective would not all the nations have to be in accord with it, and would not legislative action be required on it?

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have that question repeated.

Mr. WATSON. I wanted to know whether, in order to make effective the limitations in this paragraph, it would not be required that all the nations mentioned cooperate, and if they cooperated, would it not require legislative action? Such being the case, how long would the gentleman think it would take before we could act upon the suggestion contained in the paragraph?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. How long it would take to reach such an agreement, of course, can not be forecast by anyone.

Mr. WATSON. But before we acted we would have to have the action of the other countries?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes. The United States will not proceed to scrap its ships or take any action reducing our naval strength until we have received assurance that the other nations are ready to do the same thing. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] stated that if he should give to the committee all of the information that the Committee on Appropriations had received as to the status of naval construction the world over it might give some the nightmare. I do not wish to give the nightmare to any one, but in the time that I shall consume it is my purpose to give some information which I have received that causes me to believe not only in the wisdom of the appropriation that is carried in this bill but also in the wisdom of the last paragraph, which has just been discussed by the gentleman from Michigan.

Before doing it, however, I wish to refer to one question which was asked of the gentleman from Michigan, with regard to the changed estimate of the department as to the cost of the construction authorized under "Increase of the Navy." The increase in the estimate of $19,000,000 more than the estimate of last May is due to many causes. After the estimate of last May was submitted, certain construction was authorized upon the Maryland; after the estimate of last May improvements were determined upon, increasing the cost; $6,000,000 of the increased estimate was for payment of obligations due in the settlement of past contracts. Fire control is to be installed. And then the increased costs due to overhead which have occurred by reason of the suspension of activities. There has been a revision of the estimates of the contractors, most of the contracts being on the cost-plus basis. Consequently the officials who come before us now have to present this revised estimate.

Now, I want to call attention to the cost of the Navy, because it bears directly upon the request for another conference on the limitation of armaments. This morning I read in the Washington Post that the House Committee on Appropriations had reported its $290,000,000 naval bill. There is no reason why the Congress and the country should not know the facts. The facts are that instead of it being a $290,000,000 naval bill it is a $325,000,000 naval bill. Gentlemen of the committee know, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] very frankly stated in his report, that the Budget Bureau in submitting its estimates followed the unfortunate policy of asking for indirect appropriations, and indirect appropriations amounting to $35,450,000 are carried in the bill. That $35,000,000 comes out of the Treasury. It is not segregated in a separate vault somewhere in the city of Washington. It comes out of the Treasury and is just as much an appropriation as the $290,000,000. So that the appropriation for the next fiscal year is $325,000,000 as against $343,000,000, which was made available last year. I say I favor it, notwithstanding the fact that it is so enormous, because conditions existing among the naval powers demand that we maintain our fleet, and I am unable to see how it can be done for less.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman explain to some Members here, who, like myself, may be unaware, the significance of indirect appropriations?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I thought the gentleman from New York was familiar with it.

Mr. COCKRAN. Some others here may not be.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. A provision is carried in this bill making available for the expenditure of the department, in addition to the direct cash appropriations, an amount of $30,000,000 now credited to the Navy, in what is known as the naval supply account, and $5,000,000 in the clothing account, making a total of $35,000,000. That $5,000,000 in the clothing account has accumulated by the sale of clothing to the enlisted men. It is to the credit of this clothing account. It ought to be covered into the Treasury, but instead of being covered into the Treasury it is made available here for ship construction by the simple provision that this $5,000,000 in the Treasury to the credit of the clothing account shall be used for the increase of the Navy. Such appropriations make it possible for the Budget Bureau to claim a reduction in appropriations, but the money comes out of the Treasury and finally out of the pockets of the taxpayers.

This $35,450,000 ought to be covered into the Treasury, and the provision for the increase of the Navy ought to carry a specific appropriation for the amount needed. I must say, in justice to the officials of the Navy Department, that they have no objection to the bill carrying on its face the amount that is actually appropriated. On the contrary they ask that the naval appropriation bill shall carry direct appropriations for the Navy so that the people of the country may know the cost of maintaining the Navy. I hope some day that will be done.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion there?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. OLIVER. Has the gentleman included all of the indirect appropriations? The $35,000,000 is the one that goes for new construction, and of course that added to the total in the bill makes $328,000,000. In addition to that there is approximately $450,000 authorized to be used by the Ordnance Bureau. In addition to that the Bureau of Steam Engineering estimated that they would use $5,000,000, perhaps, from their reserve supply, and authority is also vested in the Ordnance Bureau to use an additional sum from their reserve supply.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is correct. The bureaus have available material of which they can use a considerable amount without reducing their current funds. For the information of the House I am going to put into the RECORD a complete statement showing the amount of appropriations, direct, indirect, and of all characters that are made available by this bill. That statement is as follows:

I want to devote the rest of my time to discussing the necessity for the last paragraph of the bill. I did not know what my friend from California [Mr. LINEBERGER] tells us, that the President is now at work upon some plan for the calling of another conference for the limitation of armament. I assume that the gentleman has that information from the President. I would be delighted to know that it is true. I must say that I would value the information more, and that I would feel more confident about it if only I could have the gentleman state that he did receive it from the President. But I do not see the gentleman from California on the floor. So far as I am concerned it is my earnest hope that he is correct. I say this because I approach this question without any partisanship. I know that no man was more interested in the success of the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments than I was. The conference met and it was our earnest hope that as a result of it there would be an end to naval competition. We did not believe that it would prevent war. We knew that men fought long before the battleship was invented; but we hoped that it would eliminate the competition in naval construction which was exhausting the taxpayers of the nations of the world. We believed, too, that in eliminating this naval rivalry we would lessen the causes of war.

There is no doubt that great good resulted from that conference. Why, if it had accomplished nothing more than bringing around the table the representatives of the various nations and demonstrating that they could meet in a helpful spirit of cooperation to lessen naval competition, it would have accomplished unbounded good. But we need not deceive ourselves. Some people in America believed the adoption and ratification of the treaty would for all time end naval competition. They believe it to-day. Therefore it behooves us to let the people know exactly what the status of naval competition is. The duty rests upon us to provide for the common defense. In order to do that intelligently we must inquire as to the existing conditions, and when we make this inquiry we are forced to the conclusion that it is absolutely essential that there be another conference for the further restriction of naval armament.

It must first be understood that the United States made a greater sacrifice than any other nation in agreeing to the treaty for the limitation of armament. Why, we sacrificed by that treaty the completion of 13 capital ships then under construction. Work upon these ships is now suspended and it is costing us something every day that work is suspended. If they are finally scrapped, it will cost us $75,000,000 to pay claims growing out of the cancellation of contracts. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] says, undoubtedly those 13 capital ships, if they had been completed, would have given to the United States the overwhelming naval strength of the world. The agreement required of Great Britain the scrapping of only two capital ships, which had progressed only to the blue-print stage, and it required the scrapping by Great Britain of 22 old battleships, many of which were obsolete. In addition to the 13 under construction, which we have to scrap, we must scrap 17 older ships, some of which were obsolete. Notwithstanding this sacrifice our people gladly welcomed it because we believed it would put an end to naval competition. The treaty has not been ratified by France or by Italy. My information is that there is some doubt about its ratification by France and that it is certain that, if it is not ratified by France, Italy will not ratify, and that Italy awaits action by France.

It is difficult for me to believe that France will not ratify the treaty. I must assume for the purpose of my statement that France is going to ratify the treaty, but assuming that she does and Italy follows and the treaty goes into effect, then let us see what is the result. I have been forced to the conclusion as the result of investigation that the treaty will effect no material reduction in naval expenditure; that it means only a change in the character of naval competition and to the disadvantage of the United States of America. To all intents and purposes the treaty is in operation in Great Britain, Japan, and the United States—that is, the construction prohibited by the treaty is now suspended. And yet the budget of Great Britain for the present year for the Royal Navy is $338,000,000 at the prevailing rate of exchange. This bill makes available $325,000,000. There can be no greater evidence of the fact that it has not resulted and will not result in any material decrease of naval expenditures unless there is further restriction on the modernization of ships now permitted by the treaty and a limitation upon the construction of all ships as originally proposed by the United States.

Let me call attention to this fact bearing on the question of expense, that when we consider the $338,000,000 to be expended by Great Britain this year and $325,000,000 authorized in this bill, it must be borne in mind that our naval bill for 1915 carried only $145,503,965.48.

Mr. CHALMERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. CHALMERS. Will the gentleman give us some figures of what England's appropriation amounted to in that year?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I wish I had it, but I only looked up these figures as to the United States a few minutes ago.

Now, as I say, the treaty has changed the character of the competition. Let me call attention to the fact that under the terms of the treaty few restrictions are placed on modernizing the older ships.

Provided it does not exceed 3,000 tons, additional protection can be provided against air attack and also protection against submarine attack. Ships can be equipped with fire control, a very expensive equipment, and if desired they can be converted into oil burners. Other modern equipment which will tend to make the older ships retained under the treaty more effective naval weapons is permissible. As a result we find Great Britain spending from one to four million dollars on the older ships she has retained. It is manifest to any man here that if we are allowed to keep 18 capital ships and Great Britain is allowed to keep 20, and while we spend nothing upon our 18 ships, Great Britain spends from one to four million dollars to modernize her older ships, she immediately secures an immense advantage. The equality contemplated by the ratio of 5–5–3 is immediately destroyed. That is exactly what is taking place to-day.

Let us compare the strength of our Navy in each of the various types going to make up an all-around fleet with similar types of Great Britain and Japan. First comes the capital ships. For the next 10 years or until the completion of the two new Hoods now authorized for construction by Great Britain, and which will be laid down this month, the United States will have 18 capital ships with a total of 500,000 tons. Great Britain will have 22 capital ships with a tonnage of 580,450 tons, and Japan will have 10 capital ships with a total tonnage of 301,320 tons. Tonnage figures, however, do not tell the whole story. At the present time the United States has three vessels capable of shooting at ranges of 25,000 yards or above, whereas Great Britain has 16 vessels. The number of United States turret guns over 12 inches in caliber is 148; the number of British turret guns over 12 inches in caliber is 188; weight of United States turret broadside, 262,500 pounds, and weight of British turret broadside, 315,200 pounds.

Great Britain has 9 vessels capable of steaming 25 knots and greater, and Japan has 4 vessels capable of doing the same. The United States has none. Of the vessels capable of steaming 23 knots or better Great Britain has at present 14 and with the completion of the two new vessels, the Hoods, will have 16. Japan has 10, and the United States has none. The question naturally suggests itself as to why we have in our Navy no vessels of this speed, and the answer is that the naval experts do not agree as to the importance of this speed. Our Navy has stuck to the idea of a fleet with a speed of 21 knots. The speed of the fleet is fixed by the slowest ship in the fleet, and apparently they have not attached such great importance to the speed of the battleships. That is the view of the experts. I am submitting the facts.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. In making his comparisons did the gentleman take into consideration the two ships, the West Virginia and the Washington?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; I am speaking only of those to-day in commission.

Mr. MONDELL. But the gentleman has referred to what England would have when ships of the Hood type were completed, and it seems to me if he is going to refer to them he ought to refer to these others.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. But I specifically said that Great Britain had at the present time 14, and that when the two were completed there would be 16. I did not include them without calling attention to them.

Mr. MONDELL. Can any comparison be made that is accurate that does not include the two very large and fine ships that we have almost completed?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Oh, I think so. I can eliminate the two Hoods and compare only those in commission, the figures being 14 to none for us. I do not refer to the West Virginia and Colorado because I do not know what speed they will have. But I would say to my friend that I am satisfied those ships will not have that speed. It will be nearer 21 knots. It does not necessarily involve criticism, because our naval experts do not believe that the speed of the ships to which I have referred in other navies is essential. The contention of our experts is that a 21-knot fleet is a superior fleet.

Mr. MONDELL. I thought the gentleman was emphasizing speed and disparaging our Navy.

I simply called attention to the fact, saying at the time that there was a difference of opinion on the part of the naval experts, and so far as I am concerned I have enough confidence in the wisdom of the experts of our Navy to believe a 21-knot fleet is all that we need. But I am calling attention to the facts, so that the House may know the exact situation. First, I call attention to the four battle cruisers that Great Britain has and the four that Japan has under the terms of the treaty, while we have none.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to make an observation in that connection?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. I am sure that the gentleman does not intend to state that all of the American naval experts are in agreement that speed amounts to but little.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Oh, no.

Mr. OLIVER. The fact is, I would say that the majority of the naval experts are strongly in favor of speed, and recognize that it is a most important element.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will only say this, that the fact is, whatever opinion the majority may have entertained, that the experts who have governed the policy have not constructed battleships of greater speed than I have called attention to. If they are in the minority, they are an influential minority, because we have not got battleships of greater speed, and they continue to assert to-day that they believe in the 21-knot fleet. That is the explanation they give to me for not saving ships of greater speed. Of course, I am speaking of battleships.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. That must have been the position taken by our experts in the recent conference; otherwise the results would not have been reached that were reached by that conference.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. And otherwise the result would not have been reached that has been reached in our Navy. I intended, however, to refer especially to the cruisers.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at this point in corroboration of his position? The West Virginia just now under construction, I suppose the last word so far as our naval experts are concerned, has a speed of 21 knots and a fraction.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I was not certain of it and did not make the statement.

Mr. OLIVER. There are, however, two battleships that will be scrapped under the treaty with a tonnage of 43,000 each, and each of them would have had a speed of 23 knots, showing that 21 knots is not the last word in naval construction from an American standpoint.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If they scrapped the 23-knot ship and kept the 21-knot, the experts must have thought the 21-knot was more desirable.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The West Virginia is given as a 21-knot ship, and that is the last ship under construction.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If our naval experts agreed to scrap the 23-knot ship and keep the 21-knot ship, that is sufficient to convince most of us that they believe in the 21-knot ship. But I want to talk about the cruisers, because that is what first started me on this investigation. Every layman like myself knows that the cruiser occupies a very important place in the fleet. I can well imagine from what occurred during the World War that five days after we became engaged in any conflict fast cruisers could operate to our great injury upon our commerce on the seas. And if we have no vessels—and we have none—of sufficient speed to operate against enemy cruisers engaged on such duty, it is a serious deficiency in our naval strength.

Against such cruisers we have only our destroyers and we are in a very inferior position, because the destroyers, while they have the speed, have not sufficient offensive and defensive power to attack the cruisers. One of our destroyers meeting the modern light cruiser of Japan or Great Britain would simply retreat. Her only hope of attacking a cruiser would be to attack by night, by stealth. I am told that we have not a single cruiser of a later date than 1908 in commission. We have been building since 1916 ten light cruisers, each of 7,500 tons displacement, and they are armed with 6-inch guns, capable of cruising at a speed of 33 knots. The appropriations carried by this bill make it possible to complete most of these ships within the next year. It will advance by some months the time within which they will all be completed. Great Britain to-day has four cruisers of 8,000 or more tons, capable of 27 knots. The total tonnage of her four cruisers is 56,700 tons, and two of them, known as the Courageous and the Glorious, are armed with four 15-inch guns. We have nothing to offset these cruisers.

Of the capital ships, Great Britain has four battle cruisers, Japan has four battle cruisers, and the United States has none. In case of conflict with either of these two nations these cruisers could, for at least a few days, do untold injury to our commerce, and our Navy has no vessels of sufficient speed to operate against an enemy battle cruiser force engaged in such duty, except the destroyers which have not sufficient offensive and defensive power to attack a battle cruiser, except by a stealthy night attack.

But it is in cruisers that we are particularly deficient. We have not now in our Navy a single cruiser of later date than 1908. We have been building since 1916 ten light cruisers each of 7,500 tons displacement, armed with 6-inch guns and capable of cruising at a speed of 33 knots. The appropriations carried by this bill will make it possible to complete most of these ships within the next year. Great Britain has four cruisers of 8,000 tons or more, capable of 27 knots, or better. The total tonnage of these vessels is 56,700 tons, and two of them, the Courageous and the Glorious, are armed with four 15-inch guns. We have nothing to match these cruisers.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman from Florida kindly excuse me? I must decline.

In light cruisers of 3,000 to 8,000 tons, all of 27 knots or more, Great Britain has 40, for a total tonnage of 161,690, and Japan has 10, with a total tonnage of 51,100 tons. In ships building and projected Great Britain has 2, totaling 15,100 tons, and Japan has 11, totaling 66,520 tons. Of larger cruisers Great Britain has building and projected two, totaling 19,500 tons, and Japan four, of 40,000 tons total, all of which will make 27 knots or more, and armed with 8-inch guns. Practically every ship enumerated here for Great Britain and Japan is one authorized since 1913, and therefore incorporate the features of construction learned from war experience.

In cruisers, therefore, of 3,000 tons and upward, of modern type, it will be seen that built, building, and authorized the United States has 10, of a total tonnage of 75,000 tons; Japan has 25, of a total tonnage of 157,730 tons; and Great Britain 48, of a total tonnage of 252,990 tons.

Naval experts insist that we can not have a well-rounded fleet as long as we are deficient in this class of vessels. They describe the functions of the light cruiser as—

(1) The service of information, scouting; in other words, searching for the enemy fleet and finding out what he is doing.

(2) Screening; that is, guarding our fleet against surprise and keeping off the enemy scouts.

(3) In battle supporting our destroyers in their torpedo attacks against enemy battleships and beating off the enemy destroyers attempting to torpedo our battleships.

(4) Operating against enemy shipping and protection of our own shipping against enemy raiders.

When the fleet is cruising they are flung well in advance of the main body to locate the enemy and prevent enemy scouts from locating our main fleet. A scout to get its information must be prepared to fight for it; it must be expected that enemy scouts will be in position to prevent our scouts from breaking through their lines and obtaining information regarding enemy fleet. It will be readily seen, therefore, that only a scout of equal or greater power will be able to fight its way successfully through a line composed of enemy scouts.

These are the functions of the cruiser. I entertained the opinion that this function could be exercised by our destroyers, in which class of vessels we have such superiority over other powers. But I am told and am convinced that the destroyer can not adequately perform the functions of the cruiser. The destroyer scout upon meeting the enemy scouting line, composed of light cruisers, can not engage them, but must fall back upon supporting vessels or be sunk. Naval authorities insist that a scout must be prepared to fight for its information. The destroyer can not match the cruiser in fighting strength, and must therefore return without information. The destroyer lacks the cruising radius, the seagoing qualities, the offensive power, and the long-range radio facilities, in the opinion of our naval experts. They have the speed, but only in smooth water. The cruising radius is limited by the smallness of the vessel.

In view of this situation as to cruisers the question arises why our Navy has neglected to build cruisers and constructed so many destroyers. The explanation is that the destroyers were constructed during the war. Then all of our efforts were devoted to the one object of destroying the submarine and making possible the transportation of men and supplies to Europe. We can recall the time when the world believed the outcome was dependent upon the success of the allied nations in transporting supplies to Great Britain to enable them to hold out until our armies could be placed upon the battle fields. Because the destroyer was the most effective weapon against the submarine all of our energies were devoted to building destroyers. Great Britain concentrated upon the building of cruisers more than destroyers.

Our small destroyer has a cruising radius of 3,000 to 4,000 miles. Assuming that in case of offensive operations against Japan, our scouting force should leave Honolulu and steam to the vicinity of Japan, a distance in a direct line of approximately 3,400 miles. It can readily be seen that with a cruising radius of only 4,000 miles they are unsuited. The same is true in case of operations against Great Britain; they would have to cross the Atlantic and would have no means of replenishing their fuel supply.

No one likes to assume that it is possible to conduct operations against either of these powers with whom we are now on friendly terms, but we are also on friendly terms with all other nations, and if we are not to assume such operations there really is little excuse for maintaining a fleet at all. Japan and Great Britain are not maintaining navies because of the naval strength of Brazil or Chile.

Let us see what Japan is doing. Recently the press carried Baron Kato's announcement as to their cruiser program. It created the impression that he was making a great reduction in the proposed building program. But the facts are different. Japan discontinued construction of 9 cruisers of a total of 59,500 tons, and substituted for them 8 cruisers totaling 70,000 tons. For 22 first-class destroyers totaling 30,800 tons, she substituted 24 destroyers totaling 13,500 tons. She discontinued the building of 46 submarines of 40,300 tons total, and substituted 22 totaling 28,165 tons, averaging over 1,200 tons each, with several over 1,500 tons, and some over 2,000 tons. The size of the light cruisers of 5,500 tons was increased to 7,500, and those of 8,000 tons were increased to 10,000 tons. Therefore, while Japan's post-treaty program announcement shows a slight decrease of tonnage, or 12,335 tons, from a total of 144,100 tons, there is a very marked increase in the total military value of these ships. In other words, Japan properly has taken her cue from the naval treaty.

She is violating no part of it, but she is so modifying her program as to build up the maximum fleet strength permissible within the limits established by the treaty. It is significant, too, that she is modifying her vessels so as to give them greater radius of action, better sea-keeping qualities, and greater offensive power. She is changing from small vessels specially adapted to home defense to vessels capable of carrying on an offensive operation at great distances. Manifestly, these changes are not made to provide for defensive or offensive operations against China; she can have in view only the two other great naval powers—Great Britain and the United States. I have no criticism to make of her plan to have the most efficient navy within the terms of the treaty. The treaty limited the size of cruisers to a tonnage of 10,000 and to a maximum armament of 8-inch guns. Several of the ships of her new program will be up to this allowed limit.

Great Britain already has several light cruisers practically at this limit and is building others, as shown above.

The nearest approach of the United States to these programs is the 10 cruisers authorized in 1916, which will have a tonnage of 7,500 and carry a 6-inch battery. It takes several years from the date of authorization by Congress before a vessel of this type is commissioned, and therefore our inferiority in cruisers will continue for some years.

I have said that heretofore I had looked upon our destroyer force as offsetting in great measure the superiority of the other powers in cruisers. In destroyers alone are we superior in strength. We have 281 destroyers, totaling 330,917 tons. Great Britain has 185 destroyers, totaling 210,000 tons; and Japan has 53 destroyers, totaling 54,985 tons. In addition to destroyers, Great Britain has 16 flotilla leaders, of 27,810 tons. In destroyers, building or projected, Great Britain has 5 of 6,525 tons total, and 2 flotilla leaders totaling 3,500 tons. Japan has 39 destroyers, totaling 49,975 tons. Totaling these, therefore, we find 333,917 tons for the United States, 247,546 for Great Britain, and 104,960 tons for Japan.

Prior to the war it was accepted that for every battleship six destroyers were necessary for the proper organization of the fleet. During the war it was discovered that they were the only means by which submarines could be combatted successfully; and with this new use, to which they are peculiarly adapted, naval experts hold that the number can no longer be regulated by the number serving with the capital ships of the fleet. For years destroyers must serve our Navy in performing the duties performed by light cruisers in the other navies. Their effectiveness, however, can be best judged from the statement that a 32-pound shell is thrown by their guns, as against the 105-pound shell and the 250-pound shell thrown by the light cruiser guns of 6-inch and 8-inch caliber.

The flotilla leader to which I have made reference is an enlarged size destroyer more nearly meeting the requirements for the scout than the destroyer can with its small tonnage. Such a vessel is made the leader and administrative flagship of a flotilla of 18 or more destroyers, and should prove of great value to the destroyer force. This type of destroyer has been developed by Great Britain in recent years.

In submarines the United States has 59, with a total tonnage of 37,142 tons; Great Britain has 36, totaling 29,157 tons; and Japan has 28, totaling 23,374 tons. Building or projected, the United States has 35 of 29,553 tons total; Great Britain 6 with a total tonnage of 5,500 tons, and Japan 21 with a total tonnage of 18,340 tons. The totals in fleet submarines are not included in this statement. They are as follows: Built, building, or authorized, the United States has 6 of a total tonnage of 9,698 tons; Great Britain 8, totaling 15,180 tons; and Japan has 25, totaling 32,665 tons.

While the United States has considerable tonnage in submarines, we are deficient in certain types. Our submarines were authorized and laid down during the war. In the main they embody pre-war designs, but have been modernized so far as hull construction would permit.

They are necessarily restricted in great measure to defense because they have comparatively low surface speed and comparatively low cruising radius. In time of war the submarine with sufficient radius of action can be of great value. As a scout it is the one which does not have to fight for its information. At present we have no submarine of sufficient cruising radius to reach an enemy port from her nearest base, stay on patrol there the necessary time and get back to its base. Such vessels are needed also as the war has shown for mine-laying. They should be able to reach the enemy coast, drop mines at the entrance to ports and then have sufficient fuel to return to their own base.

In the announced program of Baron Kato it was stated that Japan would discontinue the projected building of small submarines of 800 or 900 tons and substitute for them those ranging from 1,000 to 2,000 tons which will have the necessary cruising radius for any campaign in the Pacific.

From this statement as to the status of the three navies in ships built, building, and projected, it is evident that the treaty has not succeeded in stopping naval construction. In battleships, while new construction is limited, Great Britain is spending millions in modernization of old ships to be retained, making them up-to-date fighting ships. In airplane carriers the limitation will not be effective for some years. In cruisers we find the United States a poor third, and the other two nations carrying on building programs which will each year make us slightly more inferior. In destroyers we maintain our superiority but Great Britain is building larger destroyers, of which we have none and none projected. In submarines we have not made the progress we should in developing new types, and both the other great naval powers are spending considerable money in construction of the most modern types.

As I stated at the outset, there is but one conclusion that I can reach, namely, that another conference should be held. Therefore I am in hearty accord with the provision of the bill respectfully requesting the President to invite the Governments of Great Britain, Japan, France, and Italy to such a conference. A year has passed. We have all had opportunity to ascertain the effect of a treaty so limited in its scope, and I have no doubt that the taxpayers of other nations, who see as we do that no material reduction in expenditures has resulted, will be just as anxious as we are to consider a proposal to reach an agreement along the lines first proposed by the Government of the United States.

You can not limit naval power by an agreement as to naval expenditures because of the varying purchasing power of the currency of the different nations. Nor could you base an agreement solely upon men, because it would not be sufficiently comprehensive; it would not lessen naval construction with its burdens. Nor could you arrive at any fair agreement as to men because of the varying policies of the nations, some using civilians to perform duties ordinarily performed by the enlisted men. But we can limit the modernization of the ships retained under the present treaty and the construction of ships not now included in the treaty.

The responsibility rests upon us to provide for the common defense. The Navy is our first line of defense, and the people of the United States rely upon our maintaining an adequate Navy for the protection of the country. We hear much of the 5-5-3 ratio. No two men agree as to what it means. Hardly any two naval officers agree. I do not see how anyone can read into the 5-5-3 agreement anything more than an agreement as to the ratio to be maintained in capital ships and aircraft. But though not in the treaty, the people of America have believed that this 5-5-3 ratio should apply to naval strength, to the strength of the entire fleet and not solely to battleships. It is their belief that the United States should have a Navy the equal of any other navy.

Now that it appears that we have not such a Navy, another conference should be held. And if further limitation along the lines suggested can not be agreed upon, then we should immediately proceed to the construction of such fighting units permitted by the treaty as will enable us to maintain the ratio set for capital ships. Fighting units must be met by similar fighting units. We must enter upon the construction of cruisers that will enable us to meet the cruiser strength of the other powers.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I regret that I can not.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. You do not believe you have to construct new cruisers anyhow?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. We must, unless by agreement other powers scrap the cruisers they have in excess of ours. I still have hope, a hope based upon the progress thus far made, that if the representatives of the powers named can again gather around the table an agreement can be worked out whereby the necessity of building them can be avoided. But it takes time to build them, and unless within a reasonable time there is some hope of securing such an agreement I certainly would favor authorizing the construction of cruisers to match the cruiser strength of other powers and would also advocate that the example of the other nations be followed in modernizing, in so far as is permitted by the treaty, the capital ships retained, to the end that our Navy shall in fighting strength be the equal of any other navy. That is my attitude. But my hope is that the President will extend such an invitation as is respectfully suggested in this bill; that the invitation will be accepted, and that the same spirit of cooperation which made possible the agreement as to capital ships will make possible a further agreement that will effectively put an end to competition in naval construction, removing a fruitful source of conflict and lessening in all nations the burden of taxation which now threatens to exhaust the rich and beggar the poor.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MACLAFFERTY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I feel at liberty to take a few minutes of your time because our view is across the western ocean, the Pacific. It is perfectly natural that more consideration should be given in this House to affairs to the eastward than to the west. It is reasonable to expect that, because there are so few of us from the West in this House. Nevertheless, gentlemen, I think there is no one who will deny this, and that is that the world's great activity in the future is to be upon the Pacific Ocean. I do not mean in 5 years, or 10 years, or necessarily 20 years, but I mean in the future. And we, therefore, whose front doors are exposed to any trouble that might occur there, naturally feel a little more solicitous than some of you who perhaps live along the Mississippi River. You will pardon us for that.

I have listened with a great deal of interest to the exposition by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. I believe that I agree with 99 per cent of what he says. And yet I can not help asking myself this: What if another world conference is called, and if the lower grades of ships are limited by agreement, if indeed all the warships could be wiped off the face of the seven seas to-day, would not the power then rest with the nation that owns the biggest merchant fleet which can carry guns upon its decks?

It seems to me we have got to go a great deal deeper than we have yet gone before strife is banished from the world. My reading of history leads me to believe that at some time or other every nation gets into a quarrel, and that therefore it is well to be prepared. It seems our Nation has found itself unprepared more times than it ever should have.

I believe that because we lacked some ships a power now friendly to us burned our Capitol. I believe that once because we lacked ships we paid tribute to the pirates over on the Barbary Coast, a thing that will always be to our disgrace. I believe that because we lacked ships of the merchant variety we found it necessary to pay hundreds of millions of dollars to other powers within the last six years to carry our men overseas to help save the world from perdition. And it occurs to me in passing to remark this, that it was a most fortunate thing for us that our enemy in that war was not Great Britain or was not Japan.

Now, gentlemen, we upon the Pacific coast of this country fear that the day will come when one of the world's greatest struggles will be upon the Pacific Ocean. I do not wish to say anything here that would be offensive to any branch of our Government, but there are some things that I feel I must in justice say, and I am going to say them, and I hope I will not be misunderstood.

In mentioning the three great naval powers we hear of Great Britain, we hear of the United States, and we hear of Japan. Those are the three great naval powers of the world. It is believed by many people that if we have any serious trouble on the Pacific Ocean in the future, it will be with the last-named nation. That may never come. God grant that it may never come. Nevertheless, it may come; and we recognize that we may have trouble here and there, or else we would not have a Navy and we would not be taking the time of this House to-day in discussing affairs relative to the good of the American Navy.

I admire the Japanese nation. I admire the Japanese people. I have friends in Japan. I know many Japanese personally and esteem many of them. But I want you also to remember that Japan as a nation has her grave and serious problems, and I want you to remember also that it is not always the rulers of a nation who make the war, but that it is sometimes the mob in the streets that makes the war and that pushes the leaders to a point where they have to go into war. That has been history more than once. Now, I speak of the problems of Japan. What are they? Let me remind you of a few of them. The Japanese Archipelago is about the size of the State of California. When I make that comparison, do not immediately get into your minds the picture of some wonderful valley like the San Joaquin and the Sacramento Valleys in California, which, it is claimed, could support easily a population of some 20,000,000 or 25,000,000 people. Do not get that thought into your mind, and do not think of the hundreds of other valleys in California that are wonderful in very deed; but remember that only one-seventh of Japan is arable land, and remember that Japan has a population of about 50,000,000 people. And remember also that the birth-rate increase in Japan is in the neighborhood of 700,000 a year. Now, it seems to those who think they know the most about the Japanese that the last thing the Japanese ever thinks of is limiting the birth rate. Any of you who have ever been in Japan or in certain parts of California will realize that the Japanese have a thoroughly Rooseveltian idea, because their children begin knee-high and go up like a flight of steps. That is Japan's serious problem. That is the problem that confronts her people—how to take care of her surplus population. The Japanese coolie can not live in China, because the Chinese coolie works more cheaply than he does. The Japanese coolie can not live in Korea, although Japan to-day absolutely dominates that country in a way that I believe is a shameful history, because the Korean coolie works more cheaply than the Japanese coolie.

The Japanese coolie can not live in the island of Formosa for the same reason, and I for one know California well enough and love it well enough so that I am not going to blame the Japanese for wanting to live in the State of California, although I am not now discussing the Japanese situation in California. But I do say this, gentlemen, that when you remember the facts I have just stated, and remember that it is a part of the religion of the Japanese—I am speaking literally when I say it—it is a part of the religion of Japan that the world belongs to her, that she has a right to any part of the world's surface if she needs it, and that the Japanese are descendants of the sun goddess and of divine origin, then you can easily imagine that some time in the future, under stress of complicated conditions that we to-day can not even anticipate, we on the Pacific may find ourselves in conflict with Japan. I say again, God grant that that may never be.

Now, gentlemen, if that day ever comes, it must be that we of America have learned enough of the past and have learned enough of the wisdom of the present to see to it that this institution which we are considering this morning, this branch of the defense of our Government, is amply supported in every way possible, and that no advantage is taken of us, and that we shall not fail to do anything that is necessary to be done for the honor of our country and for the cause of civilization.

When the discussion was going on here about the Budget yesterday I could not help but think that I had a right to feel sore at that Budget, because there is an appropriation that ought to be in this bill to-day, gentlemen. In justice to our country it ought to be there. I am here to say, because perhaps no one else will say it if I do not, that there ought to be at least $100,000 in this bill to provide for something being done on the proposed naval-base site at Alameda; because the city of Alameda has given this Government a deed conditional upon its doing certain things within a time that, I think, expires next year. It has given it a conditional deed to over 5,000 acres of wonderful water-front property in the city of Alameda, which has been approved by commissions appointed by this Government, and which, while I have no authority to say it, I will say is approved by the Navy Department and wanted for a naval base on San Francisco Bay.

The important thing is this, not that that $100,000 will give us anything more than a start, but that a naval base must be developed on the Bay of San Francisco eventually that will take care of the largest fleet that can be assembled on the Pacific. To-day there are 12 of our capital ships there, with all the other ships that are necessary. Yet there is no real naval base on the Pacific coast. I bear in mind the wonderful plant at Mare Island, with which I am more or less familiar, having lived in that neighborhood since 1874. I bear in mind the navy yard at Bremerton. I bear in mind what there is at San Diego.

Mr. LINEBERGER. And at Los Angeles.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Yes; and at Los Angeles; but I do say that this Nation must build a naval base upon the Pacific that will care for all time for the biggest fleet that this Nation can maintain on the Pacific Ocean.

Gentlemen, 25 years is nothing in the scheme of things. I was speaking of Japan a moment ago. Do you realize that the same dynasty has sat upon the throne in Japan in unbroken line since 500 years before Christ was born? That is true.

The Japanese is not an individual; he is a nationalist. I wish we Americans were more nationalist than we are. The Japanese sinks himself into oblivion for the good of Japan. I have mentioned Alameda not with the expectation of getting anything in this bill for it but simply because it is my duty to my country to mention it, and because I think the time will come when Congress will take steps to acquire that base.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want the gentleman to read that fine report of the Alameda base by his colleague [Mr. CURRY].

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Mr. CURRY, my colleague, is all right, and some day he will be for the Alameda base. I am for Mare Island. Mare Island, when we are both gone, will be no less than it is to-day. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to speak during the time allotted to general debate, but the very informing and interesting speech of my friend, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], suggests to me the submission of some supplemental facts.

In August, 1916, Congress authorized the construction of 10 battleships and 6 battle cruisers. We now have in the fleet but one of these ships, and under the treaty we are not allowed to add more than two more of the capital ships then authorized to our fleet. In other words, of the 16 capital ships authorized in the building program of 1916 we are allowed under the treaty to retain only three. The treaty requires seven of the battleships and all of the battle cruisers authorized in 1916 to be scrapped. Four of the seven battleships to be scrapped are by far the best and most powerful that were authorized in the 1916 program. Each of these four battleships now to be scrapped would have had a displacement tonnage of 42,000 tons. Each would have carried twelve 16-inch guns and have had a speed of 23 knots or better.

No navy in the world had any battleships like these, either built or building, and it is questionable whether any other country would have been financially able to lay down for many years vessels of this type. In 1916 our Navy had no battle cruisers. We now have none, and under the treaty we will not be allowed to build any until after 1937. Notwithstanding this, our best naval experts have for several years been in full agreement that the most important, the most urgently needed capital ships for the fleet are battle cruisers. Under the treaty we will be permitted to convert two of the battle cruisers into airship carriers, but these two carriers can only be provided with 8-inch guns, whereas the original program provided that, as battle cruisers, they should carry twelve 16-inch guns. If these cruisers had been completed according to the original program they would have had a speed of more than 33 knots.

In order that you may understand the military difference between a battleship of 42,000 tons displacement, carrying twelve 16-inch guns, with a speed of 23 knots, and some of the battleships which the treaty allows us to retain, it may be well to take a brief inventory of the 18 battleships, which until 1937 will constitute the capital ships of our Navy. Eleven of the 18 will be ships carrying from eight to ten 14-inch guns, with an average speed of 20 knots, capable of throwing a projectile weighing 1,400 pounds about 20 miles. Three of the 18, one of which is now with the fleet and two—the West Virginia and Colorado—will probably be added to the fleet within the next 18 months, will have a displacement of 33,000 tons, a speed of about 21 knots, and will carry 16-inch guns, capable of throwing accurately projectiles weighing 2,100 pounds more than 25 miles.

Of the remaining 18 battleships all will be ships of less than 21,000 tons displacement, with an average speed of from 18 to 19 knots, each carrying 12-inch guns capable of throwing a projectile weighing 870 pounds about 15 miles. In other words, any one of the battle cruisers which under the treaty we are to scrap in point of military value would have been far more effective than all of these six remaining battleships. One of the battleships or one of the battle cruisers which under the treaty will be scrapped could have destroyed all of these six battleships, which will hereafter constitute a part of our fleet, without even getting within gun range of any of the ships so destroyed.

You will see from this how generous our country was in surrendering naval power in order to secure the treaty, yet there has been no complaint, because our people have felt, from assurances given, that under the treaty we are reasonably immune from war for at least 10 years. I am not without faith, and hope that this will prove true.

It is interesting to recall that Secretary Hughes first proposed a limitation not only on capital ships and aircraft but also on the smaller craft. Unfortunately, as the discussion advanced, some of the powers seemed unwilling to place any limitation on submarines or other auxiliary craft. Our representatives were more than liberal in consenting to surrender seven battleships and six battle cruisers, the most powerful of such types ever designed by man, and in agreeing to retain in lieu thereof old battleships of but little military value in their present condition.

Military experts who have given study to the subject estimate that in point of military value, measured by tonnage, gun power, and speed, the six battle cruisers and seven battleships which we are to scrap under the terms of the treaty more than doubled the 18 ships which we will retain.

Information given to the committee justified the inclusion, in the pending bill, of a request to the President to call the powers together again for the purpose of having them consider placing limitations on all types of naval ships. The committee was in possession of facts tending to show that one of the great naval powers which signed the treaty, without violating the letter of the treaty, is now building a large number of small craft; that still another power is expending large sums of money in modernizing its capital fleet. It is easy to see that if we continue the policy of providing no money for new construction we can neither hope to reach nor maintain the 5-5-3 ratio, as contemplated in the treaty. Some naval authorities insist that even now we are third in naval strength, although the treaty contemplates that our naval power shall be equal to the greatest. It will be well for this Congress to thoughtfully weigh the present value of the ships in our Navy with those in the Japanese and British Navies.

In this connection I deem it proper to state that our best naval advisers have strongly urged a large appropriation by this Congress for the purpose of modernizing ships, which the treaty permits us to retain, and for building additional aircraft carriers and types of smaller craft. Their recommendation is accompanied with the statement that such an appropriation is necessary to give us an effective and well-balanced fleet.

It is not fair to our people to lead them to believe that we can longer refuse to make appropriations for new construction and retain our present rank as to naval strength with either Japan or Great Britain. Both Japan and Great Britain are spending money in modernizing their capital ships and in building new auxiliary craft.

In my judgment the most imperative demands now are for additional aircraft carriers and larger subcraft. There are many naval officers who believe that the battleship will not be the most effective weapon in future wars. It will be a supporting arm to the effective weapons, but the submarine, aircraft, aircraft carriers, and light cruisers will play the most important rôle. The gentleman from South Carolina stated that some of our naval officers discounted speed in capital ships. What ships, may I ask, have we in our Navy, or what ships will we have under the treaty, that could endanger or drive from the sea any of the fast battle cruisers owned by Japan and Great Britain? These cruisers have a speed of more than 30 knots, a gun range equal to that of our largest battleship, and yet none of our battleships will have a speed exceeding 21 knots. Naval experts are further agreed that, owing to the fact that sea battles in the future will be fought at long ranges, heavy side armor is no longer of such great importance, and that more attention should be paid to deck protection. Battles in the future can be fought effectively at ranges of from 25 to 30 miles. At such ranges projectiles are thrown high into the air and as a result the decks rather than the sides of ships are open to greatest danger.

Under the treaty Great Britain is permitted to build two additional capital ships, and my prediction is they will not be battleships of the old type but rather capital ships of the Hood type, with speed of more than 30 knots, light side and heavy deck armor, carrying not exceeding four large guns, with large space for aircraft. Speed, aircraft-carrying capacity, with supporting large guns in small numbers will be, in my judgment, what the latest naval thought hereafter will urge in the building of large ships. [Applause.]

[By unanimous consent Mr. OLIVER was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD].

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I can not hope to add anything to the very informing discussion that we have had on the problems of the future, those that are not here, but those we fear may come some day. I want, then, to talk a little about some of the problems that are here.

One of them in particular we have heard a great deal about is agricultural relief, short-time credits for the farmer. We have heard a great deal about them, and we have so much conflict as to what they should be, and so many statesmen who desire to solve the problem, that it looks to me as if we are going to get nothing. We have in another body the Lenroot bill, and I believe the Ladd bill and the Simmons bill and various others, and a conflict as to what one shall be considered. Then we come over here and we have half a dozen bills in the Banking and Currency Committee of the House of Representatives, and the Lenroot bill has been designated here as the Anderson bill, which is the latest, I think—or is it the McSwain bill—and we have been here since the 20th of November. There has not been a meeting of the Committee on Banking and Currency in all that time, except an hour to hear some stock raisers. It is time to seriously consider the question of asking the appointment of a committee to determine where the chairman is and why he does not do something, and I am asking to-day that that committee either be given an opportunity to meet and act or that it do something and find the chairman and ask him to perform.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; I will yield to the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. He has been in attendance on the sessions of the House a goodly portion of the time since we convened.

Mr. STEVENSON. I admit he was, but he has not called a meeting of the Banking and Currency Committee.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. STEVENSON. I have only got eight minutes, and I want to say something.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the chairman of the committee wants you gentlemen of the committee, all the gentlemen of the committee, to formulate their plans somewhat in advance of the meeting.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes, sir. The chairman of the committee appointed a subcommittee on that subject at the beginning of this Congress, and appointed as the chairman of that subcommittee the gentleman from Buffalo [Mr. MACGREGOR], and he was to have a hearing and take up this matter to formulate. I am saying, why did not they formulate, and why did not they do something?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I can not yield now. The whole thing reminds me of this very beautiful parody on the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which is in the Saturday Evening Post of this week.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield for just one question? Have you a plan of your own?

Mr. STEVENSON. Have I a plan of my own? I am not on the subcommittee. If I have the opportunity, yes; I can give a plan.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman is interested in the farmers' relief——

Mr. STEVENSON. Very specially interested in it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Give us your plan.

Mr. STEVENSON. I have not the time now. The gentleman would object if I undertook to give it, and he would not vote for it if I did.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman is mistaken. The gentleman from Illinois has never yet voted against any legislation that was actually needed by the agricultural interests.

Mr. STEVENSON. I have yielded to the gentleman all that is necessary, and I now desire to read this beautiful parody on the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which you will find in this week's Saturday Evening Post:

IF EVERYBODY DID THINGS AS CONGRESS DOES.

An old woman has just been knocked senseless by a speeding automobile. A policeman leans over her. A crowd has gathered around them.

FIRST BYSTANDER. Mr. Policeman, I offer a resolution summoning a doctor for this poor woman.

SECOND BYSTANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

FIRST BYSTANDER. I yield.

SECOND BYSTANDER. I suggest there may be a doctor in the crowd.

FIRST BYSTANDER. I accept the gentleman's suggestion. Mr. Policeman, I will amend the pending resolution to ask if there is a doctor in the crowd.

POLICEMAN. Is there objection?

THIRD BYSTANDER. I object. It would be impossible to find a competent doctor in a street crowd. I suggest the gentleman withdraw his amendment.

FIRST BYSTANDER. I withdraw my amendment, Mr. Policeman.

POLICEMAN. The question is on the resolution. The clerk will call the roll.

FOURTH BYSTANDER. Mr. Policeman, I object. I am a doctor, and I suggest that this woman is in need of immediate medical aid, which I shall be glad to furnish.

THIRD BYSTANDER. I should like to ask the gentleman how much compensation he expects for rendering the medical aid of which he speaks in such a care-free manner. The gentleman looks like one who seldom does anything for nothing.

FOURTH BYSTANDER. That is where the gentleman and I are different. The gentleman is obviously one who seldom does anything, even for something.

THIRD BYSTANDER. I would like to ask what the gentleman means?

FOURTH BYSTANDER. The gentleman may draw his own conclusions.

FIFTH BYSTANDER. Mr. Policeman, I make the point of order.

POLICEMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The question is on the resolution.

A VOICE. The old woman's dyin' while you boobs is talkin'.

POLICEMAN. The Chair will have the street cleared if the spectators do not observe silence. The Chair can not tolerate these interruptions from the gallery. The question is on the resolution.

SIXTH BYSTANDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. When in the course of human events it becomes necessary to invoke medical aid for an old woman who has been struck by an automobile, what will the press and public say if we are unfaithful to our trust? I hold here in my hand a letter from Amos Q. Gilkeyson, which I ask permission to read.

SEVENTH BYSTANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

SIXTH BYSTANDER. I yield.

SEVENTH BYSTANDER. I would like to ask the gentleman if Mr. Gilkeyson is a qualified medical practitioner?

SIXTH BYSTANDER. I am glad to ease the gentleman's mind. Mr. Gilkeyson is a graduate of the American Masseurs' University, and——

EIGHTH BYSTANDER. I object.

POLICEMAN. Objection is heard.

A VOICE. The old woman's dead.

NINTH BYSTANDER. I am just informed, Mr. Chairman, upon authority too reliable to controvert, that the old lady no longer needs medical attention. I suggest that the gentleman withdraw his resolution.

FOURTH BYSTANDER. Will the gentleman give the name of his authority?

I would like to commend the answer to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] with reference to the colloquy that occurred here a day or two ago between them:

NINTH BYSTANDER. I am sorry I can not oblige the gentleman, as my authority wishes his name to be kept private, but I can assure the gentleman that he is the very highest authority.

FIRST BYSTANDER. In that case I shall be glad to accept the gentleman's suggestion in part, and move to amend my resolution by substituting the word "coroner" for the word "doctor" in my original resolution.

POLICEMAN. Is there objection? (There is no objection, so the amendment is agreed to.) The question is on the resolution. (There being no objection, the resolution is carried.)

[Applause.]

And that is about the way the agricultural temporary relief of the farmer matter is moving along in this House. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask not to be interrupted, as I fear that I shall not be able to finish what I desire to say in the time allotted me.

The World War ended four years ago. By resolution of Congress adopted some 18 months ago our war laws were repealed or their operation suspended. It was the general expectation of the public and of Members of Congress that those who had been convicted under the war laws would be released upon the repeal of those laws. However, such course has not been taken. We have yet sixty-odd men in our jails convicted under laws which no longer exist.

It is also a fact that of all the nations of the world the United States is the only nation which yet holds in prison offenders convicted under the war laws. I know of no better name for these persons than "political prisoners," because that is exactly what they are. Their offenses were not against persons but directly against the Government by opposing measures relating to carrying on the war.

I am impelled to discuss this subject because of the feeling that the situation is a disgrace to our country. I feel that it is a situation which demands the attention of Congress. I am disturbed by the thought that we have too long been silent and that perhaps I myself have failed in my duty in not before demanding here upon this floor that these prisoners be released. It is perhaps not upon me more as a Member of Congress than as a citizen. There is, of course, the consideration that it may injure me politically to speak. Demagogues and reactionaries are quick to hound any advocate of liberal opinion. But that very fact is one of the best reasons why I should take my stand for real Americanism and the American Bill of Rights. I can not longer retain my self-respect if I allow this situation to continue without my protest when in my heart I do so bitterly condemn it. The fact that it may be expensive politically is merely an added reason why any man worthy of a seat in Congress should speak his sentiments.

THE CASE OF RICARDO FLORES MAGON.

The subject was again brought to my attention by the discussion with reference to the case of Ricardo Flores Magon, which occurred in the House on Monday last.

We live in the greatest country in the world. Our public men are the bravest and most enlightened. Our elements which guide public opinion are the most liberal. Our classes of large wealth are the most generous toward economic heretics. All this is demonstrated by the case of this man Magon. In Mexico the Chamber of Deputies is said to be draped in mourning for the death of Magon, its citizen who was associated with Madero in his efforts to overthrow the tyranny of Diaz, while here in the United States House of Representatives Magon's memory is reviled and blackened by insinuations that he was a murderer and an assassin or an advocate of murder and assassination.

I am impelled to discuss the case of Magon because I feel that it is a typical case in the respect that it illustrates the practices of the Department of Justice in dealing with amnesty for all of these political prisoners. Whenever pardon for them is mentioned the department emits a smoke screen and attempts to divert attention from the true issue by reckless statements that the prisoners are "anarchists," "communists," or even murderers. It has tried to excuse itself with contemptible evasion and by blackening the names of these men by making unproven charges, by the use of epithets, and I would almost say making lying statements in regard to them. Once you mention the case of one of these men, back comes the propaganda that he is an "anarchist," an "I. W. W.," a "communist," or some other kind of a political or economic heretic. Never will they deal with the facts of the particular offense for which he was convicted or with the proof as appears from the record of the trial of the case.

OUR LAWS ARE AIMED AT DEEDS, NOT AT BELIEFS.

Let me say at this point that it is no crime under the laws of the United States for a man to be an I. W. W., a communist, an atheist, or to hold to any other belief, no matter how wild and subversive it may be, nor is it a crime for men to belong to an organization, no matter what purpose it may have. Our laws are aimed at men's actions, not at a frame of mind or a belief. Men may be convicted as criminals only for deeds and not for thoughts. It is no more a crime to be a communist than to be a Mormon or an agnostic. It is only when a man is guilty of some overt act or of conspiracy coupled with an overt act that he violates the law.

Never at any time has it been unlawful in this country for a man to express his beliefs and to propagate his ideas, except during the World War. These political prisoners were convicted for words spoken and not for deeds done. They violated the espionage act by expressions against the war or in opposition to conscription or other war measures. They were not guilty of spying, nor of sabotage, nor of actively aiding the enemy, nor of anything other than the expression of opinions which men may sincerely hold. They did not incite to murder nor destruction of property nor injury to human beings, but obstructed the draft or criticized public officials or preached against wars in general or other matter of that kind. Yet we find that the Department of Justice delights to obscure the facts by reckless insinuations and by prejudicing the public against these prisoners with charges that they were communists, anarchists, and so forth.

The sinister effort to prejudice the public against these prisoners by making charges against them which have no connection with the offenses for which they were convicted is inspired by the consciousness of the slender basis for their conviction. In no case were they tried for disloyal or violent deeds. Always it was for use of "words," and in some cases the construction placed upon their words was so strained as to pass into the realm of the ridiculous. Men were convicted of conspiring with each other who were rank strangers, had never met, and had never communicated, and when the proven overt act consummating the conspiracy consisting merely of spoken or written words.

LEGALIZED MOBBING.

Necessarily, as in the case of all laws aimed at free speech, the espionage act convicted men for the intent or purpose with which they spoke, and in actuality they were tried before the bar of public opinion as represented by juries. In such cases jurors, of course, carry into the box the prejudices of the outside world and are left free to vent the feelings of the majority upon the dissenter. When public feeling is intense and practically unanimous, as in time of war, there is a demand that examples be made of any who may have been conspicuous in dissenting. Conviction is demanded whether there be actual guilt or not, and men are convicted upon their reputations and what others may believe about them. In such cases a trial is more or less a farce. It is a sort of legalized mob action. The rich, influential and ably defended, of course go free. The weak, the undefended, and the friendless are convicted, of course. To be an alien radical or labor agitator is to go to jail.

The fact should be frankly and boldly recognized that certain influential groups in this country do not sincerely believe in free speech or other constitutional guaranties. As the beneficiaries of abuses of our system, these groups hold to valuable privileges, monopolies, and the control of great aggregated wealth. They fear the exposure of their practices and the correction of the evils by which they have profited. Dominating to a large extent the channels of public information, twisting and coloring the news which the people receive, their security lies in the suppression of criticism. They identify themselves as the Government, because they are often permitted to control its activities. Then, there are the militarists and imperialists, with their thoughts of unpopular future wars for which conscription will be necessary.

Without any particular regard for the guilt of our political prisoners, these dominating groups would hold them in prison for its effect upon all who might desire to expose their practices, to thwart their aims, or to question their right to dominate. It is out of deference to these groups that the Department of Justice holds these men in prison. The department bows to the will of the masters of the present administration. Of all the vices which officials may have, hypocrisy is the most contemptible—the exercise of discretion for one set of reasons while pretending to do so for other reasons. This charge I lay at the door of the department.

THE REAL RADICALS.

The reactionary and selfish elements to which I have referred have not merely dictated that the political offenders shall remain in prison, but promptly vent their spleen upon all who may advocate their release. They answer all arguments with the sheer brutality of epithets and false propaganda. Anyone who presumes to invoke American traditions of free speech is promptly crucified by their parasite press and denounced as a "Red" or a "radical" or some other kind of heretic.

The truth is that these reactionaries are themselves the real radicals; they are the real revolutionists. In their hearts they would like to repeal the Bill of Rights except in so far as it may give protection to their property and their interests.

Sometimes they vary from epithets to ridicule and condemn the advocates of amnesty as "maudlin sentimentalists." Why "maudlin," I do not know, and since when has the sentiment of love for American institutions and ideals been unworthy?

On last Monday, December 11, the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER] discussed in the House the Magon case and made certain statements which I questioned. He had obtained leave to extend his remarks and I challenged him to obtain and extend in the RECORD as a part of his remarks the indictment against Magon and the article which it was stated he had printed and which constituted the basis for his conviction. The gentleman has caused his remarks to be printed, but has failed to print any of the documents called for. He has failed to meet the challenge and, I presume, does not intend to do so.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I do propose to do that, and will do so in the next few days. The gentleman's challenge will be fully met by the production and insertion in the RECORD of the documents which he asked for in his speech of December 11.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I am going to save the gentleman a part of that trouble by reading now the article the publishing of which constituted Magon's offense.

I hold in my hand the translation which was used by the Department of Justice as the basis of its prosecution of Magon. This man was convicted of violating the espionage act and section 211 of the Criminal Code by publishing this article in a little Spanish newspaper in Los Angeles. I read:

MAGON'S MANIFESTO.

THE ASSEMBLY OF ORGANIZACION OF THE MEXICAN LIBERAL PARTY.

To the Members of the Party, the Anarchists of the Whole World, and the Workingmen in General.

COMPANIONS: The clock of history will soon point with its hands inexorable the instant producing death to this society, already agonizing.

The death of the old society is close at hand; it will not delay much longer, and only those will deny the fact whom its continuation interests; those that profit by the injustice in which it is based; those that see with horror the approach of the revolution, for they know that on the following day they will have to work side by side with their former slaves.

Everything indicates, with force of evidence, that the death of the burgeoisie society will come unexpectedly. The citizen with grim gaze looks at the policeman whom only yesterday he considered his protector and support; the assiduous reader of the bourgeoisie press shrugs the shoulders and drops with contempt the prostituted sheet in which appear the declarations of the chiefs of state; the workingman goes on strike, not taking into account that by his action he injures the country's interest, conscious now that the country is not his property but is the property of the rich.

In the street are seen faces which clearly show the interior torment of discontent; and there are arms that appear agitated to construct barricades; murmurs in the saloons, in the theaters, in the street cars, in each home, especially in our homes, in the homes of those below, where is mourned the departure of a son called to the war, or hearts oppressed and eyes moistened when thinking that to-morrow, perhaps to-day even, the boy who is the joy of the hut, the youngster who with his frankness and gentility wraps in splendor the gloomy existence of the parents in some sense, will be but by force torn from the bosom of the family to face, gun in hand, another youngster who like himself was the enchantment of his home, and whom he does not hate and can not hate, for he even does not know him.

The flames of discontent revived by the blow of tyranny each time more enraged and cruel in every country; and here and there, everywhere, and in all parts the fists contract, the minds exalt, the hearts beat violently; and where they do not murmur, they shout, all sighing for the moment in which the calloused hands during hundred centuries of labor they must drop the fecund tools and grab the rifle which nervously awaits the caress of the hero.

Companions, the moment is solemn. It is the moment preceding the greatest political and social catastrophe the history registers, the insurrection of all people against existing conditions.

It will be surely a blind impulse of the masses which suffer; it will be, without a doubt, the disorderly explosion of the fury restrained hardly by the revolver of the bailiff and the gallows of the hangman; it will be the overflow of all the indignation and all the sorrows, and will produce the chaos, the chaos favorable to all who fish in turbid waters—chaos from which may sprout new oppressions and new tyrannies; for in such cases regularly the charlatan is the leader.

It falls to our lot, the intellectual, to prepare the popular mentality until the moment arrives, while not preparing the insurrection, since insurrection is born of tyranny.

Prepare the people not only to wait with serenity the grand events which we see glimmer but to enable them to see and not let themselves be dragged along by those who want to induce them now over a flowery road toward identic slavery and a similar tyranny as to-day we suffer.

To gain that, the unconscious rebelliousness may not forge with its own hands a new chain that anew will enslave the people, it is precise that all of us, all that do not believe in government, all that are convinced that government, whatsoever its form may be and whoever may be the head, it is tyranny, because it is not an institution created for the protection of the weak but to support the strong, we place ourselves at the height of circumstances and without fear propagate our holy anarchist ideal, the only just, the only human, the only true.

To not do it is to betray knowingly the vague aspirations of the populace to a liberty without limits, unless it be the natural limits—that is, a liberty which does not endanger the conservation of the specie.

To not do it is giving free hand to all those who desire to benefit merely their own personal ends through the sacrifice of the humble.

To not do it is to affirm what our antagonists assure—that the time is still far away when our ideals will be adopted.

Activity, activity, and more activity is the demand of the moment.

Let every man and every woman who loves the anarchist ideal propagate with tenacity, with inflexibility, without heeding sneer or measuring dangers, and without taking into account the consequences.

Ready for action, and the future will be for our ideal—land and liberty.

Given in Los Angeles, State of California, United States of America, the 6th day of March, 1918.

RICARDO FLORES MAGON.
LIBRADO RIVERA.

The article was perhaps a foolish article. It may have been a wicked article. The man was tried. He was convicted of violating the espionage act. How anybody could imagine that that article could have had any effect whatsoever toward obstructing our war operations is beyond my comprehension. The gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER], however, said that—

During the dark days of the war, when all patriotic men, women, and children under American skies were giving their all in order that the country might win the war, people such as Ricardo Flores Magon were seeking to obstruct our endeavors in winning that war.

He also said:

Ricardo Flores Magon during that time was publishing this paper of his, Regeneracion, in Los Angeles, obstructing the draft, trying to get those Mexicans in this country who were of American citizenship to refuse to serve under the colors, and inciting them to return to Mexico and enlist themselves under the banner of Mexico with Germany in order to recover the so-called lost Provinces of Mexico, to wit, California, Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona.

I again challenge the gentleman to put into the RECORD something printed by this man Magon that bears out his statements. I call upon him to put into the RECORD something from the court records of the case in which Magon was tried—not from his imagination—which will justify his statements.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama three additional minutes that I have.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] is recognized for three additional minutes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to read what Magon said later of his own article:

DID NOT REFER TO AMERICA.

On the 21st of March, 1918, I was arrested with Rivera for having published in Regeneracion the manifesto for which I was given 20 years' imprisonment, and Rivera 15. The wording and meaning of the manifesto were construed as seditious by the prosecution; that is, as aiming at the insubordination and revolt of the military and naval forces of the United States. Any sensible person who happened to read the manifesto would not draw such a conclusion, for in reality the manifesto is only an exposition of facts and a fair warning to all mankind of the evils those facts might produce.

In one of its paragraphs it is clearly stated that no one can make a revolution on account of it being a social phenomenon. The manifesto was aimed at the prevention of the evils a revolution carries itself, the revolution being regarded from a scientific standpoint as a world-wide inevitable result of the unsettled conditions of the world.

The manifesto does not refer in the least to the policies of the American Government in the last war, nor gives aid and comfort to its enemies. It is neither pro-German nor pro-Allied, and does not single out the United States in its brief review of the world conditions. It was enough, however, to secure for me a life term behind prison bars. The persecution, this time, was exceedingly severe. My poor wife, Maria, was incarcerated during five months, and is now free on bond awaiting trial for having notified my friends of my arrest, that they should assist me in my legal defense.

I have examined Magon's article with some care. According to usual standards it is somewhat vague and bombastic, but there is little in it that can be considered as inciting to disloyalty or revolution. Perhaps its most objectionable passages are those which speak of the workingman being conscious "that the country is not his property, but is the property of the rich," and the criticism of government in general: "It is tyranny, because it is not an institution created for the protection of the weak, but to support the strong." Also, I note the condemnation of war by reference to the young man "torn from the bosom of his family to face, gun in hand, another youngster who, like himself, was the enchantment of his home, and who he does not hate and can not hate for he even does not know him." There is not a word of criticism of the United States, nor of our Government, nor of any official action in particular. Yet the publication of this article in a little-read Spanish newspaper was considered to merit 21 years in the penitentiary, of which Magon had served 5 at the time of his recent death.

In discussing Magon's case the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER] read a statement which obviously emanated from the Department of Justice. Of course, I accord to him sincerity and belief in the statement. The thing I chiefly complain of is that the statement was grossly misleading to all who did not know the facts.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman please state to the House in what particulars my statement was misleading.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I am going to do that.

The statement was made that Magon was convicted under section 211 of the Criminal Code and sentenced to 21 years, and that he was also convicted under the espionage act and sentenced to 20 years. The fact is that Magon was sentenced for only 1 year under section 211 and to 20 years for violating the espionage act. It is also a fact that his sole offense was publishing the article which I read. He was not convicted for two separate offenses, as the statement implied. I am informed that the statement that he had previously been twice convicted under Federal laws for "anarchistic activities" is erroneous, and that his prior conviction was for a breach of our neutrality laws by aiding from the United States in the Mexican revolution against Diaz.

What I most resent is the misleading references to Magon's belief in anarchism and the implication that he was an advocate of murder, bombing, and forcible resistance of Government. From the information I get, he never believed in or advocated any such thing. He was a believer in the doctrines of Proudhon and of Tolstoy—in a world ruled by good will, cooperation, and brotherhood, instead of policemen's clubs and bayonets—what is called a "philosophical anarchist." The reference to Magon as an anarchist is a mere smoke screen. He was not convicted of being an anarchist, for there is no law against it, and the reference is merely to mislead and to prejudice his case.

The New York World of November 25, 1922, carries an editorial upon the Magon case which affords food for thought:

MAGON AND MORSE.

Ricardo Flores Magon died last Tuesday in Leavenworth Penitentiary, having served nearly 5 years of a 21-year sentence imposed under the espionage act. A Mexican disciple of Tolstoy, Magon had spent a number of years in prison as a result of revolutionary activities against the Diaz régime; then, entering the United States in quest of greater freedom to speak and write in the cause of Mexican enfranchisement, he was caught in 1918 dragnet and received a maximum penalty for alleged interference with the conduct of the war. In reality, the article for which he was convicted had no bearing on the war with Germany except what was read into it by prosecution. That, of course, was not unusual. In the heydey of witch burners and unofficial spies, Magon was only one of the victims.

The point of the case lies in the fact that Attorney General Daugherty, had been informed by the prison physician that Magon was going blind, and had been repeatedly warned by others that he would die unless pardoned. Mr. Daugherty remained unshaken. He wrote that he had taken up the matter with the President and that "both of us were agreed that no action should be taken directed to the granting of Executive clemency." It is not often that a reason is vouchsafed for decisions of this nature, but Mr. Daugherty did give a reason as follows: "He regards his prosecution by the Government as a persecution and makes it appear that he is a martyr. He in no manner evinces any evidence of repentance but on the contrary rather prides himself on his defiance of the law."

By a great effort, one remembers, after this high moral sentiment, that it was Harry Daugherty who procured the pardon for Charles W. Morse on the ground that Mr. Morse was dying. That was many years ago, and Mr. Morse, though much older than Magon, is not yet dead. Indeed, Mr. Daugherty is trying at this moment to send him to jail on another charge. Undoubtedly, Mr. Morse was repentant. Or is the moral simply that it is better to break the banking laws whenever there is a profit in doing so than to fool with free speech in this land of the free?

I now quote from a recent editorial from the Baltimore Sun, which is full of interest:

ANOTHER POLITICAL PRISONER FREE.

The name of Ricardo Flores Magon has been removed from the long roll of political prisoners still in Leavenworth. No belated Executive clemency gives him this freedom. Death has intervened where Attorney General Daugherty was adamant.

Magon was not an American. He was not a subject of any nation participating in the late war. The articles in the little paper which he published in Los Angeles were in the Spanish tongue and as little likely to "discourage recruiting" as a Dutch edition of the New Testament. But the espionage act was broad enough to catch him, and now, after serving 5 years of a 21-year sentence, Magon is dead. After all he was only a Mexican radical, and what does it matter that the Mexican Chamber of Deputies is said to be draping its rostrum black in honor of him?

* * * * * * *

To the Attorney General the President of this country can give great powers. Powers of life and death, power to stamp out the soul by months and years of jail, power to procure a pardon for men like Charles W. Morse, power to deny a pardon to men like Magon. But one power only God can give to men in authority, and that is the power of understanding.

Magon was not released, it seems, because he would not say he was "repentant." And in a letter of which the following passage is the core Mr. Daugherty found evidence that Magon "prides himself on his defiance of law":

"I do not complain against my fate. I am receiving what I have always gotten in my 30 years of struggling for justice—persecution. I never expected to succeed in my endeavor, but I felt it to be my duty to persevere, conscious that sooner or later humanity will adopt a way of social intercourse with love as a basis."

Magon was a follower of Tolstoy. Imprisoned in Mexico under the autocracy of Diaz, he sought America as a haven where he might work for the liberation of the peons of his country. Caught in the dragnet of war hysteria, he was given what amounted to a life sentence in Leavenworth.

The gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER] included in his extension of remarks in the RECORD of December 11 a peculiarly vicious statement from American Defense Society. I have read the statement with amazement. It would be difficult, indeed, to include in a statement of the same length more downright misrepresentations. Yet by including it the gentleman from California appears to give it his approval. I will not deal with the statement further than by quoting the statement of Dr. John A. Ryan, of Washington, who, because of his standing as a scholar in the field of morals and economics and because of his special knowledge of the cases discussed, is an excellent authority. Doctor Ryan says:

The bulletin given to the press by the American Defense Society on December 11 is grossly misleading. It asserts that the political prisoners for whom amnesty is sought are detained in jail not merely for violating free speech but also for various acts of physical violence. It asserts, in fact, that they are "murderers and destructionists."

The American Defense Society makes a disingenuous effort to support these assertions by quoting the substance of the four charges upon which these men were tried. The first two charges involve crimes of violence. The third and fourth involve only written and spoken opposition to the war.

The dishonest tactics of the American Defense Society consist of failing to state that the convictions under the first two charges were set aside by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in the seventh and eighth judicial districts. These reversals affect the great majority of the political prisoners. Had the cases of the rest of them been appealed in the same way the higher court would undoubtedly have reversed the finding of the lower court in those cases also.

Therefore counts 1 and 2, which charge violence, are entirely irrelevant in any discussion of the continued imprisonment of these men.

The sum of the matter is that all the political prisoners are now serving sentences under count 4, which involved merely oral or written or printed expressions. None of them is legally detained in prison for any offense of destruction or violence.

How horrible were their oral or written or printed expressions? Well, they could all be reduced to assertions that the war was a capitalistic war; that the working classes were fools to engage in it; and that the way to prevent war is through a general strike. For these utterances the majority of the political prisoners were sentenced to terms of from 10 to 20 years.

Did any of these men really commit the acts of poisoning and burning and other forms of destruction which are charged against them in the statement of the American Defense Society? I do not know. What I do know is that they were not legally convicted of these crimes or their conviction in the lower courts was reversed by the upper courts.

The mention of these crimes, therefore, in any statement against the political prisoners is irrelevant and unfair. It is, in effect, an attempt to deprive them of the "due process of law" which the Constitution guarantees to all persons in the United States.

The contention of the American Defense Society is that these prisoners should be kept in jail not because of offenses of which they have been convicted but because of other offenses of which they have not been convicted. This is an outright denial of "due process of law." It is a greater injury to our institutions than all the wild utterances of all the I. W. W.'s, whether in or out of jail.

It comes from men who think they are superpatriots, but it is fundamentally unpatriotic, because it is contrary to one of the fundamental principles of the Constitution. It is an appeal to legal violence, or even to a kind of legal lynching. The political prisoners may be guilty of a hundred detestable acts, but as long as they have not been convicted of them they should not be kept in prison on account of them.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER] is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Gentlemen of the committee, you have just heard the very impassioned appeal, the very fervent defense made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON], for whom personally I have nothing but regard and esteem, but with whom I so greatly differ in the matter which he has discussed. But in the strained oratorical effort which the gentleman has made before the House he in his effort to strengthen his weak argument has again resorted to certain challenges, and, as I just said, he seems to be particularly strong on challenges to offset, I suppose, the weakness of his arguments, so in the brief time now allotted me I want to reiterate to the gentleman that I propose, as I have proposed over and over again, to answer not only the challenges made by him here today but to accept the challenges—oratorical, of course—which he made in his speech of like character on December 11. The House, I hope, if not the gentleman from Alabama, will be satisfied when I am done. I am having prepared from the official records of the Department of Justice abstracts of the necessary documents which in due season I shall place in the RECORD. I shall have to assume, of course, and do assume, that those records are correct, because they were the records upon which this prosecution was based and upon which the convictions alluded to were secured. I am going to have those documents inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the information of the gentleman from Alabama as well as for the benefit of the people of the country and the entire membership of Congress. Of course, I am not surprised at what has taken place on the floor of the House in the last few days in this connection and in which the gentleman from Alabama has taken such an important part. It is all a part of a gigantic program, a drive for the liberation of these men who were convicted of espionage, of treachery to our laws and institutions when that Great World War was in progress. I hope and believe that the Members of this body involved in the net, and I, of course, include the gentleman from Alabama, are the innocent victims of maudlin sentimentalism, which has oftimes before in the history of man enveighed heavily upon those more or less amenable to this most insidious type of appeal, because it aims, as it has done in this case, to the heart and not the head. I believe in coordinating mind and heart and in leavening human sympathy with patriotic good judgment. This seems to me to be lacking in the psychology of those who have been so grossly misled in this matter.

The White House grounds were being picketed only a few days ago and perhaps are to-day. Matter of the kind I hold in my hand and which I desire to have inserted in the RECORD is being broadcasted to the membership of this House, requesting the release of so-called political prisoners en bloc for Christmas. Attached thereto is a card in which they plead, in the spirit of Christmas, which the soul of they among the prisoners who would destroy American institutions do not know, for the unconditional release of the 62 political prisoners now serving 5 to 20 years in the Federal penitentiary. Certain Members of the so-called "progressive" group, which has recently been organized—and God save the name "progressive" if it alludes to anything concerning that Progressivism which so many patriotic Americans were proud to own in 1912 and which was championed by that great American, Theodore Roosevelt, who in silent vigil still watches over the America he loved so well from a sacred mound on the shores of Oyster Bay—have made an attempt through a certain kind of the press in this country and through meetings, in which various of the so-called purported membership of that organization have taken part, to secure the release of these war criminals. We Members of the House, and in this I believe I include 98 per cent, who feel that the law of the land, irrespective of who it affects, should be carried out, and that justice, inexorable though it be, should be satisfied in this matter, propose to fight this wholesale amnesty movement to the finish, I will say to the gentleman from Alabama, and we throw down the gauntlet to those who so deeply sympathize with those who would upset the Government and institutions for which our comrades fought and bled and died on Flanders Field in 1917 and in 1918. We will keep the faith, buddies, never fear. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks by printing in the RECORD the copy of a document called "Prisoners of Hope," and another document headed "Release the Political Prisoners for Christmas."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The documents referred to are as follows:

PRISONERS OF HOPE—MEN WHO BELIEVE IN THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES AS IT IS WRITTEN.

[By Ellen Winsor.]

A nation denied free speech is a nation without a soul. Its charter of freedom is but a scrap of paper; its institutions but the high bulwarks of tyranny; its elected officials no better than medieval monarchs. Such is America to-day. We have permitted one tyrant to throw into prison a group of idealists whose courage and faith should be the watchwords of a people. We permit another tyrant to hold them behind iron bars whilst a subtle poison of unrest and discontent eats its way into the heart of the Nation. Who are these prisoners? For what were they sentenced? Why are they not released?

WHO ARE THESE PRISONERS?

College graduates, engineers, poets, a cartoonist, journalists, skilled workers, agricultural and unskilled migratory workers—feared, hated, persecuted, despised—America's political prisoners.

And what do we mean by a political prisoner? One convicted for an offense of which the sole evidence is an expression of opinion as distinct from the commission of any overt act.

Fifty-eight of the political prisoners are members of the Industrial Workers of the World; five have no connection whatever with the organization.

Was there 1 among these 63 men who was an agent of the enemy? No. Did anyone of them bear arms against the United States? No. Did even one of them commit any overt act whatsoever against the Government? No.

In fact, against a large number of the prisoners there was not brought one scintilla of evidence of any kind to prove their guilt. Think of it! The shame of it! Judge and jury trifling with men's lives with no more respect for justice than a cat has for a tortured bird.

Realize, ye stiff upholders of the Constitution, that the only offense for which these prisoners are now serving time is alleged opposition to the war, written or spoken. You do not believe it? Refer, then, to the decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in the Chicago and Wichita cases, and what do you find? The fact that these prisoners have been completely exonerated of any charge of violent acts against persons or property, and are therefore only guilty of that most heinous of crimes in America—free speech.

Ah, you say, I admit that it is true that the men in the Chicago and Wichita groups are guilty of only indulging in their constitutional rights of free speech, but what is the status of the prisoners convicted in the Sacramento trial? In reply, be it known, O reader, that the Sacramento men, realizing from long and bitter experience that there is little or no justice in American courts for the working class, wisely decided to put no money in lawyers' fees or in the legal claptrap connected with court procedure. They sat during their trial in noble silence, while their prosecutors fretted and fumed over all the barren verbiage in their legal vocabulary. On a technicality, therefore, owing to this silent defense, the superior courts can not review their case. Lawyers who have examined the one-side record of this Sacramento trial bear witness to the fact that it differs in no respect from the Chicago and Wichita cases. For a whim of the law these men may rot and wither for 20 years in jail for all the Department of Justice cares.

Such is America to-day.

Feared, hated, persecuted, despised—why? Because it is a crime for a workingman to attempt to better his condition—a blacker crime than putting into practice his belief in the Constitution. Read, mark, and learn, O ignorant Americans, what ye may do in these United States to keep out of jail and what deeds will land you in a steel cell, 4 by 9, for 5, 10, or 20 years:

RECIPES FOR KEEPING OUT OR GETTING INTO JAIL.

Be a shipbuilder, and during a war rob the Government.

Profiteer in food while your country is at war. For this you may be fined. Remain calm. The Government will pay your fine later.

Conspire to defraud the Government on war-time contracts.

Attempt to better your living conditions or to raise your standards of life in any way.

Tell your employer the food is rotten or that the bunk house in the lumber camp is lousy and sour.

Demand a living wage from your boss.

Furthermore, if you have a choice in the matter, remember it is safer in this sweet land of liberty to be a bomb plotter than a home builder or a believer in free speech. The President pardons men for the following deeds:

REASONS FOR PRESIDENTIAL PARDONS.

1. Conspiring to set on foot a military enterprise directed against a foreign country. (Jacobsen, pardoned for this, December 25, 1921.)

2. Providing doctored eyeglasses to registrants so as to get them off under the draft. (Kennedy, pardoned for this, December 25, 1921.)

3. Leaving the country unlawfully during a war in order to sell plans for a new gun to the German consul in Mexico. (Freese, pardoned for this, December 25, 1921.)

4. Attempting to blow up munitions ships. (Capt. Robert Fay, pardoned for this, August 31, 1922.)

And other similar cases too numerous to mention.

But try to shorten your work hours, to raise your wages, to secure decent living conditions, or to express an honest opinion, and, verily, your reward will be an American dungeon, with several preliminary coats of tar and feathers and a beating up given in the best American mob style.

Such is America to-day.

Let us examine further into the methods of how America is leading the world into the paths of freedom and democracy. Cast your eye over this table. It is called:

AN AMERICAN PILGRIM'S PROGRESS—1799–1917.

January 30, 1799: The act against criminal correspondence with a foreign government. Maximum penalty, 3 years.

1861: Section 6 of the Penal Code: Conspiracy to overthrow by force the Government of the United States, or to levy war against it, or to oppose by force its authority, or by force prevent, hinder, or delay the execution of any law of the United States. Maximum penalty, 6 years.

August 6, 1861: The act against recruiting soldiers or sailors to serve against the United States. Maximum penalty, 5 years.

August 6, 1861: The act against enlistment to serve against the United States. Maximum penalty, 3 years.

ESPIONAGE ACT, 1917.—MAXIMUM PENALTY, 20 YEARS.

He who placed the Statue of Liberty with her back turned to her country and her eyes directed across the seas to England was a prophet in his generation. In England, the maximum sentence for political prisoners during the war was 6 months. Here, 20 years! Alas, America!

Attorney General Harry M. Daugherty, the watch dog of Wall Street, and all his understudies and underlings, the whole pack of legal hounds, will tell you solemnly on their Bible oath, if need be, that there are no political prisoners in America. That there never have been political prisoners in America. However, there they are—63 of 'em—but the Government does not recognize them! Ignorance is bliss for the watch dog of Wall Street.

But, Mr. Daugherty, what about President Lincoln? Or do you not recognize him either? This is what that wise, magnanimous, noble man, not a petty, peanut politician, had to say:

"The President—anxious to favor a return to the normal course of the administration—directs that all political prisoners or State prisoners now held in military custody be released"—(from Executive Order No. 1, relating to political prisoners, February 14, 1862).

Rather a sound example for the recognition of political prisoners from the pen of the only great Republican President! Lincoln's proclamation is of greater importance in that it is a precedent for general amnesty. Does Mr. Harding need further historical evidence that one can declare a general amnesty and still remain a 100 per cent American President? If so, let him study this:

"Therefore, I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, do proclaim, declare, and make known to all persons who have directly or by implication, participated in the existing rebellion * * * that a full pardon is hereby granted to them * * *."

His successor in office said: "To the end, therefore, that the authority of the Government of the United States may be restored and that peace, order, and freedom may be established, I, Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, do proclaim and declare that I hereby grant to all persons who have directly or indirectly, participated in the existing rebellion * * * amnesty and pardon. * * *"

A modern statesman of international reputation, Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH, said at Chicago, October 1, 1922: "Of recent years a vicious doctrine, treasonable to the American Constitution, has obtained a foothold in this country. This doctrine says that during a war the Constitution is suspended. The rights guaranteed to all citizens under the Constitution were provided for just such emergencies, when public opinion is inflamed and it is difficult to get justice through ordinary channels. * * * It should be remembered that this Government and the Constitution by which it lives were founded on revolution and free speech. * * * Every day that our political prisoners remain in prison we are denying the principle on which this Republic is founded—the right of free speech, free press, and free assemblage."

Oh, for a President who would dare to do the right thing in spite of the watch dog of Wall Street! That he would say: "I so cherish freedom, that even though it be against the wishes of my financial masters, I do hereby declare a general amnesty for political prisoners." Why can he not do this thing? Why does he not do it? Would it not be better to defy the whole world than to sit with a blackened soul in a whited sepulchre? It will be a glorious day for America, Mr. President, when you throw down your false gods, and grant an unconditional release for all political prisoners. (Reprinted from the Voice of the People.)

RELEASE THE POLITICAL PRISONERS FOR CHRISTMAS—ARE 110,000,000 AMERICANS AFRAID OF THE IDEAS OF 62 MEN?—DO YOU KNOW?

1. Sixty-two war-time prisoners are still held in prison in the United States.

2. These men are serving sentences of 5 to 20 years.

3. These men are in prison solely for expression of opinion in writing or speech.

4. The espionage act under which they were convicted was repealed over a year and a half ago.

5. Every other country that took part in the war has released its war-time prisoners years ago.

6. All the German spies and agents who tried to wreck our industries and shipping have long since been freed.

DO YOU KNOW?

Distinguished lawyers said that most of these 62 men should never have been convicted and that all of them should be released.

These lawyers include:

Hon. Charles Nagel, Secretary of Commerce and Labor under President Taft.

Hon. Francis Fisher Kane, ex-Federal district attorney, of Philadelphia.
Zarachiah Chaffee, Harvard University Law School.
Felix Frankfurter, Harvard University Law School.
Maj. Alexander Sidney Lanier, United States Army, retired.

DO YOU KNOW?

The following organizations are among those which have urged the immediate release of all these political prisoners:
Federal Council of Churches.
American Federation of Labor.
World War Veterans.
Fellowship of Reconciliation.
League for Democratic Control.
Socialist Party of America.
Women's International League for Peace and Freedom.
Workmen's Circle.

"Every day that our political prisoners remain in prison we are denying the principle on which this Republic is founded—the right of free speech, free press, and free assemblage."—(Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH, at Chicago, October 1, 1922.)

WAKE UP, AMERICANS.

Help us free these 62 men.
Help us set them free.
Help before it is too late.

THE WAR IS OVER.

They suffer to-day in vile jails for their belief in free speech.
They are American workingmen suffering for their activities in the labor movement.
One man died recently. One man has gone insane. Two are dying of tuberculosis. Others have heart disease or are losing their eyesight, etc.

PRESIDENT HARDING WILL RELEASE THEM IF YOU URGE IT.

For confirmation of these facts and further information, apply to Joint Amnesty Committee, 233 Maryland Building, Washington, D. C.
Tear off this card, sign your name and address, put on a 1-cent stamp, mail it to-day; or, better still, write a letter to President Harding.

PEACE ON EARTH, GOOD WILL TO MEN.

President WARREN G. HARDING,
The White House, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I plead in the spirit of Christmas for the immediate unconditional release of the 62 political prisoners now serving 5 and 20 years in Federal penitentiaries.

Name ——— ———,
Address ——— ———.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, how much time remains?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina still has two minutes if he desires to use it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LOGAN].

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD on the pending bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks on the pending bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

SALARIES, NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Secretary of the Navy, $12,000; Assistant Secretary, $5,000; and for chief clerk and such other employees as the Secretary of the Navy may deem necessary, $108,000; in all, $125,000: Provided, That, other than the Secretary and the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum, except the following: One $4,000, 2 at $3,000 each, 1 $2,500, 6 at $2,400 each, 2 at $2,250 each, and 3 at $2,000 each.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 2, line 4, strike out the words "as the Secretary of the Navy may deem necessary."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, this is pro forma in order that I may comply with a promise I made to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] to cite him to a specific instance where the mother of a minor boy was scared into withdrawing her application for his discharge from the Navy.

Messrs. Walters & Baker, a reputable firm of lawyers in the city of San Saba, Tex., called my attention to the fact that a young boy named Eddy had been induced to enlist in the Navy against the knowledge and consent of his widowed mother, and said that she was in destitute circumstances and needed him, and I later had the affidavits filed asking for his release. The Navy Department, in promising to have the boy discharged, says this:

When young Eddy enlisted, December 1, 1920, he made oath that he was born August 12, 1901, from which it would appear that his enlistment was taken in good faith, and considered legal and binding in all respects under the Revised Statutes, which make the enlistment of a boy 18 years of age, or over, without the consent of his parents or legal guardian, a valid contract.

When his mother read that statement coming from the Navy Department, here is her reply:

WILLOW CITY, TEX., September 5, 1922.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: I received your letter last night concerning the discharge of my boy, Terrel Robert Eddy. I have decided to let the matter drop, as I don't know what the boy swore, and I am afraid I might get him into trouble. He has one more year to serve in the Navy, and I think it best to leave him alone. However, I thank you very much for your trouble.

Yours very truly, MRS. SELMA EDDY.

You see how it affected this widow. When they tell her that her boy swore he was of a certain age, the anxious widowed mother suspects that the Government of the United States is going to put him into the penitentiary if she insists on his discharge, and she lets the matter drop. That is what happened in the case of this widowed, destitute mother, who needs the services of a minor son. I could call the attention of the gentleman to several instances like this.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a minute, please, and then I will. I want to give the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] another case of a young man named Robert Lee Bradshaw, from my home city, who was induced by a slick-tongued recruiting officer to enlist when he was not yet 16 years of age. The recruiting officer told him about traveling all over the world, and he enlisted without the knowledge or consent of his parents. When they asked that he be discharged I filed the proper affidavits with the Bureau of Navigation showing that he was not yet 16 years of age and asking that he be discharged because he was induced to enlist without the knowledge or consent of his parents. Promising to consider the case, on November 28, 1922, the Bureau of Navigation wrote the same kind of a letter, saying:

When young Bradshaw enlisted September 1, 1922, he made oath that he was born September 8, 1903, from which it would appear that his enlistment was taken in good faith and considered legal and binding in all respects under the Revised Statutes, which make the enlistment of a boy 18 years of age or over without the consent of his parents or legal guardian a valid contract.

That intimates to the parents that a prosecution might occur and that dishonorable discharge may follow if they insist upon his discharge. Why not discharge this 15-year old boy without all this implied threat? But let me call your attention to this other case to show that the Navy Department, when the Eddy boy enlisted, knew that he was under the lawful age for enlistment, because Messrs. Walters & Baker, this reputable firm of lawyers, of San Saba, Tex., say:

It seems that the department knew that he was under age from the fact that his mother, who is and was then a poor widow, received a message asking that she give her permission to him to join the Navy, and she immediately answered this message with a telegram stating in effect that she would not consent to same, and that her boy was but 17 years of age. She is in straitened circumstances and has five children, this son being her eldest and her main support.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I should like to ask you if you followed up these cases after you got these communications?

Mr. BLANTON. Of course I did not follow it up when the intimidated woman said she wanted to let the matter drop. I did not know but what there would be a dishonorable discharge. I did not want to force the boy, the son of a widowed mother, to take a dishonorable discharge from the Navy.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I just want to call the attention of the gentleman to one fact, and that is that I have had several cases of this kind, and when I went after them I always got them released.

Mr. BLANTON. And I have gotten several released. The point I am trying to make is this, that this Congress ought to give the Secretary of the Navy and the Bureau of Navigation to understand that when we produce evidence showing that a boy is only 15, 16, or 17 years of age and has been induced to join the Navy without the knowledge and consent of his parents they should discharge him and send him home without all this "monkey business."

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas if he has discussed this matter with Admiral Washington, of the Bureau of Navigation?

Mr. BLANTON. I have; and he is a splendid man, and he has sent lots of these boys home. When I can get a case personally to Admiral Washington he discharges the boys. But he is sometimes away on an extended trip. You can not always find him. You understand that while this letter was signed by him he likely never saw it personally.

Mr. OLIVER. I was going to bring that out. The gentleman says this letter was written by some clerk. I will say that Admiral Washington has never failed to discharge them promptly and send them home when the proper affidavits have been made.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is correct. When I have been able to find Admiral Washington personally he sees that they are sent home; but I am insisting that the Navy Department should not write these letters containing the implied threat of a dishonorable discharge and prosecution, which scare the fathers and mothers of these boys and cause them to withdraw the application for a discharge, as the Eddy widow did. Why should we not demand proper action on the part of the Navy Department?

Mr. FIELDS. What is the character of the discharge?

Mr. OLIVER. It is an honorable discharge.

Mr. BLANTON. Why should they impliedly be threatened with a discharge that is not honorable?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. We have heard a good deal about discharges from the Navy of under-age boys, and intimations have been made that the Bureau of Navigation has acted harshly in cases of this kind. Now, in justice to the Bureau of Navigation and Admiral Washington, a man of the highest integrity, kind and sympathetic, I want to refute any aspersion that may be cast on him or the bureau over which he presides. In every case that has come to my notice, and a great number have come under my observation, not only those from my own district but those of other Members of Congress, because of my membership on the Naval Committee, never in one instance in my knowledge has the Navy Department declined to discharge a man who entered the service under age when proof was shown.

They have gone further than that; in cases where they found a man who is over age but enlisted in the Navy who showed the need of his being at home on account of dependency, they have in many cases been lenient and given those men honorable discharges. If my friend from Texas desires to bring before this Congress and spread on the RECORD statements that that is not the fact and criticizing the Navy Department for doing as it has done, I think he will stand alone, as he stands alone in many other matters that he brings to this body.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New York will be alone on March 4.

Mr. VESTAL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HICKS. Yes.

Mr. VESTAL. I want to say that never in the six years that I have been a Member of Congress has the Navy Department refused to discharge any boy—I do not care what his age has been—when I was able to show that they needed that boy at home.

Mr. HICKS. I am glad to get the testimony of the gentleman from Indiana. There are times, of course, when men go into the Navy, overenthusiastic, perhaps, because of the coloring that the recruiting officers give to naval life, the visiting of foreign countries, the adventure which appeals to young men, and in some cases men will probably forswear themselves as to age. But when these cases come before the bureau in a proper way, supported by proper evidence, I do not believe there is a case in recent years on record when in peace times the Navy Department has not said that has been a mistake and given the boy an honorable discharge from the Navy.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, there is another side of this matter that it might be well to consider. I have all the sympathy in the world for the young boys who enlist in the Navy in a moment of enthusiasm and in the spirit of adventure and who later conclude that they do not like the service, and write appealing letters home to mother. We feel for the mother of such boys. From the discussion this afternoon one would judge that only the sons of widowed mothers did this sort of thing. That is, of course, not true. The Navy of the United States, Mr. Chairman, is not a bad place for a young boy with an adventurous spirit who desires to see the world—a little inclined to run away and have his fling.

I have some question whether or no we should in every case respond favorably, immediately and forthwith, to the request that a boy enlisted under those circumstances should be discharged. In the 25 years I have been here I have had quite a bit of experience in cases of this sort. I have in mind, I think, not less than half a dozen cases—and I have been trying to recall them as the discussion has been going on—where during the pendency of correspondence with a view of securing a discharge the parents or the boy or both have changed their minds in the matter. I recall a number of instances where I have myself advised, after learning all the circumstances—advised the parents to let the boy serve out his time. I have in mind one very recent case where the parents took a considerable journey to personally thank me for such advice.

One would imagine from some things that have been said that a boy who in his enthusiasm makes a misstatement in regard to his age and gets into the Navy has entered upon a service most unfortunate for him and unhappy for his family.

I do not think that is true generally. Quite the contrary. I do think that where boys have entered the Navy contrary to the wishes and desire of their parents, and it is very clear that the boy is needed at home, and if sent home would be of real service, we ought to endeavor to secure the discharge of such boys. But I think there are many of the cases where the boy is quite as well off in the Navy as he would be discharged. I do not think we ought to treat too lightly the offense on the part of a young boy for misstating his age. I think it is a good thing for a young man to learn early in life that he must not take a false oath; that he must not enter upon any enterprise under false pretenses; that he must not enter upon a service with the expectation of enjoying it, under misstatement of facts, and then expect to be allowed to leave it any moment that he concludes he would like some other adventure better. In all cases of this sort that have been called to my attention—and there have been many—I have felt it my duty to thoroughly inform myself as to all of the facts and circumstances, and I have not in all cases requested that the boy be discharged. I have come to the conclusion in quite a number of cases that the boy would after all, everything considered, be better off if he served out his term. Of course, if there be a widowed mother or an indigent father who may need the services of the boy, and it is very clear that he ought to be with them and have the benefit of their counsel and advice and assist them, we ought to get such a boy out. But not all the cases fall within that category.

There are many cases where a young fellow, having gone into the Navy without sufficient reflection, finding it not an altogether pleasant service, has been greatly benefited by being compelled to finish the term of his enlistment. [Applause.]

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I agree with much that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has said with regard to many boys being better off in the Navy than out of it. We all have cases of this kind in our districts, and it is always my rule to write and fully inform the parents before making application for the boy's discharge. I am glad to hear that the Navy is issuing honorable discharges in cases of this kind. I regret that the Army has not adopted the same policy. I do criticize the efforts of recruiting officers in many cases of this kind. Only a few days ago I received a letter from a constituent, a widow, stating that her son had enlisted in the Navy at the age of 15. That recruiting officer knew that the boy was under age. There is no question about that. My complaint of the department, which I have voiced heretofore, is that they are not more rigid with the recruiting officers. Recruiting officers should be reprimanded, should be disciplined, should be punished for taking into the service boys under age when their appearance is bound to convince the recruiting officer that they are under age.

I may not have an opportunity to refer to this when the Army bill is under consideration, and I take the opportunity to refer to it now. The Army has not been so liberal as the Navy. In cases of this kind a boy is given a discharge without honor. It is always painful for me to see a young man who is enthusiastic enough to go into the Army, and who, prompted by his patriotic impulse, enlists in the service, but because of his tender years becomes dissatisfied, thrown out of the service, and discharged without honor. I say it is unfair to have this campaign go on by the recruiting officers of the Army and the Navy, taking into the service the children of the country and then giving them discharge without honor, when the recruiting officers know full well that they are not of military age when they take them in. I protest against it, and I wish that the departments would take some action to correct that evil.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I remember during the period of the war that a widow came to my house and said she had four children. Three of them had enlisted, and she was very proud of it, but the fourth boy was under 16 and had run away from home. She said she wanted him home because she believed the home influence to be better than the influence of the Government. She said that when he arrived at the proper age, and then did not go to war, she would be ashamed of him. I made an application and the boy was discharged without dishonor. I have had many cases similar to that, and not one do I recall where the bureau did not discharge the boy. Perhaps the only penalty was in one case where he had to pay his fare home from the place where he was stationed.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. While this matter was discussed a little while ago, some erroneous statement was made, or perhaps suggested, I think, that the recruiting officer received some compensation or recognition if he obtained a large number of recruits for the service. That is not correct. A recruiting officer is detailed to that work in the same way that he is detailed to other work, and whether he gets one man or ten or a hundred into the Navy the fact does not make a particle of difference so far as compensation or his service record is concerned.

Mr. FIELDS. I remember no such statement as that.

Mr. HICKS. It was made here, perhaps in casual conversation.

Mr. BLANTON. It was not made in debate.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES, NAVY DEPARTMENT.

For professional and technical books and periodicals, law books, and necessary reference books, including city directories, railway guides, freight, passenger, and express tariff books, for department library, $2,000.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I had not intended to take up any of the time of the House during the discussion of this bill. I intended to express my sentiments toward the bill by voting for it on final passage. But I can not remain silent after the delivery of the very eloquent address of my friend from California [Mr. MACLAFFERTY]—and he is my friend. With most of what he said I agree, but I have to protest when he attempts to "Conan Doyle" the wraith of the dead and buried Alameda naval base project, buried under some 6 to 20 feet of water in an eternal grave on a mud flat on which borings have been made for over 250 feet and no bottom found other than quicksand and mud, on which certain people more or less interested are asking the Government of the United States to spend $160,000,000, a tax of about $1.40 per capita on every man, woman, and child in the United States, for the construction of an unnecessary naval base on San Francisco Bay, on property to which the city of Alameda has no title except a possessory title from the State of California to use it and lease it for a limited number of years for certain purposes to private persons, corporations, and firms, and to which the city of Alameda can give no title in fee to the United States Government, but only a perpetual possessory title to use certain mud banks for naval purposes only. If the Government should accept that site and spend forty or fifty million dollars in filling in that mud bank in an attempt to make it available for naval base purposes, and should find, as it would find, that the foundation was such that it could not carry the weight of a battleship, and should then wish to quit, the Government could not salvage and sell the site, but it would revert to the city of Alameda, and all of the moneys spent by the Government would be wasted, so far as the Government is concerned, although it might be a good thing for the city of Alameda and probably would be for the State of California.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURRY. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Is there any appropriation recommended by this committee for Alameda?

Mr. CURRY. An appropriation for Alameda on this bill would not be in order.

Mr. BUTLER. I had that in mind.

Mr. CURRY. But my friend from California was finding fault with the committee for not having included an item for it. Of course, before an appropriation could be included in this bill the matter would have to be considered by the Naval Affairs Committee and a bill reported, passed by the House and by the Senate, and then signed by the President.

Mr. Chairman, we have in San Francisco Bay a good navy yard, the nucleus of a good naval base, at Mare Island. It is on a rock foundation. The property, thousands of acres in extent, belongs to the United States Government in fee simple. It has cost about $40,000,000 to develop it. It is the best navy yard in the United States. It turns out better work at a cheaper cost and more expeditiously than any other yard, public or private, in this country. During the war there was no fault found with the work it turned out. There can not be any fault found with it now. When the time comes that the country needs more naval shore developemnt in San Francisco Bay that is the place to develop it. The whole bay is a naval base, but the proper place to develop for a navy yard and base is what you have now and what you have used for the past 50 years. The late Admiral Farragut, then a lieutenant, was its first commandant. He has been succeeded by many able naval officers. I dislike to appear in opposition to something that might result in the expenditure of $160,000,000 of American money unnecessarily in my State, but I fear the vision of my colleague of a developed and completed naval base at Alameda at the end of 40 years and the unnecessary expenditure of $160,000,000 of the people's money to accomplish that purpose on a site that in no way meets the requirement of such a plant is an ectoplasm of his imagination. There is no material substance to it.

I am a Representative from the State of California, from the third California district, but I hope that my attitude in this House has convinced the membership that I am not in favor of spending money unnecessarily in my district or any other district in this country; that I am first of all a representative of the American people; that I am interested in the national defense, and if I thought that the Mare Island Navy Yard——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CURRY. May I have three minutes more time?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CURRY. If I thought that Mare Island was not a proper place for a navy yard or a naval base and the adequate defense of the United States required another naval base or a navy yard built on San Francisco Bay, I would be one of the first—even if I lost my seat in Congress—to say to this House, if Alameda were a proper place or some other place were a proper place, and the defense of my country needed another naval base, do away with Mare Island and go to Alameda or elsewhere. If the Navy Department itself can give me one single solitary uncontroverted valid military reason for the expenditure of this unnecessary amount of money in the development of a place on San Francisco Bay other than Mare Island as a naval base I will quit. The facts of the matter are that the very best thought in the Navy is not in favor of Alameda. The real Navy and Army experts are in favor of the development of the Mare Island Navy Yard, and if a bill should ever properly come before the Committee on Naval Affairs of this House providing for the development of Alameda as a naval base I will not try to have any ex parte evidence given before that committee in favor of Mare Island, but I will subpœna the best experts in the Navy to appear before that committee and give their evidence of what they think is best and will submit the proposition on expert testimony from the Navy Department itself. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the pro forma amendment.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I hope we can make a little progress; this particular project is not in this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I just want to answer a criticism. I called attention to a specific case where a poor widow with five children, destitute, had her minor son join the Navy under lawful age without her knowledge or consent. These facts came to me from the reputable firm of lawyers, Walters & Baker, of San Saba, Tex., showing that attention of his unlawful age was brought to the Navy Department, because they wired his mother for consent and she wired back saying she protested against the boy being accepted; but he was accepted. I maintained that under such circumstances the Navy Department should release him immediately when the proper proof was filed, and not send a statement to the widowed mother that would make her believe that her son would be prosecuted and dishonorably discharged. I read the letter from this widow wherein she said: "I have decided to let the matter drop. I don't know what my boy swore. I am afraid I might get him in trouble, and withdraw my application for his discharge." That was my offense, calling a case of that kind to the attention of Congress, and because I did it the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] gets up and criticizes and gets personal and calls attention to the fact that I have to stand alone sometimes on the floor of the House. Is it a disgrace to stand alone when a man believes he is right? I am not afraid to stand alone on a proposition when I believe I am right. I offer no apology to the gentleman from New York or the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] for standing alone sometimes when I believe I am right. It is easy to drift with the tide. It requires strength to swim upstream. I am sorry that after the 4th of March I will not have a chance for either one of those gentlemen to back me up on propositions. They will not be here then. I did not get personal. I did not try to throw cabbage bouquets at either of them. I was standing up here fighting for the rights of a destitute widow whose son was wrongfully inducted into the Navy, and it ill becomes the distinguished gentleman from New York to criticize me. That is all I have to say.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAY, MISCELLANEOUS.

For commissions and interest; transportation of funds; exchange; mileage to officers of the Navy and Naval Reserve Force while traveling under orders of the United States, and for actual personal expenses of officers of the Navy and Naval Reserve Force while traveling abroad under orders, and for traveling expenses of civilian employees, and for mileage, at 5 cents per mile, to midshipmen entering the Naval Academy while proceeding from their homes to the Naval Academy for examination and appointment as midshipmen; for actual traveling expenses of female nurses; actual expenses of officers while on shore patrol duty; hire of launches or other small boats in Asiatic waters; for rent of buildings and offices not in navy yards; expenses of courts-martial, prisoners and prisons, and courts of inquiry, boards of inspection, examining boards, with clerks, and witnesses' fees, and traveling expenses and costs; expenses of naval defense districts; stationery and recording; religious books; newspapers and periodicals for the naval service; all advertising for the Navy Department and its bureaus (except advertising for recruits for the Bureau of Navigation); copying; ferriage; tolls; costs of suits; commissions, warrants, diplomas, and discharges; relief of vessels in distress; recovery of valuables from shipwrecks; quarantine expenses; reports; professional investigation; cost of special instruction at home and abroad, including maintenance of students and attachés; information from abroad and at home, and the collection and classification thereof; all charges pertaining to the Navy Department and its bureaus for ice for the cooling of drinking water on shore (except at naval hospitals), and not to exceed $225,000 for telephone rentals and tolls, telegrams and cablegrams; postage, foreign and domestic, and post-office box rentals; for necessary expenses for interned persons and prisoners of war under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department, including funeral expenses for such interned persons or prisoners of war as may die while under such jurisdiction, and for payment of claims for damages under naval act approved July 11, 1919; and other necessary and incidental expenses; in all, $2,730,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the expense of any naval district unless the commandant thereof shall be also the commandant of a navy yard, naval training station, or naval operating base: Provided further, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for clerical, inspection, and messenger service in navy yards and naval stations, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, shall not exceed $625,000.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice in the hearings on page 637 that Admiral Potter stated that they have a balance in the fund of $3,400,000.

Mr. KELLEY. We gave you too much money?

Admiral POTTER. No, sir. The balance of the 1922-23 appropriation available on June 30, 1922, was $6,483,000.

But looking up the bill of last year I find the appropriation was $700,000, and I was wondering why it could not be cut more——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think the gentleman from Florida is under a misapprehension as to the item under consideration. This item we are considering now is "Pay, miscellaneous." I think the gentleman refers to "Provisions, Navy."

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT, NAVY.

For all emergencies and extraordinary expenses, exclusive of personal services in the Navy Department or any of its subordinate bureaus or offices at Washington, D. C., arising at home or abroad, but impossible to be anticipated or classified, to be expended on the approval and authority of the Secretary of the Navy, and for such purposes as he may deem proper, $40,000.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I could have obtained the information if I had had an opportunity to hear the entire speech of the gentleman from Michigan, but I was called from the Chamber. Do I understand we have pretty clear information as to whether we have sufficient men in the Navy to man the treaty Navy?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say to the gentleman that the information that was presented to the House eight or nine months ago is not materially different from the information now obtainable. I will say this, that at the present time—although we are not on that item now——

Mr. TINCHER. I know.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. At the present time there are 52,900 men in the treaty fleet; that the Navy Department anticipated putting on the treaty fleet as soon as the ships that are now being decommissioned are put out of commission, 3,889 more, and 1,700 more on that date on transports, making a total of 58,000 men on the fleet, leaving 28,000 men for the shore. That is the distribution of the 86,000 men.

Mr. TINCHER. Does the department still claim that they want 28,000 men on shore?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. Is that the kind of disposition that was represented to the House they would make of the people at the time they were clamoring for what they called an increase sufficient to man the fleet?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Well, the gentleman's memory is good, and I am not clear in my mind as to what division they proposed.

Mr. TINCHER. I thought they claimed that they had to have these men in order to properly man these treaty ships. Now, if it is true that they have been without that increase, I suppose the gentleman will refrain from bringing a bill in as he did a year ago for the reason that he treated it as res adjudicata, so far as this Congress is concerned, and we will maintain 28,000 men on shore until we have a new court.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL.

SALARIES, NAVY DEPARTMENT.

For officers and employees in the office of the Judge Advocate General, $76,420: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum except the following: Solicitor, $4,000; attorneys—3 at $3,000 each, 3 at $2,500 each, 3 at $2,400 each; law clerks—2 at $2,250 each, 1 $2,200, 3 at $2,000 each.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. RANKIN. I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 10 minutes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will not the gentleman content himself with five?

Mr. RANKIN. If there is objection, I will.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention of the House to an apparently inspired newspaper article, or series of articles, that have been going out from Washington from time to time relative to the farm bloc in this body, and especially to one that recently appeared in the papers throughout the country to the effect that the farm bloc in the House had deserted Henry Ford on his bid for Muscle Shoals. I will not take the time of the House to read all the article, but will call attention to the headlines and then read enough of the body of the dispatch to show its general trend. The headline which I have before me reads as follows:

FARM BLOC QUITS FORD SHOAL BID.

Farm bloc in Congress deserts Ford plan in favor of Government operation.

Under that ominous headline we find the following laughable statement:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 6.—The House "farm bloc" Wednesday deserted Henry Ford by withdrawing support for his plan to lease the Government Muscle Shoals property.

Let me pause here long enough to say that there is not a member of the farm bloc in the House, so far as I have been able to find, who has deserted the Ford proposition. If there is one under the sound of my voice, I want him to stand up and say so. [After a pause.] Not a man rises. Every man before me who is a member of the farm bloc knows that the farm bloc has not deserted Ford, and that the statement above quoted is absolutely erroneous. But let me proceed to read you the most amusing part of this most amusing article, which is as follows:

In a bill introduced in the House by Representative DICKINSON, leader of the bloc, Government ownership of the property is to be continued, etc.

Mr. Chairman, before taking the floor to discuss this ridiculous statement, I called up the office of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] and notified him that I was going to do so, because I did not want to discuss it in his absence, or at least without his having notice and being given an opportunity to be present.

It is hard for me to believe—in fact, I refuse to believe—that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] is responsible for the preposterous statement that he is "leader of the farm bloc" in this House. He has never been elected to, appointed to, or recognized as head or leader of the farm bloc in the House, and it certainly is a huge joke for the newspapers to refer to him as such. I understand that references to him as head of the farm bloc went the round of the press in Iowa, and possibly other Western States, during the last campaign, and I have even heard it intimated that he made a lecture tour recently as head of the farm bloc, but I refuse to believe such reports. Surely no member of this House would arrogate to himself leadership in a body of two or three hundred intelligent men without their knowledge or consent.

As a matter of fact, the farm bloc in the House is not a concrete organization. Every member of this body who is from an agricultural district, and who conscientiously represents his constituents, is a member of the farm bloc. He controls his own vote, and he is neither led nor delivered by any imaginary or self-appointed leader. There is no chosen leader or head of the bloc in the House, as I said, but every member is free to vote his own convictions on any and all propositions, and is answerable only to the people of the district which he is sent here to represent.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. I understand the paper says that the farm bloc will do so-and-so, and then it says that Mr. DICKINSON is the head of the farm bloc. That is sufficient, that settles it, so far as he is concerned, does it not?

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, yes; as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] ironically suggests, that makes him the self-appointed head of the farm bloc, so far as he is concerned, provided he inspired or condoned the statement. But so far as the other members are concerned, we are not bound by any such ex parte proceedings.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is it a certainty who is the head of the farm bloc?

Mr. RANKIN. As I said a moment ago, there is no concrete organization of a farm bloc. No leader has been chosen, and no one is authorized to pose as the head of the bloc.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That is what I understood the gentleman to say.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] is not warranted or empowered to speak in behalf of the farm bloc?

Mr. RANKIN. Why, certainly not. He is no more the leader of the farm bloc than is the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] or any other Member who conscientiously represents an agricultural district.

Mr. BUTLER. Who compose the farm bloc? I am a Representative of an agricultural district, and I am not a member of it or of any faction in the House.

Mr. RANKIN. Are you not a member of the farm bloc?

Mr. BUTLER. No. That is a distinction that I do not claim or appreciate.

Mr. RANKIN. I am willing to let the RECORD show that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] is not a member of the farm bloc. I said that the members of the farm bloc were men who represented agricultural districts and who are conscientiously in sympathy with the agricultural interests.

But, Mr. Chairman, the statement that the farm bloc in the House has deserted the Ford proposition seems to be a part of that propaganda that has been going on ever since his offer was submitted, more than a year ago. When I first came here, in February, 1921, just before the old Congress expired, I heard some of the very men who are now denouncing and opposing the Ford proposition advocating scrapping the Muscle Shoals project. They regarded it as absolutely worthless. But when Henry Ford came forward with his bid, containing a proposition to manufacture fertilizer for the benefit of the farmers of the country, the Fertilizer Trust began to propaganda Congress against the Ford proposition. Mr. Ford's representative said at the hearings on the Ford proposition that he believed Mr. Ford could produce fertilizer at Muscle Shoals so as to reduce the price of that material 50 per cent. What would that mean to the farmers of America? Senator HEFLIN, of Alabama, said on the floor of the Senate a few days ago that the farmers of Alabama alone use $20,000,000 worth of fertilizer annually. Reduce that 50 per cent, and you save the farmers of that State alone $10,000,000 a year. The same may be said of other States. In my humble opinion, if we will accept the Ford offer and turn this great project over to him he will save the farmers of this country hundreds of millions of dollars every year that rolls around in the price of fertilizer alone, to say nothing of the great benefit it will be to the American people in reclaiming lands that are now considered as worn out. Thousands of men who are now out of work will be given employment at living wages, without placing a constant drain on the Treasury of the United States.

The Power Trust has been busy spreading anti-Ford propaganda, and trying to make the people believe that if Henry Ford should get this project he would use all the power himself, and that there would be none left for distribution. Every man who has investigated the proposition knows that such would not be the case. The fact is that the Power Trust is fighting this Ford offer because they realize that if he gets control of Muscle Shoals he will be able to give the people power at a much cheaper rate than they are getting it now, and the power companies do not want him as a competitor. They know that he will make that part of the country hum with industry, and they would rather see the country remain at a standstill than to see it enjoy this prosperity without their getting the lion's share of the proceeds.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes, for a question.

Mr. KEARNS. Does the gentleman know that when Mr. Ford made his offer to take over Muscles Shoals he only agreed to make about a million tons of fertilizer, provided he could make it at all, and that there are over 18,000,000 tons used in the United States? How is 1,000,000 tons going to bring down the price?

Mr. RANKIN. One question is enough. That shows how the gentleman feels on the proposition. It is the same old stereotyped argument. If you will turn Muscle Shoals over to Henry Ford and let it be known that he will make fertilizer at all, it will throw such a bomb into the camp of the Fertilizer Trust that you will see the price come down within the reach of the average farmer.

No, Mr. Chairman, the farm bloc has not deserted the Ford offer. Those of us who have favored his proposition ever since it was made are still supporting it, and we are still asking that the committee to which the matter has been referred, and of which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS] is a member, will bring the matter before the House and give us a chance to vote on it, and you will see that the farm bloc in the House has not deserted the Ford proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the pro forma amendment.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I shall not object to my friend KEARNS going ahead; but this Muscle Shoals proposition might consume more time than we have to spare, and after the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS] concludes I think I shall object to having anything more on the subject of Muscle Shoals.

Mr. OLIVER. Reserving the right to object, I understand the gentleman from Ohio desires to speak out of order.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; he wants to speak on Muscle Shoals.

Mr. OLIVER. I think there should be a reply, inasmuch as the gentleman proposes to speak out of order.

Mr. BEGG. I do not see any reason for a reply. You have already had 10 minutes.

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman from Ohio has filed a report on this subject. I think the House is pretty familiar with his position, and if there is something to be written in the RECORD at this time on a matter that in no way relates to the bill, I feel that there ought to be a reply.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman did not object when the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] took the floor.

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman from Mississippi was not discussing the details of the Ford proposition but was rather giving a correct statement as to the attitude of Mr. Dickerson, and he very properly said he did not understand that Mr. Dickerson had ever authorized anyone to say that he represented the farm bloc or that he was speaking for the farm bloc.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. OLIVER. I object, if the gentleman is going to speak out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION.

TRANSPORTATION AND RECRUITING.

For travel allowance of enlisted men discharged on account of expiration of enlistment; transportation of enlisted men and apprentice seamen and applicants for enlistment at home and abroad, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; transportation to their homes, if residents of the United States, of enlisted men and apprentice seamen discharged on medical survey, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; transportation of sick or insane enlisted men and apprentice seamen to hospitals, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; transportation of enlisted men of the Naval Reserve Force to and from duty, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; apprehension and delivery of deserters and stragglers, and for railway guides and other expenses incident to transportation; expenses of recruiting for the naval service; rent of rendezvous and expenses of maintaining the same; advertising for and obtaining men and apprentice seamen; actual and necessary expenses in lieu of mileage to officers on duty with traveling recruiting parties; transportation of dependents of enlisted men; in all, $4,000,000.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. TILSON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. OLIVER. Reserving the right to object, I understand that it is the desire of the gentleman in charge of the bill that no further discussion be allowed out of order.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No. What I thought was this, Mr. Chairman, that the Muscle Shoals matter is full of controversy.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. And if we went into it extensively a large amount of time would be consumed. One speech having been made on one side, and the gentleman from Ohio desiring to speak on the other side, I thought perhaps it was only fair that two speeches should be made, and then the debate closed up on that subject.

Mr. OLIVER. I shall not object.

Mr. KNUTSON. When the agricultural appropriation bill comes up there will be ample opportunity to take up the several generous offers that have been made.

Mr. OLIVER. I shall not interpose any objection to the request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] that at the end of five minutes all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, the only reason I rise to talk on the Muscle Shoals proposition of Mr. Ford at this time is because there has been sent out, through Congress and otherwise, information relative to this offer that is very misleading, indeed, to the American people. Those who favor the Ford offer have attempted to gain the sympathy of the farmer by pretending to him that Henry Ford, if his offer should be accepted, would use this gigantic plant at Muscle Shoals and the water power at Dams Nos. 2 and 3 for the manufacture of fertilizer. Mr. Ford in his proposition to the Secretary of War has not agreed to make one pound of fertilizer at Muscle Shoals unless he can make it at a profit to himself.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KEARNS. No; I can not in five minutes. Even if he can make fertilizer at a profit to himself, he only agrees to use one-tenth part of that power in the manufacture of this very much needed commodity. The Ford propagandist never, for reasons obvious, tells the country this fact. This is concealed from the public.

He tells the Military Affairs Committee both of the House and the Senate very frankly that he intends to use the other nine-tenths of the power which the Government gives him practically free for the purpose of carrying on a manufacturing plant down there for his own profit. He will manufacture with this other nine-tenths whatever is deemed most profitable to him unrestrained by any authority. He also proposes in the proposition he makes to the Secretary of War that the Federal water power act be laid aside in his case, so that the Government will have no control over his activities. Every other man or set of men in the United States who get water-power rights are under the control of the Federal Government. Any other man or set of men who get water-power rights at Muscle Shoals can get it for a period of 50 years and no longer. He demands a term of 100 years, and there are those here who would give him these special privileges. Every other man or set of men who get rights in the water power in this country are required to build their dams at their own expense.

In this instance Henry Ford demands that the United States Government out of the Federal Treasury shall build his dam for him and allow him to use it for 100 years with a rental at 4 per cent. He agrees that he will pay into the Treasury of the United States $55,000 per annum for the upkeep of these dams, and yet every engineer who appeared before our committee testified that the minimum estimate is 1 per cent of the cost of construction for the upkeep of the dam and the maximum cost of upkeep 3 per cent, and the cost of construction would be $67,000,000. So it would cost the American people to keep up the dams for 100 years $670,000 per annum less $55,000 of this sum to be paid by Ford. That is the minimum cost, and if it should reach the maximum cost of 3 per cent it would be three times that amount, or $1,845,000 for repairs alone.

Every other man who gets water-power rights in the United States not only builds the dam but he pays for the upkeep. Ford writes into the contract that if these waters should wash out the dam, carry away any property or human life, the Government of the United States would pay the damage. He guards himself against the payment of one dollar's worth of damage that may occur. The men who advocate the acceptance of the Ford offer say that Ford is to pay back $50,000,000 of the $67,000,000, the cost of dam, and they send this statement out broadcast through the country and say with an emphasis that impells belief that they are speaking the truth. When anyone who has read the Ford offer says that, they must be attempting deliberately to carry a false message to the American people, because Ford only agrees to pay back about $4,500,000 of this $67,000,000 that the United States puts up for his dams, and how does he propose to pay this amount? He proposes to pay it in sums of $23,363 every six months during a period of 100 years. He says if the Government will compound the $23,363 at 4 per cent interest, at the end of 100 years it will amount to about $49,000,000. This is the rather unique way he proposes to pay back the $50,000,000, and yet these men who advocate the acceptance of the Ford offer say to the American people that Ford intends to pay back the full amount. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

OCEAN AND LAKE SURVEYS.

For hydrographic surveys, including the pay of the necessary hydrographic surveyors, cartographic draftsmen, and recorders, and for the purchase of nautical books, charts, and sailing directions, $75,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do that for the purpose of obtaining some information from the chairman of the committee as to what work the Hydrographic Bureau does in connection with the surveys of the Great Lakes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. My understanding is that this is not conducted within the adjacent or continental limits of the United States; it is in foreign waters.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the need of the descriptive title "Ocean and lake surveys"? I am acquainted with the work of the Hydrographic Bureau in surveys of the ocean and in interchanging the charts with foreign nations. But I was not acquainted with anything they did as far as the Great Lakes are concerned. In the appropriation bill for the War Department we have been carrying an item for the survey of the Great Lakes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. There is nothing in this that has any reference to the Great Lakes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Great Lakes, Ill., $250,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to make an inquiry of the chairman. The very much lamented statesman, Mr. Mann, who, to the great regret of the House and the loss of the country, has passed away, I think at one time made an observation to the effect that the Great Lakes station had been passed upon by naval authorities as not a suitable place for a naval station at all.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I do not recall the observation to which the gentleman refers. The only objection I ever heard to the Great Lakes Training Station related to the cost of heating the institution. It is located in a section of the country where there is a long season of cold weather, and the amount of coal required is greater than at the naval base at Hampton Roads.

The same general observation would be applicable to the training station at Newport, R. I. The reason for maintaining all these stations is not the fact that they can not all be trained at one place, but it seems advisable to train the young boys rather in the general vicinity of their homes, and so the three stations have been provided for in the bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have heard the objection on account of the location that it was necessarily not provided with the numerous facilities that go along with one of the great naval ports like Hampton Roads, or Newport, R. I., or the one at California.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think the gentleman is correct so far as training on ships or work of that kind is concerned. Of course, it could not be done in Chicago on account of the treaties between the United States and England respecting the carrying of guns on the vessels on the Great Lakes, but all other sorts of seamanship, of course, are feasible at Chicago.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. As far as seamanship consisting of being on land all of the time is concerned, I think that is likely.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, no; the harbor has been constructed there recently, and every part of seamanship, except that of gunnery, is practiced at that base in Chicago.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have seen the harbor, but it is rather complimentary to call it a harbor. It is all right for pleasure craft and small vessels, but I do not think it is of much use for naval vessels, and, in fact, there are none there that I know of and should not be.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman began his remarks by a reference to our mutual good friend, Mr. Mann, who, to the great regret of all of us, has passed away. A year ago, when this proposition was before the House and the committee, Mr. Mann expressed his regret that here, in his opinion, the proper activities were not maintained at the Great Lakes. I am sorry that Mr. Mann is not here to know to-day that the great Committee on Appropriations has made an ample appropriation for the performance of the activities at the Great Lakes for which that institution was established and on which the Government has spent $10,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the activities at this naval station, regardless of the question of its particular utility, might well be concentrated at these other stations, without the necessary expense of keeping this up.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I will say to my friend the gentleman from Iowa that if it had not been for the Great Lakes during the war, not only the personnel of the Navy but the personnel of the merchant marine would have fallen down. The Great Lakes provided 60 per cent of all of the men that went into the Navy and the merchant marine during the war.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Because they were sent there.

Mr. BRITTEN. No. Not merely because they were sent there, but because Great Lakes had the facilities for turning out great numbers of men in the shortest possible time. These very men subsequently became the cream of the Navy's enlisted personnel and were requested by commanding officers of many of our fighting ships.

The Navy is America's first line of defense. Its efficiency lies in the men who man it. These men are not, as generally supposed, drawn from the coasts alone, but in the main from the farms and country towns and inland cities.

During the Great War, with its heavy strain upon our military and naval resources, 65 per cent of the enlisted personnel of the Navy came from the Middle West. Great Lakes was by far the largest of our country's naval training stations, having as many as 45,000 recruits in training at one time, whipping into shape these men who, without the loss of a single vessel, convoyed across the submarine-infested Atlantic a large part of America's mighty Army.

Mr. Chairman, it will always be easier to enlist men in the Navy where the naval training station is close to the source of its man supply. To abandon or materially reduce Great Lakes would seriously hamper all future enlistments and lessen public interest in the Navy.

Thirty-eight thousand men are to be trained for the Navy in the coming fiscal year. Great Lakes is in perfect condition and without any additional investment in equipment can immediately care for 2,500 men at one time and 6,000 during the coming year. This should be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, just let me say this in further reply to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN]: The Great Lakes Training Station is one of the best equipped training stations in our country, and one of the great services performed by that station is the training for trades in connection with the Naval Service. Then there is another observation that was brought to the attention of the committee which we can not overlook. That is this: The section of country around the Great Lakes probably contributes a greater per cent of young men to the Navy than any like populous section of the country in the United States. At the Great Lakes Training Station these young men are trained in large part for their services upon ship board. They are in comparatively ready access to their people at home, and many people from the surrounding States come to that station to visit their sons before they go on to the longer stay on ship board. Those considerations appealed to the members of the committee, and when you think of it in connection with the great plant we have there it seemed desirable to continue the station further.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Is it not a fact that in addition to the argument the gentleman has presented there is this further fact, that the Great Lakes is the greatest training station we have for mechanicians in connection with the aviation service of this country? The ground men are trained there.

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVAL RESERVE FORCE.

For expenses of organizing, administering, and recruiting the Naval Reserve Force and Naval Militia; for the maintenance and rental of armories, including the pay of necessary janitors, and for wharfage, $194,000; for pay and allowances of officers and enrolled men of the Naval Reserve Force other than class 1 while on active duty for training; mileage for officers while traveling under orders to and from active duty for training; transportation of enrolled men to and from active duty for training, and subsistence and transfers en route or cash in lieu thereof; subsistence of enrolled men during the actual period of active duty for training; pay and allowances of officers of the Naval Reserve Force and pay, allowances, and subsistence of enrolled men of the Naval Reserve Force when ordered to active duty in connection with the instruction, training, and drilling of the Naval Reserve Force; and retainer pay of officers and enrolled men of the Naval Reserve Force other than class 1, $2,800,000; in all, $2,994,000, which amount shall be available, in addition to other appropriations, for fuel and the transportation thereof and for all other expenses in connection with the maintenance, operation, repair, and upkeep of vessels assigned for training the Naval Reserve Force: Provided, That members of the Volunteer Naval Reserve may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, be issued such articles of uniform as may be required for their drills and training, the value thereof not to exceed that authorized to be issued to other classes of the Naval Reserve Force and to be charged against the clothing and small stores fund: Provided further, That no part of the money appropriated in this act shall be used for the training of any member of the Naval Reserve Force except with his own consent. That until June 30, 1924, of the Organized Militia as provided by law, such part as may be duly prescribed in any State, Territory, or for the District of Columbia shall constitute a Naval Militia; and until June 30, 1924, such of the Naval Militia as now is in existence, and as now organized and prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy under authority of the act of Congress approved February 16, 1914, shall be a part of the Naval Reserve Force, and the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to maintain and provide for said Naval Militia as provided in said act: Provided, That upon their enrollment in the Naval Reserve Force and not otherwise until June 30, 1924, the members of said Naval Militia shall have all the benefits, gratuities, privileges, and emoluments provided by law for other members of the Naval Reserve Force; and that with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy duty performed in the Naval Militia may be counted as active service for the maintenance of efficiency required by law for members of the Naval Reserve Force: Provided further, That retainer pay provided by existing law shall not be paid to any member of the Naval Reserve Force who fails to train as provided by law during the year for which he fails to train.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I wish to ascertain generally what the Navy is doing as to the training of its reserve force, also as to the number of men that availed themselves of the liberality of the Government last year under the appropriation provided, which was much larger than that carried in the War Department bill for the reserve force of the Army, and why the Navy, without the need of having such a large reserve force, should carry virtually three times the appropriation that is carried in the War Department bill for the Army reserve force.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The naval appropriation bill for the current year did not become a law until so late in the summer prior to July 1 that very little could be done during the summer months in the way of training. These reservists are at the present time in a class that draws no pay. My understanding is that the money carried here outside of what is necessary for the operation of the vessels employed in the Naval Reserve Force, which is a small amount, has not yet been expended, and will not be until the naval reservists that are called are transferred into the pay class under the naval reserve act. This sum is about sufficient to pay for 1,500 officers and 5,000 men for half the year.

Mr. STAFFORD. How many officers are there in the Naval Reserve Force?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. There are two classes of naval reserve officers and men. The first class, as the gentleman knows, is composed of those who have served in the Navy and the second class those recruited from the young citizenship of the country generally.

Mr. STAFFORD. Through the Naval Militia.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Through the naval organizations. In that second class there are 4,000 officers, in round numbers, and about 7,000 men.

Now, of that number it is expected that 1,500 officers and 5,000 men will have done their training and are in every way qualified to draw retainer pay for the last half year, and it is the intent of the Navy Department to transfer them to that class which draws retainer pay, and this sum carried in the current law will be required to meet that payment.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the amount of the retainer pay? For how long?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Two months' pay at the corresponding rate.

Mr. STAFFORD. And what service do they perform for that two months' pay?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am not enough technician to explain to the gentleman in full, but I know they have to go through the regular drills, as far as they can be conducted in a drillery, to start with. Then they have cruises prescribed by the regulations of the Navy Department, and unless they carry out all the provisions laid down by the Navy Department they are not transferred into the pay class but are carried in the class that receive no compensation.

Mr. STAFFORD. From the description of the services the gentleman has given, it seems this appropriation is much more liberal for the Naval Reserves than that to the officers of the Reserve Corps. There they only receive the pay of their grade and allowances for the 15 days they are actually in attendance at the training camps.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. This, of course, covers transportation of the men to and from the training camps.

Mr. STAFFORD. What rate do they receive?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. At the regular rate that the officers and men of the Navy receive.

Mr. STAFFORD. Again, the Navy is much favored by receiving 8 cents a mile, whereas in the Army the officers attending the reserve training camps receive only 4 cents a mile. The Navy seems to be much more favored.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman will bear in mind that the Navy reservists are quite likely to be called a greater distance in training. Those in the Army, as I understand it, are furnished training nearest to the localities in which they live.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is correct. The Army reservists are called generally to some place within the corps area.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. This also provides for provisions as well as——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I ask that the gentleman have one more minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. And also for the maintenance of the ships and keepers of ships that are used by these reservists in their training. This covers the entire expense of repair of ships and everything.

Mr. STAFFORD. The committee, perhaps, did not have its attention called to the fact that Army officers in the Officers' Reserve Corps receive only 4 cents a mile by reason of an amendment which was proposed by the Senate and was agreed to in conference in the War Department appropriation bill last year that resulted in a saving of considerable money to the Government, perhaps a half million dollars, and I would suggest to the committee that they bear that in mind in case the Senate, in their spasmodic spells of economy, attach such a limitation on this bill.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Of course, the gentleman will bear in mind, too, we cut this item a million dollars below the Bureau of the Budget, and it is because of a great many things such as the gentleman has been reciting to the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is not this amount for pay to the Naval Reserve Force, $2,800,000, the same amount as carried in existing law?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; but $3,800,000 was recommended.

Mr. STAFFORD. But in the existing law it is $2,800,000, so the gentleman did not cut the existing appropriation for that purpose. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LONGWORTH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 13374, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in 8-point type on the so-called Bursum bill, S. 3855, which was recently withdrawn from the House by resolution of the Senate, and I desire to print in it a letter from a gentleman who is thoroughly conversant on the measure, so the membership of the House may understand what there is in that measure.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, there are so many bills pending with the name of the Senator from New Mexico attached, described as Bursum bills, that it is difficult to know which one is referred to. There passed the Senate one relating to officers in the volunteer service, in which they were to receive the same pay and allowances as those in the Regular Army, and recently a so-called Bursum bill providing for a $72 pension to old soldiers——

Mr. SNYDER. I stated in my request the number of the bill, S. 3855, which deals with the Pueblo Indian question in New Mexico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, there has been so much propaganda on the part of the so-called Bursum bill—No. 3855—which was recently withdrawn from the House by resolution of the Senate, that I have thought it wise, in the interest of all the Members, to ask unanimous consent to print a statement with regard to the matter, so that the Members of the House who are being circularized by the opponents of this measure will have all of the information at their hand, thereby making it unnecessary for them to look further for it.

Some two years ago, as chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, with a select committee, we visited the city of Santa Fe, and in what was practically an all-night session we made a careful investigation of the question which the proposed bill surrounds. There is much misinformation being distributed by people who are not fully advised as to the facts of the matter, and I have thought it wise to give as much information as possible at this time, and with that in view I am printing a letter which was recently written to the editor of the New York Tribune by Mr. A. B. Rennehan, an attorney at Santa Fe, which, in my judgment, sets forth the question more clearly and illustrates the situation out there better than any document I have seen on the question up to this time:

DECEMBER 2, 1922.

To the EDITOR, TRIBUNE,
New York City:

In your issue of the 25th ultimo you have an editorial entitled "Robbing the Pueblo Indians," and referring to the Bursum bill as the instrument of the robbery.

I am not at all surprised at the industry and emotion shown by many well-meaning but, I believe, wrongly directed people in seeking the defeat of that bill, but they are not taking a broad view of the measure. They are warm-hearted people, who wept abundantly as they read of the exodus of French peasants before the German invader and, more lately, at the flight of Christians, pagans, and half pagans from Smyrna. They do not vision that about 6,000 men, women, and children would be driven from their homes and little farms, with their worldly goods upon the backs of donkeys, traveling as sadly down the roads of New Mexico as the others fled along the roads and pathways that led from their villages and vilayets.

Some of these American citizens of Mexican blood, who live upon these so-called Pueblo grants, are the descendants of those who first inhabited these lands 200 years ago or more, and later, in the Civil War, in numbers greater than their quota, fought for the Union's preservation. Virtually all of the settlers are the successors in interest by descent or purchase of these early inhabitants.

But I am concerned just now with the egregious blunders which you and the assailants have made. They seem to be without charity for these non-Indian persons who have, through their ancestors and their grantors, occupied parcels of these so-called reservations, which were waste when originally taken and by them made to blossom and bear fruit. I do not condemn the motives of these opponents, which are worthy but hysterical and uninformed. They are obsessed with the idea that the Indians are about to be either hurt or sacrificed or both. I am a better friend of these Indians than many of the spokesmen of the opposition. I have never betrayed any of them for personal self or profit or for any purpose, which is more than can be said for some local representatives of these well-intentioned ladies and gentlemen, whose eyes have been clouded and whose ears I fear have been filled with malignities by compensated and uncompensated agitators. I speak the Spanish and thus approach the Pueblo Indian without the aid of interpreters. I count more personal friends among them than any unofficial person whom I know. I am the only lawyer who has advised an Indian who left his wife to maintain her and pay her the equivalent of alimony and procured him to do so.

At the time of the argument before the United States Supreme Court of the Felipe Sandoval case I heard the Solicitor General say: "I never can guess what a decision will be, but this is a case I will win. The East is full of the notion that the Indian and his friends are always right and need protection. Courts are not free from the notion."

You say that friendly New Mexico State courts will handle the suits to quiet titles. No; only the Federal court will have jurisdiction under the later Bursum bill, the one which passed the Senate. Evidently you did not read the bill or you would not have made such a mistake, which, with your influence, may be very harmful.

The Indians will not in any event "face exile or extermination," as it is not the purpose or effect of the bill to touch any lands which have not been for a long time used and occupied by others than Indians and out of the latter's control.

The Bursum bill does not confirm claims against the Indians, but fixes rules by which the United States district court can decide whether a claimant has a right to the land he occupies, and he is compelled to bring his suit against the Government in five years or lose his possession.

Much ado has been made by some of the opponents about the use of the expression "with or without color of title." They do not seem to realize that the words "color of title" are strictly of legal significance, and they take the phrase to mean "without color of right." "Color of title" is a writing granting or seeming to grant title. It is not the bald claim of a mere brazen intruder. But New Mexico had no recording system until 1852. The Spanish and Mexican archives, which were kept in Santa Fe in the Old Palace under the prior régimes, were in great part destroyed by the Indians in their uprising of 1680. It is claimed that the Indians had no power to part with their lands without consent of the Mexican or Spanish authorities, as the case might be. If such consent were given, we have no way to make the proofs, for they have been destroyed or otherwise have disappeared. The bill proposes to relieve against this situation. Again, the blood of the Spaniards and Mexicans mixed with the Indian blood, and the individuals of both races were known by Spanish names. After the lapse of so many years we can not trace the source from which a title may have come, as the name of a grantor, being Spanish, may have appertained to an Indian, a Mexican, or a Spaniard.

They say that the Bursum bill enables the district court (sec. 2-e) to take away from the Indians the power to regulate their own affairs. This is untrue. The purpose of this provision is to take away from the State courts the power to meddle judicially in disputes concerning the internal government of the Indians when the Indians themselves are quarreling among themselves. The State court formerly exercised this jurisdiction. It thinks that it still has it. The Federal court disagrees with that belief. The State court held in contempt an Indian agent named Lonergan for refusal to obey a subpœna duces tecum to bring into court certain Indian insignia. The Federal court at Santa Fe took from the State court the man thus adjudged contumacious. There was a conflict of jurisdiction; therefore section 2-e of the said bill.

One of the critics of the bill charges that the Indians will lose or have lost 41,000 acres of land known as the Pajuate purchase. An action was brought in a State court, in the name of the Pueblo community or corporation by the special attorney for the Pueblo Indians appointed by the Indian Bureau. The court decided against the Indians. The attorney either forgot to take an appeal or to perfect it. He then tried to get into the Federal court, which ruled against him because the question was res adjudicata through the State court judgment, and because the Federal court was without jurisdiction. He then appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, which promptly showed him the door, because of the condition created by the unappealed judgment. The suit would better have been filed in the Federal court and in the name of the United States, by virtue of its guardianship. All sins can not be attributed to the settlers.

The Bursum bill, so called, S. 3855, introduced July 20, 1922, was sponsored by the Indian Bureau, and is understood to have been drawn or suggested by the Special Assistant Attorney General of the United States, in charge of Indian litigation in New Mexico and Arizona. I, as attorney for the settlers or a great number of them, suggested sections 15 and 16 and a part of section 10. It was understood to be a bureau measure, and I was told to keep hands off for fear of mutilation or disturbance of its symmetry. I appealed to the Secretary of the Interior, who stated that his object was to protect the Indians against encroachment, while at the same time assisting the settlers, whose unfortunate circumstances he knew, so far as it could be done without injustice to the Indians. He approved section 15 because it made certain plats and surveys merely prima facie evidence of the settlers' lines, and because, if there was no dispute as to these lines, a quick adjustment would be reached. But these surveys, made under the supervision of the Indian Bureau and known as the Joy survey, as a matter of law, were disputable by either party to the litigation. While the bill is called the Bursum bill, it is really a departmental measure.

He approved section 16 because it granted nothing, but provided that in the probably few cases which it would fit a good-faith occupant, where there were peculiar equities in his favor, could purchase his fenced holding, if his application were approved by the Secretary of the Interior. This, in the light of the section, presupposes that the occupant has lost in the courts.

He approved that part of section 10 which I submitted, that rights of water and the facilities established by it for its use "be decreed to the pueblo according to its appropriation thereof for the irrigation of the lands of the pueblo as irrigated and cultivated at the time of the passage of the act," but that "any further or additional use of such waters and the appropriation thereof shall be acquired, determined, and adjudicated according to the laws of the State." This feature, I understand, has been criticized as subjecting the Indians to New Mexico's water laws as to augmentation of their use of water. But the Mexicans, Americans, and Indians frequently use the same waters through the same ditches in which they are partners and have lived and worked in harmony until the Indian cupidity has been stimulated by the proposal to take from the Mexicans and Americans what they have created and give it to the Indians.

In a matter so tender and essential as water in the arid region a conflict of jurisdiction would be disastrous, for the waters frequently arise outside of the pueblo lands and are carried within or across by ditches, which may be the property of Indian and non-Indian alike in cotenancy. Sometimes the streams flow through Indian lands, serving Indian and non-Indian equally inside and outside of the Indian grant.

The Indians have not been deprived of water, but, on the contrary, in most instances have been favored. In a country like this, where rights in and to water depend upon "appropriation, diversion, and application to a beneficial use," if the Indians were given privileges for the acquirement of additional water, independent of State sovereignty, if it could be done constitutionally, they would eventually take it all and dry up the farms and orchards of the settlers.

The pueblo of Pojuaque has signed a protest. This pueblo is virtually extinct. There remains 1 full-blood and 11 mixed bloods—part Mexican. Most of those gone have been absorbed into other pueblos, particularly the pueblo of Nambe.

The pueblo of Pecos has signed a protest. This pueblo is utterly extinct. Not an Indian remains upon it. There are but three or four of that blood living, and they have been absorbed into the Jemez Pueblo.

The lands of these two pueblos were sold to D. C. Collier & Co. at a time when the Government maintained a "special attorney for the Pueblo Indians," and since good faith and consistency are exacted, it would repay the inquiry to ask why now this querulous talk of Indian rights and who now pretends to have concealed a cure-all bill as a magpie hides a rag. I filed for the Indians a suit to set aside the sale of the Pojuaque grant to Collier & Co., in the Federal court, without a hope of reward, and argued it before Judge Pollock, temporarily sitting in the Federal court here. Decision was not rendered, but taken under advisement. Later, when Col. R. E. Twitchell, an able lawyer and historian of note, was appointed special assistant to the Attorney General in reference to Pueblo Indian litigation, he pressed the bill to vacate the sale and a decree to that effect was signed.

It is apparent to my mind that the objurgations which have been emitted that the State courts are vested with jurisdiction over all questions affecting Indian lands results from a misconception of section 3 of the bill. It provides that the State courts shall have jurisdiction over lands lying within the pueblo grants, which have ceased to be pueblo land. Naturally this would be so, for the Constitution of the United States does not allocate or permit to be allocated to the Federal courts the determination of questions of purely State cognizance. I have always doubted the necessity of this provision and its propriety. What has the United States to do with lands non-Indian?

Tyros have been dabbling, I fear, and muddying the waters.

The questions involved are extremely complex, both in law and in fact, and can not be understood at a glance by individual lay intuition or inspiration, and much of the ill-temper manifested is aroused by benevolent but perilous ignorance and superficiality which cries "Wolf! Wolf!" when there is no wolf.

Section 8 is most condemned because, it is claimed by friends of the Indian—whose friendliness I would be the last to impugn—it will take from the Indians their homes, their farms, and plantations, and so forth. This is not a fair but an unjust construction. It gives no right to land acquired within 10 years prior to June 20, 1910, when the act to enable New Mexico to form a State government was passed. But it authorizes the United States court to decree to a possessor and occupant the land within his lines, if he had actual, open, notorious, and so forth, possession for more than 10 years prior to the date above mentioned, whether he could prove a deed or not; that is, color of title; in other words, in technical, legal phraseology, adverse possession. It is not, as some of those think who have espoused the Indian cause, any mere claim hostile to the Indian. It is a claim evidenced by outward signs of dominion throughout a period continuously of more than 22 years if the bill became a law to-day.

Why was that date, June 20, 1910, adopted in the proposed act? Because it was then that Congress decreed as a condition precedent for the admission of New Mexico that "until the title of such (Pueblo) Indian or Indian tribes shall be extinguished the same shall be and remain subject to the disposition and under the absolute jurisdiction and control of the Congress of the United States," the people of New Mexico disclaiming all right and title thereto.

The courts of New Mexico had held uniformly that the Pueblo Indians were citizens of Mexico at the time of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, and afterwards of the United States, and had the right to alienate their lands like any other citizen of these countries. This was the course of judicial decision from earliest Territorial days. The Supreme Court of the United States, at its October, 1876, term, in United States v. Joseph (94 U. S. 614) came to the same conclusion. Speaking of the grants made by Spain and Mexico to the Pueblo Indians and the subsequent confirmation by act of Congress, the court says: "It is unnecessary to waste words to prove that this (act of confirmation) was a recognition of the title previously held by these people, and a disclaimer by the Government of any right of present or future interference, except such as would be exercised in the case of a person holding competent and perfect title in his individual right."

These were rules of property made by law and announced by the Territorial courts, which were created by Congress, and by the Supreme Court of the United States, in 1876, and they continued in force and effect and were relied upon by people and by courts uninterruptedly thereafter until the case of Felipe Sandoval v. United States, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States (231 U. S. 28, 58 L. Ed. 107), when, in effect, the Joseph case was reversed and the doctrine of tutelage established, from which have sprung the troubles of the settlers and their descendants and grantees.

Therefore this Bursum bill seeks to do justice to the settler and his dependents by recognizing the status that the courts affirmed, without injustice to the Indian, so that it be not conceded that the United States, through its Congress, shall, like an Indian giver, seek to undo that which it had solemnly done. It sought to prevent the pauperizing of people who bought land in the pueblo grants through confidence in the decisions of the national courts.

But while this bill has been called the Bursum bill, it is plain that he was the intermediary through whom it was presented to the Senate. It is an ambitious project, having for its object the assuaging of all antagonisms and laying down rules for the settlement of all questions affecting Pueblo Indians which could conceivably arise, and not through the State courts but through the national courts.

Mr. BURSUM had previously introduced in the Senate—July 19, 1921—a bill of my draftsmanship—S. 2274—less ambitious and less comprehensive in scope, but having the same general purposes, except that I provided for a commission of three lawyers to be appointed by the President for the settlement of these questions, the progenitor of which was the act of Congress providing for the adjustment of like controversies concerning lands within the pueblo of San Francisco. I adopted that act as the pattern for mine. I also incorporated Arizona, for it has like problems, though not so many and important as those of this State.

The fundamental object of the two bills is to permit the plea of the statute of limitations or adverse possession as against the Government, against which it does not ordinarily run, and to permit proof by secondary evidence, if it can be found, which is doubtful, that the Government of Spain or Mexico authorized the sale of parts of Indian grants. Without these two modifications of the rules of evidence, particularly the first, according to the contentions of the Attorney General of the United States, the settlers' mouths are closed and they can make no defense whatsoever. Consequently there will be for them nothing to do but to take up their beds, their household goods, their movable property, and walk, driving before them their flocks and their herds.

The people of the United States, when properly informed, the Members and Senators in Congress, the great and mighty press, which can form powerful public opinion, even upon false premises, misunderstandings, and misinterpretations, will not want and will not ask a consummation so devoutly to be shunned.

For the enlightenment of those who would look further I refer to the following judicial decisions, additional to those cited: 1 N. M. 226; 1 N. M. 422; 1 N. M. 583; 12 N. M. 139; the opinion of Judge Pope in United States v. Felipe Sandoval, reversed by the United States Supreme Court, supra; the many decrees and decisions cited in 12 N. M., supra.

For sidelights I call attention to a few other facts.

The people of the pueblo of Abiquiu have been completely absorbed by the Mexican element. This is a fine indication of what has happened upon other pueblo grants, but in less degree.

The number of acres included in the Tesuque Pueblo grant is 17,471, as patented. The number acquired by settlers, as shown by the survey mentioned in section 10 of the Bursum bill, is 457. There is no recent augmentation.

The number of acres included in the Santa Clara grant is 17,368, as patented. The number acquired by settlers, as shown by the said survey, is 4,073. There is no recent augmentation.

I have taken as samples one of the grants in which less acreage is claimed adversely, and one of the grants in which greatest acreage is claimed adversely.

The total in each instance is very small, considering the time that has passed since the Spaniards first dominated the Indians of the pueblos.

It is only recently that the Indians have begun slightly to increase their acreage in cultivation, and the smaller quantity of land heretofore cultivated by them is not due to any antagonism between the races, for they have lived side by side as friends, and intermarried, along the centuries, except on occasions of revolution attempted by the Indians, first against Spaniards and Mexicans, and against Americans after the American occupation.

Their villages are usually quite distant from the Mexican and American towns, as in the case of Taos, 3 miles away; Santa Clara, 3 or 4 miles from Espanola; Tesuque, 3 miles away from the settlement of the same name.

Remember also that Taos is a town with an actual property valuation of probably $750,000 to $1,000,000; Espanola, with an actual property valuation of as much or more; in neither instance including farms, ranches, and orchards.

No conscientious person, lay or official, desires the inequitable detriment of these Indians; no conscientious person, artist, tenderfoot, or dilettante, should desire the inequitable detriment of the settlers.

It is rare that a legislative bill falls perfect from the hands of its makers. This bill may contain imperfections, though, looked at sympathetically and honestly, they are not fundamental or critical. If there are in it important imperfections, judicious consideration will discover and remove them much better than accusation and denunciation of honorable public servants as scoundrels, who would cruelly expunge an ancient and interesting civilization, largely based, however, upon the Spanish.

Abuse of the Indian has been more the pastime of the Anglo-Saxon than the nature of the Mexican, for the Mexican and the Indian have fraternized and cooperated. The Anglo-Saxon, where he has not driven off the Indian by the bullet, has cajoled and purchased him with whisky and beads and other trinkets.

The titles to the towns of Taos, Espanola, and Tesuque are as good, if not better, as the original titles upon which the city of New York rests.

This is very lengthy, but as short as the subject will permit, and I hope you will give it space, notwithstanding its length, because of the importance of the question both to those who oppose the bill and those who favor it.

Respectfully,

A. B. RENEHAN.

Mr. KRAUS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech delivered by my colleague [Mr. SANDERS of Indiana] at New York before the Indiana Club on Tuesday evening.

My colleague has done much research work in the early history of the State of Indiana. The results of some of that work were detailed before the club, and they are of general interest. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting that address.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the matter indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The speech is as follows:

Speech delivered by Representative EVERETT SANDERS, of Indiana, on the occasion of a banquet of the Indiana Club of New York City at the McAlpin Hotel on the night of December 12, 1922.

INDIANA A CENTURY AGO.

Every first-grade pupil knows the name of our first President—most Indiana high-school pupils know the name of our first Indiana governor. I doubt, however, if 1 Indianian in 500 knows the name of the first Delegate to Congress from Indiana Territory or the name of our first Congressman and our first two Senators.

Our first Delegate was Benjamin Parke, listed as a Democrat. I have searched through the Annals of Congress very diligently to find the initial speech of our first spokesman. Parke's first utterance was on February 14, 1806, and arose when there was a controversy in the House over the proposed sale of a township of lands to Frederick Rapp and his associates, who were going to and did afterwards settle New Harmony, Ind. Representative Jackson, of Virginia, was opposing the sale and Jackson asserted that "the land ought to be sold for at least $6 an acre." Whereupon we find in the record:

Mr. Parke, of the Indiana Territory: "Even in the settled parts of the Territory lands are not above $3." This was a short speech, but it settled the question. Land has since so increased in value that in Indianapolis it sells as high as several thousands of dollars per front foot. I might say in passing that length of congressional speeches has increased in direct ratio with the value of the land.

In person Parke was tall, nearly 6 feet, spare in habit, and of rather delicate frame. He was in the Battle of Tippecanoe at the head of a company of dragoons, and was made a major, commanding a troop of Cavalry after Major Daviess fell.

General Harrison said of him: "He was in every respect equal to any Cavalry officer of his rank that I have ever seen. As in everything else which he undertook, he made himself acquainted with the tactics of that arm and succeeded in bringing his troops, both as regards field maneuvering and the use of the saber, to as great perfection as I have known."

Benjamin Parke headed the committee to whom was referred the letter of Gov. William Henry Harrison, inclosing resolutions of the legislative council and the House of Representatives of Indiana Territory, asking a 10-year suspension of the article in the ordinance of 1787 forbidding slavery. Mr. Parke, for the committee, reported a resolution favoring the suspension for 10 years. This occurred on February 12, 1807.

Mr. Parke was a lawyer and resigned as Delegate to become Territorial judge, which position he held from 1808 to 1817, at which time he became the judge of the first United States District Court for the State of Indiana, serving in that position from 1817 to 1835, at which time he died at Salem, Ind. He had entered public life in 1804 as attorney general for Indiana Territory, and was in the Territorial legislature. He was in public life continuously for more than 31 years.

Parke was succeeded by Jesse B. Thomas, a Whig, former speaker of the House of Representatives of Indiana Territory, whose chief activities consisted in dealing with the problem of separating the Indiana Territory into Indiana and Illinois. He headed a committee to determine whether the Territory should be divided, and in his report urged the division, because the people in Illinois couldn't get across from Illinois to the court at Vincennes. Muddy swamps of the Wabash prevented them. The report also stated that at that time there were approximately 11,000 people west of the Wabash River and 17,000 east. When the bill was under consideration, violent opposition was met, and the record shows that the opposition was on the grounds, quoting verbatim, "that the expense to the United States for this new government (that is, the proposed new Illinois Territory) would be $6,950 yearly, * * *; that this proceeding might be very convenient to the men who should be appointed governors and judges, but for no other good purpose."

Six thousand nine hundred and fifty dollars! Boy, page Mayor Thompson of Chicago. That would not half-sole the shoes of his policemen.

After Illinois Territory was organized in 1809, Thomas became Judge of the United States District Court for the Northwestern District—was delegate to the Illinois constitutional convention, became president of that body, and was one of Illinois' first two Senators, serving in that capacity from December 3, 1818, to March 3, 1829. He was in public life for 24 years. When a Senator from Illinois, he was the real author of the Missouri Compromise, although Henry Clay is generally given credit for this measure.

Our third and last Delegate was Jonathan Jennings, a Federalist and a conspicuous character in the early Indiana history. He was about 5 feet 8 inches in height, had blue eyes, a fair complexion, sandy hair, weighed about 180 pounds, and is described as a man of polished manners.

The ordinance of 1787 had a proviso against slavery. Ever since Indiana became a Territory there had been political agitation to have the Congress repeal this proviso. The proposed repeal of the anti-slavery clause and acts by the Territorial legislature passed with a view of evading the slavery provisions constituted almost the sole political issue in Territorial days. It is interesting to note that those favoring slavery usually came from slave States, while those opposing came from free States.

When it came to selecting the third Delegate, the people had been granted the right of suffrage. Jennings, who was born in New Jersey and had spent his early life in that State and the State of Pennsylvania, came out as a candidate for Delegate on a platform opposing slavery, while Thomas Randolph, who was born in Virginia, announced in favor of slavery. The contest was bitter and Jennings won out by 39 votes, and Randolph went to Washington and contested the seat. The Elections Committee reported in favor of declaring the seat vacant. The Committee of the Whole House adopted the report, but the House seated Jennings.

He served from November 27, 1809, until Indiana became a State, at which time he became the first governor. His work in the House as a Delegate, in addition to his fight for statehood of Indiana, was principally in the interest of extension of roads and the establishment of land offices, and the extension of time of payments on lands. He also made a very brilliant speech urging the raising of mounted rangers to protect the frontier from the Indians. The greatest work he performed as a Delegate in the House was to secure the admission of the Territory of Indiana as a State. He was chairman of the House committee and his report accompanying the bill for statehood showed that the total population of Indiana was 63,879, or about 2 per cent of our present population.

His efforts were crowned with victory when on December 6, 1816, William Henry Harrison, then a Representative from Ohio, who had been governor of the Territory for 12 years, and was destined later to be President of the United States, moved a final resolution of statehood, which was adopted. This resolution was passed by the Senate and signed by President James Madison on December 11, 1816.

I can't resist following Jennings back into the State, for his advent as our first governor gives us considerable light on the political and governmental history of that time. In his first race for governor he ran against Thomas Posey, a former Virginian, and the slavery question was again an issue, and Jennings again won out on the antislavery platform.

When he became governor, Christopher Harrison became lieutenant governor. President James Monroe wanted to make land treaties with many tribes of Indians and appointed the governor to serve as one of the negotiators. The new State constitution contained a provision preventing the governor from holding a commission as a Federal officer. While the governor was absent negotiating the treaties the lieutenant governor claimed that he had forfeited the office. The Vincennes Western Sun and General Advertiser, under the head, "The National Register," thus reviewed the political situation in Indiana:

"Politics in Indiana are in a great measure personal contests. The latest agitation of her statesmen that we have heard of is the oppugnation of the lieutenant governor to Governor Jennings acting as negotiator of Indian treaties under an appointment by the President of the United States.

"The lieutenant governor, considering the governor as having forfeited the throne, seized upon the reins of authority as heir apparent and sequestered the seal of the Commonwealth. Governor Jennings, returning from diplomatic converse with the Indians, walked very deliberately into the secretary of state's office, put the great seal into his breeches pocket, hinted that kings and rulers were not accountable to frail mortality, and coolly walked away, and probably whistling Lillabullero.

"The people we presume will settle the dispute."

On its assembling both houses of the legislature recognized Mr. Harrison as governor, but appointed a committee to investigate, and the report in favor of recognizing Governor Jennings was adopted 15 to 13, whereupon Harrison resigned in a huff, and the next year ran against Jennings for governor, but was beaten 11,000 to 2,000.

It is of great interest to Hoosiers to know that in 1821 the legislature elected Harrison, James W. Jones, of Gibson County, and Samuel P. Booker, of Wayne County, commissioners to lay off Indianapolis, the new capital. At the time fixed by law for the commissioners to meet none of them, except Mr. Harrison, appeared. He acted by himself, appointed surveyors who commenced work in April, 1821, and the next October the lots were sold. One of the surveyors was Alexander Ralston, who had assisted in the survey of Washington City.

The political bias of the day afforded about as good a criterion for an opinion as at present, for on July 4, during the gubernatorial campaign between Jennings and Harrison, at banquets of the political cliques, I find on one program the following toast:

"The State of Indiana—may she arise in the purity of her strength and indignantly banish from power the man who dares to tramp upon her constitution and laws."

While on the same day on the other program appeared "Jonathan Jennings—well done, good and worthy servant." The vote of the people approved the last toast, for Jennings defeated Christopher Harrison. After serving almost two terms he resigned as governor and reentered Congress as a Representative and served from December 2, 1822, to March 3, 1831. He had entered public life as a clerk of the Territorial legislature; but, not counting that service, he had been in public life from 1809 to 1831, a period of 22 years.

This concludes our Territorial representation.

William Hendricks was our first Representative in Congress. I mean actual Representative after Indiana was admitted to the Union. He served from December 2, 1816, until his resignation in 1822 to become Indiana's third governor. At the close of his term as governor he was elected United States Senator for Indiana and served from March 4, 1825, to March 3, 1837. Counting his service as a member of the Territorial house of representatives, where he also served as speaker, and his service as secretary of the constitutional convention, Hendricks was in public life about 22 years. He was not the father but the uncle of Thomas A. Hendricks, who subsequently became Governor of Indiana, and still later Vice President of the United States.

Hendricks was 6 feet high, had a well-proportioned body, auburn hair, blue eyes, and a florid complexion. He was a newspaper man. When he came to Indiana he brought with him a printing press and commenced printing a publication called The Eagle. Newspaper men in those days were more frank than at present. For instance, on May 29, 1819, the National Intelligencer contained the following:

"We are obliged to devote our columns to-day to advertisements and a few more pressing and promised articles. Having got them out of the way we shall be able again to make progress in the publication of the debate in the House of Representatives * * * and in the Senate" * * *.

No newspaper to-day apologizes for omitting congressional debates to make space for advertising.

The newspaper men also had their troubles, as shown by this advertisement in the Tocsin of June 12, 1819:

"To printers and patrons:

"Beware of a villain. Winslow Skeel, as he calls himself, a printer, called on me between two and three weeks since for employment, dressed in an old sailor's suit of blue, which he said he purchased at Louisville in consequence of losing all his clothing in coming down the Ohio on a raft which was stove to pieces in going over some rapids. He left this place secretly, on Wednesday last, about $11 in my debt for money and clothing, besides taking from the office several articles in clothing, such as vests, handkerchiefs, shirts, and stockings, to what amount is unknown. * * * He is very capable of acting the rascal and much of an adept in the act of roguery. He is about 26 years of age, rather under common size, about 5 feet 6 inches high, dark complexion, long dark hair, down look, and the end of his nose turns up; he has lost one or two of his upper foreteeth for which he has substituted a piece of a bone cut in the form of two teeth, which he does not always wear as they plague him in eating. * * *

"Patrons will be careful to whom they pay money for subscriptions. * * *

"E. PATRICK."

Mr. Hendricks spoke in favor of only $6 per day on the compensation bill for Congressmen during his first term on January 14, 1817. I quote from the Annals, which, however, were always written in the third person:

"There was scarcely a man, he believed, in the remote settlements of Indiana who had not heard and reprobated the law, and it was no wonder, said Mr. Hendricks, that his constituents disapproved the law. Their ideas of expenditures were very unlike those of all the eastern cities. Six dollars per day sounded large enough to them. Their sources of wealth, means of producing money, were few and narrow when compared with the commercial opulence of the maritime country or even the independent competency of an older State. They were rescuing their country from a wilderness. Agriculture was in its infancy, and the produce they had to spare, their corn and their beef, in the neighborhood of a plentiful market bore a very low price." (Jan. 14, 1817, 30 Annals, p. 597.)

During the time that William Hendricks served in Congress his wife accompanied him to Washington, riding on horseback the entire distance from Madison, Ind., to Washington, D. C., carrying an infant child in her arms.

Our first two Senators were James Noble and Waller Taylor. They appeared and qualified together on December 12, 1816. They had presented their credentials on the 2d of December, but were not seated until after the signing of the final resolution of admission.

Senator Waller Taylor was a Virginian and a steadfast friend of Governor Harrison, and a determined advocate of slavery. He was of soldierly bearing and had been a major in the Army. He had taken sides with Randolph on the slavery question in the contest for Congress with Jonathan Jennings, and even went so far as to try to get Jennings to challenge him to a duel, but failed to accomplish that purpose.

The Annals of Congress do not indicate that Taylor took a very active part in the debates, although he always cast his vote on the proslavery side of every piece of legislation involving slavery, apparently still clinging to his old Virginian ideas.

Senator Noble had been in the first Indiana Constitutional Convention. He was a lawyer and was said to be one of the strongest and most effective speakers of his time before a jury. He was a large, well-proportioned man of fine address and bearing. He had black hair, dark eyes, and easy and graceful manner. He was a brother of Noah Noble, one of Indiana's governors.

It was during Noble's early service in the Senate, on February 12, 1817, that Indiana was the cause of breaking up a joint meeting of the House and Senate called to count the electoral votes. In those days, as now, people did not vote directly for President, but voted for electors who sent the sealed electoral votes of the respective States to the President of the Senate to be opened by him in the presence of the House and Senate and there counted.

James Monroe, of Virginia, and Rufus King, of New York, were the candidates. After the joint meeting was assembled, Taylor, of New York, a Democrat, who no doubt was anxious to be courteous to his friend, Rufus King, objected to counting Indiana's three votes, because he said it would set a bad precedent to let a State vote whose electors had been chosen before the State was finally admitted. The election, of course, had occurred before December 11, 1816. The Speaker, Henry Clay, said the joint meeting was to count the votes, and the only way they could take up Taylor's discussion was for the Senate to withdraw. Whereupon the Senators withdrew, and after some considerable discussion in the House, in which Representative Hendricks, of Indiana, joined, it was decided that the electoral votes of Indiana should be counted. The Senators returned and Indiana cast three votes for James Monroe, who received 183 to 34 for Rufus King.

Senator Noble served in the Senate until his death in Washington on February 26, 1831. Impressive ceremonies were held in the Capitol, attended by the President and the Cabinet, and Indiana's first Senator was then laid to rest in the Eastern Branch burial ground in the city of Washington.

Thus of the three Delegates who represented us while we were a Territory, the first was of such distinction that he became our first United States district judge, the position now held by Judge Anderson, and served the remainder of his life with great honor. The second was appointed to a like position in Illinois Territory, and later became that State's distinguished Senator, while the third was of such marked ability that he was chosen as our first governor, and after being elected twice to that office was returned four successive terms to Congress.

Our first Congressman served with such distinction that he was continuously reelected until he resigned to accept the governorship and served so well that he was then elected Senator.

Our first two Senators were men of equally high character and ability. The record is filled with chronicles of the fights by all of these men for roads, for canals, for land offices, for settlers' rights and privileges, for frontier protection by rangers and militia. In one address these details can not be given, but these were the necessary foundation stones carefully laid for the great State structure the world knows as Indiana.

This meeting of Hoosiers to-night on the day following the anniversary of the admission of Indiana to the Union is a proper occasion to go back for a century for a picture of those early days. Those pioneers in statecraft shall not be forgotten. Like the pioneer woodsmen and farmers who were hewing civilization out of a wilderness, those early statesmen were bringing order out of chaos in building the necessary government to foster our progress.

Happy for Indiana and for the Nation that these first men who stood in our national halls and responded when Indiana was called were representative of the fine bulwark of civilization that was being builded up on the Ohio and the Wabash.

New York City, with all its needs for men of action, of enterprise and of industry, like our other large cities, reaches out for Hoosiers who have come from the environment I have here described. We meet here to-night as Hoosiers to let our memories dwell on the Wabash and the Ohio, whose waters have been made immortal in verse and song. Wherever we shall go, whate'er may betide, we shall carry with us the Indiana spirit.

The warm, generous impulse of heart shall govern our dealings with others. These Hoosier ties of friendship we shall nurture and cherish. We shall so carry on in all the walks of life that it shall continue to be a proud honor to hear it said, "He hails from Indiana."

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

CONSTRUCTION OF POST-OFFICE BUILDINGS.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds a letter which I received on yesterday from the Postmaster General directed to the Joint Commission on Postal Service relative to a matter which the commission is investigating and which I am sure is of great interest to the Members of the Senate. It refers to the necessity of determining whether we are to build by the Government certain absolutely necessary post-office buildings or whether we are to have buildings leased. I ask that the letter be printed simply for the information of the Senate. The question is being considered by the Joint Commission on Postal Service.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C. December 11, 1922.

JOINT COMMISSION ON POSTAL SERVICE,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIRS: On August 21, 1922, I had the honor to send to your commission a communication concerning the ownership by the Government of such new postal buildings as must of necessity be erected from time to time to accommodate the rapidly expanding volume of mail.

Basing my recommendation wholly on principles of business economy, I cited the fact that the department is constantly compelled to secure additional postal buildings by contracting for leases of structures not in existence but to be erected by private capital. Although such leases are negotiated with the greatest care and through the best competition available, they are usually made on an investment basis of from 8 to 15 per cent.

This state of affairs arises from the fact that, generally speaking, Congress, in the past, has followed the policy of appropriating moneys for the leasing of postal buildings, but has not appropriated for the construction and ownership of such buildings as they become necessary.

The Postal Service must be maintained. Mail is received in such volume as the public business requires. It must be housed, transmitted, and delivered in safety. The department can not decline to negotiate leases on new buildings. They must be had, otherwise valuable mail is exposed to the elements and ruined in transmission.

Under the law as it exists to-day, the department is absolutely compelled to execute leases on the best terms it can get, whether they are reasonable or otherwise.

Entertaining the belief that Congress would change this policy as soon as it could come to a complete understanding of all facts, I have refrained from completing contracts for the erection of certain buildings, although their urgency is great.

It is the purpose of this letter to present those cases to your consideration which are just now particularly pressing and which will become exceedingly acute before buildings can be constructed.

It is also the purpose of this letter to explain to you more fully the entire leasing situation, showing how leases now in existence are constantly expiring, presenting almost daily problems as to whether they shall be renewed or not. But, if the policy of owning postal buildings shall be adopted by Congress, the logical method in my opinion would be to take care of the pressing cases as they occur by ownership, just as under the present policy we take care of them by leasing, although I do not wish to presume upon the manner in which Congress may see fit to act in these matters.

The extent to which this leasing policy has gone and the extent to which it will go in the next few years is almost startling. In my former communication I recited that we now have 5,846 post-office buildings under lease, while the Government owns only 1,132. Many of the Government-owned buildings have become outgrown. The aggregate annual rental for leased quarters is about $12,000,000. Unless a building policy is adopted, this will increase by large amounts from year to year.

These leases are expiring almost daily, and whenever one expires it presents a new problem of what shall be done in a given locality. Renewals are made at increases of from two to four times the old rate, although careful study is made in each case and every possible effort made to secure the best terms. The popular objection to changing the location of post offices, particularly in the smaller cities and towns militates strongly against making a good trade for a lease.

The greatest actual and imperative demand for new buildings comes from the larger cities and from rapidly growing cities, where parcel-post stations, substations, and garages must constantly be added. Another class of cities where the building problem is acute are those having a single Government-owned building which is no longer adequate for the needs of the office and where men are obliged to work in insanitary cellars or basements.

The department has for more than a year been investigating this problem of buildings and has been making a careful survey to determine the adequacy of space in postal buildings. Since it requires from one to two years to construct buildings, it is necessary to anticipate to that extent the needs of each case.

While we have reliable information from more than 100 post offices that the space for the postal business is wholly inadequate and the conditions unsuitable, and while these cases are being more carefully studied to determine which are the most pressing, I desire for the moment to present for your information certain cases which have been delayed awaiting your policy, where the demand for the same is extremely acute but where we still think it would be advisable to decline to lease and to begin a program of Government ownership.

NEW YORK CITY.

The proposition in the city of New York has been before your committee for more than a year and concerning which you have had the details. This as you will recall is practically a duplication of the present central post office on Thirty-fourth Street. The requirement is for 800,000 square feet. The site is owned by the Pennsylvania Railroad and is said to be available at $2,000,000. We do not have definite information as to the cost of the proposed structure, but it is generally estimated at around $6,000,000. The average rental for such a building by the lowest bidders is approximately $1,000,000 per year. While these bids contain various options for purchase, there is no legislation by which such purchase could be made effective. The department has approved of plans and specifications but has declined to enter into any contract for a lease of this proposed building until Congress shall have acted in the matter.

DETROIT, MICH.

Another proposition which demands immediate action is that of a parcel-post station at Detroit, Mich., to contain approximately 55,000 square feet of floor space on two or three floors. Negotiations for the construction of such a building through the lease method have been under way for several months and are now ready for decision. A lease can be obtained on the proposed building when erected for $52,000 per year. I am not satisfactorily informed as to the cost of such a building, but believe the entire expense, including the lot, would be from $300,000 to $500,000.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

In this city 150,000 square feet of floor space in a new building must be provided forthwith. This proposition is under investigation, and while the need is well known, I have not the details with sufficient accuracy to submit them to you herewith, but will do so in a later communication.

DALLAS, TEX.

Here a new building must be provided as soon as possible containing 85,000 square feet of floor space on two or three floors. This case has been under careful investigation and negotiation for several months and the best proposition for a lease now in sight is for a building to be constructed for the department and rented as $84,250 per year. My information is that such a building would cost in the vicinity of $700,000. It would, however, enable us to discontinue two smaller stations which we are leasing at $9,000 each.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

The department is now considering what would be necessary to do here at the Flatbush Station when the lease expires on April 1 next. The old rental was $5,000 per year, but the premises are inadequate and the proposition to take its place will cost about $20,000 per year.

BUFFALO, N. Y.

At this place a garage must be provided to accommodate the motor-vehicle service. It must contain about 30,000 square feet of floor space. On a rental basis it will cost $30,000 per year for a building which we are informed can be erected for $175,000.

Let me remind you in closing that this list of cases is but the beginning. They are the ones which are at this moment on my desk pressing for decision. If the policy of constructing post-office buildings is to begin it is apparent that we must discontinue to take care of the acute cases by leasing. There may be many other situations in the country as much in need of additional facilities as some of those in this list, and when our investigations have been sufficiently completed we will present them to you, together with the situations as they occur from time to time when leases expire.

Let me also call to your attention the fact that the business of the Post Office Department, doubling every 10 years, can never be placed on an efficient and stabilized basis until the erection of suitable buildings at suitable places is planned not only on an economic basis but from a scientific and service viewpoint.

Very truly yours,

HUBERT WORK,
Postmaster General.

INVESTIGATION OF PRICES OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

Mr. McNARY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 382), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Whereas under existing conditions the prices of agricultural products do not afford a fair and reasonable return upon the capital, labor, and expenses of the farmer, and in many instances do not meet the cost of production;

Whereas the agricultural interests of the country will be confronted with disastrous losses if the present conditions continue and unless a readjustment is brought about between the prices of their products and the prices of other commodities; and

Whereas it is of utmost importance that the essential facts be ascertained as soon as possible in order that the many problems may be adequately analyzed and a sound, economic, and proper solution provided: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, by subcommittee or otherwise, is authorized and directed to investigate the conditions determining or influencing the export and domestic prices of agricultural products, in order to ascertain the most practicable methods of adjusting such conditions so that such prices will compare favorably with the prices of other commodities and to report to Congress such recommendations and to suggest such legislation as it may deem advisable.

SEC. 2. That such committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit during the sessions and recesses of the Sixty-seventh Congress, at Washington or at any other place in the United States, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ such experts as it deems necessary, a clerk, and a stenographer to report any hearings had in connection with any subject which may be before such committee or subcommittee, such stenographer's service to be rendered at a cost not exceeding $1.25 per printed page, the expenses involved in carrying out the provisions of this resolution to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

SEC. 3. That the committee shall submit a final report, with its recommendations and suggestions, on or before March 1, 1923.

PAY OF EMPLOYEES.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I report back favorably without amendment from the Committee on Appropriations the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 408) authorizing payment of salaries of the officers and employees of Congress for December, 1922, on the 20th day of that month, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives are authorized and directed to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol police, the legislative drafting service, and employees paid on vouchers under authority of resolutions, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1922, on the 20th day of that month.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask the Senator from Wyoming to state for the record just what the joint resolution covers?

Mr. WARREN. It simply authorizes the pay of employees of Congress on the 20th day of this month instead of on the 31st, so that they may be prepared for Christmas.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to its passage.

The joint resolution was passed.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senate to proceed now to the consideration of House bill 13316.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13316) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13316) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be considered first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the appropriations for the Department of Commerce, on page 10, line 9, to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$50,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

For all necessary expenses, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, purchase of books of reference and periodicals, rent outside of the District of Columbia, traveling and subsistence expenses of officers and employees, and all other necessary incidental expenses not included in the foregoing, to enable the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to collect and compile information regarding the restrictions and regulations of trade imposed by foreign countries, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 17, to strike out:

Public works: For the completion of one light vessel, $90,000.
For the construction of one light vessel, $150,000.
For enlarging and improving the lighthouse depot at Portsmouth, Va., in the fifth lighthouse district, or establishing a new depot, $154,500.
For repairs and improvements to Stannard Rock Light Station, Mich., $30,000.
For repairs to Barnegat Lighthouse, Barnegat City, N. J., $100,000.
For aids to navigation, Erie, Pa., and vicinity, $38,500.

And in lieu to insert:

Public works: For constructing or purchasing and equipping lighthouse tenders and light vessels for the Lighthouse Service, and for establishing and improving aids to navigation and other works as approved by the Secretary of Commerce, $738,500.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I inquire if that amendment is a summary or merely a condensation of the other items which were stricken out?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will state that that is all one amendment. We have stricken out these various items beginning on line 18, page 29, and inserted a provision covering them all and carrying an appropriation of $738,500, which is the amount of the Budget estimate, although an increase of the appropriation provided for by the House of about $175,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. The effect is, I understand, to give a little larger leeway to the Secretary of Commerce?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is correct.

Mr. FLETCHER. Without specifying the items that should be attended to, it gives him a chance to expend the fund wherever it is most needed?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is correct.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is a very good plan.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the Department of Labor, on page 48, line 2, to reduce the appropriation for enforcement of the laws regulating immigration of aliens from $3,300,000 to $3,000,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to say that since that amendment was reported I have carefully examined the debate which occurred in the other House with reference to the item. The appropriation is proposed to be reduced by $300,000 by our committee because it exceeds the Budget estimate, but a reading of the debate in the House has convinced me that that amendment should not be adopted; that the bill should carry the full amount granted by the House, which is the sum appropriated for the enforcement of the immigration law for the current year. So I ask that the committee amendment may be disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendments have now been all considered. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and is open to amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have a committee amendment for the consideration of which I am directed to ask unanimous consent. The amendment is really obnoxious to the rule, and therefore the committee did not insert it. So I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 9, after the word "superintendent," it is proposed to insert the following—who shall be chief executive officer of the department and who may be designated by the Secretary of Commerce to sign official papers and documents during the temporary absence of the Secretary and the Assistant Secretary of the department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think the Senator in charge of the bill ought to explain the reason the committee asks the Senate at this time to waive its rule which renders this amendment obnoxious.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This is not an amendment of very great importance, although the Secretary of Commerce said that its adoption would save considerable time and considerable delay. As it is now, papers that ought to be signed can not be signed when the officers who are required to sign them are away. This amendment, if adopted, would simply permit one of the officers of the department, to be designated by the Secretary of Commerce, to sign such papers in the absence of the Secretary or of the other person who is authorized to sign them. It does not entail any additional expense or any additional obligation upon the Government, but would be simply a saving of time and a convenience. The committee thought that it was very proper to submit the amendment to the Senate for its consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON. How is the matter handled under present conditions?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Such papers, in the absence of those who are authorized to sign them, are held until those persons return to the city.

Mr. ROBINSON. Who will be designated to sign the name of the Secretary should the amendment be adopted?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The amendment provides that the chief clerk and superintendent shall be the chief executive of the department and may be designated by the Secretary to do these things.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This amendment is not proposed for the purpose of effecting an increase of salary of any official, is it?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Not at all, nor is it for the creation of a new position.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington? The Chair hears none, and by unanimous consent the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On behalf of the committee, I submit another amendment to the bill. There was some doubt as to whether it would be in order on the bill, but the committee considered it rather desirable, and I ask unanimous consent to propose it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 9, after line 24, it is proposed to insert the following:

Information regarding the disposition and handling of raw materials and manufactures: For all necessary expenses, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, purchase of books of reference and periodicals, rent outside of the District of Columbia, traveling and subsistence expenses of officers and employees (including the expenses of attendance upon conventions and meetings of commercial bodies in the interests of American commerce), and all other necessary incidental expenses not included in the foregoing, to enable the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to collect and compile information regarding the disposition and handling of raw materials and manufactures, $50,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The adoption of this amendment, Mr. President, I will say, will enable the Secretary of Commerce to make further investigations with reference to the distribution of products of the farm and of the factory. It is hoped to get information that will aid in solving the problem of distribution in the country which the committee feels is a most important problem.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and by unanimous consent the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On behalf of the committee I submit two other amendments which really are interrelated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment offered by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 9, after line 24, following the amendment heretofore agreed to, it is proposed to insert the following:

Transporting remains of officers and employees: For defraying the expenses of transporting the remains of officers and employees of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce who may die abroad or in transit, while in the discharge of their official duties, to their former homes in this country for interment, and for the ordinary expenses of such interment at their post or at home, $1,500.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is a similar provision in the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill affecting the diplomatic and consular representatives of the country, and we felt that it was but just that we should make similar provision with reference to the attachés or representatives of the Department of Commerce who may die abroad.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington on behalf of the committee will be stated.

The READING CLERK. Following the amendment just agreed to it is proposed to insert:

Transportation of families and effects of officers and employees: To pay the itemized and verified statements of the actual and necessary expenses of transportation and subsistence, under such regulations as the Secretary of Commerce may prescribe, of families and effects of officers and employees of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in going to and returning from their posts, or when traveling under the order of the Secretary of Commerce, but not including any expenses incurred in connection with leave of absence of the officers and employees of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, $15,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, a similar provision to that is contained in the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Washington if there is any provision in this bill requiring the representatives of the Department of Commerce to travel on American ships?

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is not.

Mr. McKELLAR. Ought there not be an amendment added to the bill along the same line as the one which was adopted yesterday in connection with the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would certainly have no objection to that; and, if the Senator will prepare such an amendment, I shall not oppose it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will prepare such an amendment and offer it in a moment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The officials of the department ought to do it without any positive requirement of law, but they have not done it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I am informed the officers of the department follow that practice now in every case where there is an American ship available.

Mr. McKELLAR. I read in the hearings the other day, I think, that the United States Government is paying to foreign shipping companies something like $7,500,000 a year for the transportation of its representatives to and from foreign countries. It seems to me, if we want to build up the business of our merchant marine, that some such a provision as that to which I have referred should be attached to all of these bills.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, there is no objection to such an amendment being added to the bill, but it should not be so broad, of course, that the department could not send a representative to some port to which no American vessel sails.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will recall the amendment I offered yesterday, he will remember that it provided for a certificate from the Secretary of State in case no American vessel were available, and in this instance, of course, the certificate would have to be issued by the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest to the Senator that he prepare his amendment immediately, because the Senate is now considering the only amendment which is left which the committee has to propose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that the Secretary has a copy of the amendment which was offered by him yesterday to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and possibly the Secretary can read it and it will be satisfactory to the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 448 of the RECORD of the proceedings of yesterday, in the right-hand column, the amendment then offered appears, as follows:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be paid for transportation on foreign vessels without a certificate from the Secretary of State that there are no American vessels on which such officers and clerks may be transported.

Mr. McKELLAR. It should read "Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of Labor," as this bill applies to both departments.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That may be done.

Mr. McKELLAR. I offer that amendment, substituting the words "the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of Labor" for the words "the Secretary of State," the amendment to be inserted at the proper point in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests that the vote whereby the committee amendment was adopted will have to be reconsidered.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The amendment may be inserted following the last amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted is reconsidered. The Senator from Tennessee now offers an amendment to the amendment, which, without objection, will be agreed to. The question is now upon agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, may I inquire whether all of the amendments which the committee has to offer have now been acted upon?

Mr. JONES of Washington. They have all been acted upon.

Mr. SPENCER. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to an amendment which, it seems to me, ought to go to conference, and which I will send to the Secretary's desk and have read in a moment.

Mr. President, there has been built up in the Bureau of Standards during the last two or three years a unit which has to do with the determining factors concerning gasoline and fuel consumption in internal-combustion engines, and all devices in connection therewith. So far as I am able to ascertain, the work of that unit has been of the highest order. It has gathered together a small number of men who are leaders along that line, with the result that in the last year they have determined a method by which internal-combustion engines, by a perfectly feasible change, may be enabled to use a coarser grade of gasoline. If such a change may be brought out on any considerable scale, it will increase by 25 per cent the available supply of gasoline for use by such engines and will promote the general welfare by hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. President, I merely wish before sending the amendment to the desk to say that the unit to which I have referred has been in existence for two or three years without any appropriation for its continuance. Its operation has been made possible because the Department of War and the Department of the Navy during the last three years have referred to the Bureau of Standards to be worked out problems along the line referred to, and have transferred sufficient funds to enable them to study and investigate those specific problems. If it had not been for that, this unit would of necessity have been disintegrated before this time.

The amendment which I propose has been estimated for and was submitted to the House. It came before our committee, but we had little time to consider it. I think, however, every member of the committee thought it was desirable, although perhaps it might be postponed for another year. The difficulty of the situation is that if this unit is not given the basic $40,000 which is proposed to be appropriated by the amendment to insure its continuance, if it shall be dependent merely upon the problems that may perchance come to it in a haphazard manner, it will disintegrate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Has the Senator's amendment been printed?

Mr. SPENCER. It came to us written on the side of the bill, but I am sending it now to the Secretary's desk for reading.

Mr. ROBINSON. Where did it appear in the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. It is not in the bill.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator would not have it, because he does not have the copy of the bill which came to the Committee on Appropriations. May I say to the Senator that it was on the side of the bill as an item that was new, that had been estimated for, but was not adopted by the House, and was put there merely for information. That is the only place where it has been printed, but the question was taken up in the House hearings on the bill at page 206.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the proper place in the bill the following:

For the maintenance and equipping of automotive engine test plants, including vacuum and refrigerating machinery necessary to simulate atmospheric conditions at altitudes up to 40,000 feet; supplies, equipment, and operation of laboratories for testing engines and materials used in their construction and operation, lubricants, carburetors, ignition devices, radiators and cooling systems, chassis and power transmission systems, and other researches incident to the standardization and development of automotive power plants, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $40,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. This appears to be a legislative provision, pure and simple.

Mr. SPENCER. No; let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that it is not a legislative provision, because it is the carrying out of the organic law with relation to the Bureau of Standards, which provides that the Bureau of Standards is authorized to determine the properties of materials and their physical constants. This is directly within the legislative authority which gives them their existence. Of course, as the Senator knows, if the Senate agreed that it had some wisdom in it it would go to conference for the conferees to determine what was best.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the amendment is clearly new legislation. The language of the amendment is distinctly different from the language of the organic act creating the Department of Commerce, as just read by the Senator from Missouri. It seems to me that this is a case where the rule ought to be observed. In the consideration of these appropriation bills we have found, during the last two or three days, a disposition on the part of the members of the committee responsible for the management of these bills in the Senate to override the rule that has been adopted by the Senate requiring that the Committee on Appropriations shall not report legislative provisions in its bills. There is not the slightest reason why the committee that has jurisdiction of this legislation should not consider a bill for this purpose, and, if legislation be deemed wise by that committee, report a bill authorizing this appropriation.

I therefore make the point of order that the amendment is obnoxious to the rule against new and general legislation in a general appropriation bill.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, of course, if this is new legislation the point of order is well taken. I should like, however, to call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas—whose knowledge of parliamentary law is par excellence—as well as that of the Chair to the remarks of the director in the House hearing upon this very point. There the question was raised as to whether this item was new legislation or whether it was already provided for in the organic act establishing the Bureau of Standards; and I may read this sentence or two upon that point.

Doctor Stratton said:

The authorization—

That is, for this amendment—is in our organic act, which covers the determination of the properties of materials. A very large amount of this work has to do with materials. In fact, the greater part of it. The work results in the end in the standardization of the devices used.

Which is the very purpose of the Bureau of Standards, as defined in its organic act.

Doctor Stratton continues:

I do not think that there is any item in our estimates that comes any more clearly under our functions than that one.

A mere reading of the amendment may, I say, indicate clearly that it has to do in the end with the standardization of the use of gasoline and other oil fuel, and therefore is within the very organic act which created the Bureau of Standards, for whose benefit this amendment is proposed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Missouri in the first instance to admit that this amendment is new legislation. Was I correct?

Mr. SPENCER. No; the Senator was mistaken, or, if I did admit it, it was a mistake on my part. Certainly I never would have proposed the amendment if I had thought it was new legislation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, clearly the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri authorizes the Bureau of Standards to do something that it is not now authorized to do; otherwise there would be no necessity for the adoption of the language embraced in the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. All that it would be necessary for his amendment to provide would be the appropriation. If the authorization already exists, why does the Senator from Missouri seek to repeat it in his amendment? But, I repeat, a reading of the authorization contained in the organic act and a reading of the amendment discloses the fact that the amendment is new legislation, that it provides for services to be performed by the Bureau of Standards that are not authorized by existing law, and clearly it is obnoxious to the rule against new and general legislation. I think if we are going to have a rule upon this subject the Committee on Appropriations ought to respect that rule, and I think that the Senate ought not to drift back into its old practice of incorporating in appropriation bills legislative provisions.

Some Senators pointed out when this rule was under consideration that it would not prove workable in this respect. The champions of the rule insisted that it would be observed. The committee, in order to avoid the effect of the rule, gives its tacit consent to an amendment that violates the rule, and then some Member of the Senate offers it, with the declaration that the amendment really is acceptable to the committee, but that the committee has not incorporated it in its report because of the rule.

Let us enforce this rule, except in emergency cases where plainly the public interest requires that it be relaxed, and let these bureaus that are constantly seeking increased appropriations and expanded sphere of activity for the services they render justify their increases before the committees of the Senate and the House that are authorized to pass upon these questions. Let the Committee on Appropriations in the main confine its activities to appropriations. The fact is that in this instance the committee rejected the amendment. I think I ought to say, in all justice to the Appropriations Committee, the committee declined to incorporate it in its report; and as to this particular amendment I do not think there is anything to indicate that the committee has given even its tacit consent that the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri may be agreed to. The criticism, however, might be held applicable to some other amendments that have been offered this morning. It does not apply to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. Now, plainly the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is calculated to authorize the Bureau of Standards to do something that it has no authority to do under existing law.

Mr. OVERMAN. And that has been performed by other departments.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; as suggested by the Senator from North Carolina, to perform some service that has been heretofore performed by other departments.

This is new legislation. It is obnoxious to the rule. This is a case where the rule ought to be enforced. If we are never going to apply this rule against the incorporation in appropriation bills of authorizations for expenditures, we might just as well repeal the rule and go back to the old practice that prevailed in the Senate before the adoption of the rule.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, by your courtesy and patience, I should like to say that I agree with the Senator from Arkansas as to the necessity of fully carrying out the existing rule with regard to new legislation, and I want to say that the test as to whether or not this is new legislation might rest right here: Everything that is proposed to be secured by that amendment could be secured if the amendment read—

To carry out the organic purpose of the Bureau of Standards, $40,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I suggest to the Senator that if he takes that view of the matter he ought to offer his amendment in that form, so as to obviate any question of violating the rule.

Mr. SPENCER. The only reason why I do not—and I am through, Mr. President—is because of what the Senator from Arkansas knows well enough, and that is that in the House as well as in the Senate, but particularly in the House, there has been for some years the desire that where any item carrying out the organic functions of a bureau required an appropriation, there should be a specification of that phase of its organic purpose for which the appropriation was intended. That is the only reason for making this more specific. The effect would be precisely the same, and it would be equally satisfactory.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the general language quoted from the organic act by the Senator from Missouri can justify this specific use of public moneys, then the rule adopted by the Senate providing against new and general legislation in appropriation bills can have little value.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is subject to the point of order, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I offer this amendment, in order to make the record clear, if the Secretary will take it down:

For the purpose of further carrying out the organic purpose of the Bureau of Standards, $40,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think the amendment should be voted down, because it is plainly an effort to do indirectly what can not be done directly. It is an attempt to evade the very wholesome rule of the Senate which is designed to protect the Treasury against legislation on appropriation bills.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I make the point of order against the amendment as now proposed, in that it is not estimated for. There is no estimate for it in the form submitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that both points of order are good, but prefers to base his ruling upon the point of order made by the Senator from Washington, which is sustained. If there be no further amendment proposed to the bill as in Committee of the Whole, it will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13232) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes; requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. HUSTED, Mr. EVANS, and Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 11040) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the sale of the marine-hospital reservation in Cleveland, Ohio," approved July 26, 1916, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND JUSTICE.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on House bill 13232.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13232) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House, agree to the conference asked for by the House, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate may be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. CURTIS, Mr. WARREN, Mr. LODGE, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. HITCHCOCK conferees on the part of the Senate.

PURCHASE AND SALE OF FARM PRODUCTS.

Mr. NORRIS, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 4050) to provide for the purchase and sale of farm products, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 949) thereon.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business and that it be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] desires to take the floor to discuss the measure, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Lenroot	Robinson

Brandegee	Glass	McCumber	Smoot
Brookhart	Gooding	McKellar	Spencer

Fernald	La Follette	Reed, Pa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-one Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, at the very beginning of this discussion I lay it down as a cardinal principle of our system of representative government that we are bound, so nearly as we may, upon all issues to register the will, and to embody into law, the clearly expressed judgment of the people of this country.

Where the people have indicated beyond dispute that they favor a certain public policy, I believe it to be the duty of the Members of this body to embody that policy into law. Where the people have expressed their opposition to any well-defined public policy, I believe it to be our duty to oppose and to reject that policy.

I do not believe any Senator here will dispute that that principle lies at the foundation of our system of government, for from the beginning of our history it has been recognized that above Presidents and Members of Congress the people of this Nation are sovereign and that the will of the people shall be the law of the land.

I propose to demonstrate here to-day, preliminary to a discussion of its terms, that the pending ship subsidy bill is contrary to the expressed will of the American people and that the action of the President and the other sponsors in attempting to force its passage at this time is an open challenge to the people and a violation of the trust reposed by the people in their delegated representatives.

In my view, it is not only unwise and impolitic but it is indefensible to propose the enactment of this legislation at this time, and I propose to state as briefly as I may why I hold that opinion.

This bill is brought in at the instigation of the Executive immediately following an election in which the American people have expressed their disapproval of the policies of the administration now in power.

The administration majority of 169 in the House of Representatives has been reduced to less than 20, and the majority in the Senate has been reduced from 24 to 10. No one will question the assertion that in the new Congress elected by the people on November 7 Members of the Senate and House of both parties who are opposed to the more important policies of this administration will be in a majority in both Houses.

Under these circumstances the Executive has brought forward the pending bill and an effort is now being made to obtain its passage by a Congress the administration majority in which has been repudiated by the American people.

This bill has already passed the lower House by a majority of 24 votes. I count it a significant circumstance that at least 70 of the votes cast for this bill in the House were cast by Members who were defeated in the primaries and the elections. No one will deny that without the support of these defeated Representatives of the people this measure would have met the same fate that has been met by every previous subsidy bill. Moreover, no one will deny that were this bill offered to the new Congress elected in November it would be defeated by a substantial majority.

What warrant can be found for bringing up this bill at this time? It involves an expenditure of hundreds of millions of public money and the delegation of broad and unprecedented powers to a small body of men, at least a majority of whom have forfeited the confidence of right-thinking, conservative-minded people. Where is the authority upon which the Congress can rely in enacting this bill into law in the name of the American people?

I venture to say that never in the history of this country in time of peace has a measure of the far-reaching importance and revolutionary character of this ship subsidy bill been presented to any Congress by any Executive when not a line could be found in the platforms of any political party indorsing the policy embodied in it.

I am familiar with the oft-repeated and wholly untrue and false assertion of those who have conducted such a vigorous propaganda in behalf of this bill that a pledge to the shipping interests to pay them large sums of money from the Treasury in the form of cash subsidies was embodied in the Republican platform of 1920. That argument is sufficiently answered and its complete falsity is demonstrated merely by reading all that the Republican platform of 1920 had to say on the subject of a merchant marine and by stating that the legislation referred to therein and specifically indorsed was the merchant marine act of 1920, known as the Jones Act, which entirely rejected and excluded all plans for a subsidy payment which might then have been proposed.

This is the extract from the Republican platform of 1920 on the subject:

MERCHANT MARINE.

The national defense and our foreign commerce require a merchant marine of the best type of modern ships flying the American flag, manned by American seamen, owned by private capital, and operated by private energy.

We indorse the sound legislation recently enacted by the Republican Congress that will insure the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine.

We recommend that all ships engaged in coastwise trade and all vessels of the American merchant marine shall pass through the Panama Canal without payment of tolls.

I need hardly to add that every platform of the Democratic Party which has dealt with the subject of a merchant marine or shipping in the past 50 years has specifically expressed the unalterable opposition of that party to the payment of ship subsidies to private interests. Let me add that every Democratic candidate in the elections held since 1920, who did not specifically repudiate that declaration in his party platforms, must have been presumed to have indorsed it, and now stands pledged to carry that traditional policy of his party into effect.

Nor is that all. In the recent election the ship subsidy was a direct issue discussed frankly before the electorate in the campaign in a number of States. It was an important issue in the campaigns in Iowa, in Minnesota, in North Dakota, in Wisconsin, and in perhaps a score of other States in which individual candidates for the House and Senate bound themselves by specific pledges to oppose the pending bill.

I have examined these platforms and personal pledges with care, and on the basis of that investigation I am prepared to make the statement that wherever the ship subsidy was an issue in almost every instance the policy involved in the present bill was overwhelmingly repudiated by the American people. Wherever a candidate for public office declared against this ship subsidy bill, in a district normally of his own political party, he was elected, and in many districts normally Republican, Republican candidates who failed to pledge themselves to oppose this bill were defeated by Democratic candidates who pledged themselves to vote against it.

Mr. President, I confidently assert that three-fourths of the people of this country through resolutions adopted by nonpolitical and nonpartisan organizations which fairly represent them have gone definitely on record as unalterably opposed to a ship subsidy, and more particularly to the terms of the pending bill.

The census reports of the Government will show that approximately three-fourths of our population are either directly engaged in or are dependent upon bread winners engaged in agriculture or wage earners in industry.

I assert that these elements of our population, the farmers and the wage earners, are practically unanimous in their opposition to this bill, and I have in my possession the formal resolutions adopted by the great organizations which represent these citizens to prove that statement.

I propose to take up in order the various declarations which have been made upon the question of the subsidy by the farm organizations and the labor organizations which have given an expression on the subject.

An examination of these resolutions will convince any fair-minded person that the farmers of the country are unanimous in their opposition to this bill.

I have no hesitation in saying that in my experience in public life an issue has never been presented before the people of the country which has encountered among American farmers the unyielding opposition and hostility which the pending measure has brought down upon itself and upon those who sponsor it.

I shall take the time of the Senate to read only two of those resolutions, but I request that all of the declarations of representative organizations of farmers and labor which I have been able to assemble and have before me may be printed as an appendix to my remarks in the regular RECORD type.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to inquire whether he has included in the data which he has asked to have printed a statement from the American Federation of Labor information and publicity service, Washington, D. C., of December 8, 1922? That gives the position of the Federation and goes into some detail.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have that document before me, and shall include it in the appendix to my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See Appendix.)

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the National Grange is the oldest farm organization in the United States. It is, I believe, taking its entire membership, probably the most conservative of all the farming organizations in the country. It is my understanding that the National Grange is strongest in its membership in the Eastern States. It originated in the Middle West, in the upper Mississippi Valley, in the early seventies. It has a most interesting history. At its national session in November, 1922, it adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the National Grange, in the fifty-sixth annual session, assembled at Wichita, Kans., November 24, 1922, and representing nearly 1,000,000 organized farmers of America, hereby declare its unalterable opposition to all ship subsidy legislation and to every form of direct subsidies to private enterprises; and

It hereby pledges the full strength of the organization toward the defeat of whatever form of ship subsidy legislation has been or hereafter may be introduced in Congress.

If upon investigation it is found that the American merchant marine is handicapped in its operation by present conditions and laws, then the grange favors a revision of the navigation laws rather than Government aid through a ship subsidy.

C. M. FREEMAN, Secretary.

I hope at some subsequent time during the consideration of the bill to have something to say about those navigation laws.

I also read the resolution adopted by the American Federation of Labor at their annual convention at Cincinnati in June, 1922, as follows:

Whereas the bill known as S. 3217—

That is not the number of the pending bill, but it was the number of the bill introduced last February by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], who, as chairman of the Committee on Commerce, reported the pending bill. It contained many of the subsidy provisions of the pending bill. The declarations in the resolution which I am about to read apply quite as well to the pending bill as to the bill which is numbered in the resolution and which was the only bill on that subject then pending. A later resolution by the council of the American Federation of Labor is so sweeping in its denunciation of all subsidy legislation of this character as applied to the merchant marine that I shall incorporate that resolution, rather than the one which I am about to read now, in the appendix which I have permission of the Senate to publish to the remarks I am now making. I read the resolution adopted at Cincinnati:

Whereas the bill known as S. 3217, now pending in Congress, and which is purported to be "a bill to amend and supplement the merchant marine act of 1920, and for other purposes," is in reality a cunningly devised scheme to enrich certain classes of so-called American shipowners at the expense of the truly American taxpayer and also to provide patronage which is certain to be used for purely political purposes; and

Whereas said bill, commonly known as the "ship subsidy bill," is being widely misrepresented as a measure intended for and necessary to the maintenance and upbuilding of an American merchant marine; and

Whereas the facts are that its enactment into law will bring about a condition under which all managers and operators of ships must regard politics as the prime factor in their business and efficient management as a secondary consideration of compartively little importance; and

Whereas the claim that ship subsidies are necessary to equalize the cost of operation between foreign and American vessels is deceptive and can not be substantiated except in cases where such inequality exists because the American Government has failed and is failing to properly enforce the existing American laws intended to promote equalization, this being especially true of the law known as the La Follette Seamen's Act: Therefore be it

Resolved by the American Federation of Labor in regular convention assembled, That the said ship subsidy bill be condemned as inimical to the public interest, and particularly destructive to the Nation's hopes and aspirations for sea power; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, members of the Cabinet, and to the Members of Congress.

I am going to run over at this point a brief list of a few of the great farm organizations which have condemned the pending bill in formal resolutions, and I ask that these resolutions be incorporated in the RECORD as an appendix to my remarks. Let me add that this is only a partial list, for State and local organizations by the scores, representing constituent organizations and gatherings of large numbers of farmers, have voiced their opposition to this bill:

The Farmers' Union.
The Society of Equity.
The National Grange.
The National Board of Farm Organizations.
The Farmers' National Council.

To this list must be added the American Farm Bureau Federation, which, despite the action of J. R. Howard, the gentleman temporarily holding the position of president of this organization, in indorsing the House bill, has formally gone on record as opposed to the principle of a ship subsidy in any form.

The labor organizations which have gone on record, in one form or another, in opposition to the pending bill, either by formal resolution or by authorized statements of their officials, include the following:

The American Federation of Labor (representing nearly all crafts except those employed in transportation).
The railroad brotherhoods.
International Seamen's Union of America.
Washington State Federation of Labor.
Water Front Workers' Federation.
Cigar Makers' International Union.
Glass Bottle Blowers' Association of the United States and Canada.
Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America.
International Brotherhood of Teamsters and Chauffeurs.
Arkansas State Federation of Labor.
International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.
Minnesota State Federation of Labor.
International Association of Oil Field, Gas Well, and Refinery Workers of America.
Commercial Telegraphers' Union of America.
Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express, and Station Employees.
Order of Sleeping Car Conductors.
Maine State Federation of Labor.
International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths, Drop Forgers, and Helpers.
United Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees and Railway Shop Laborers.
Brotherhood of Railroad Signalmen of America.
The New York State Federation of Labor.
Utah State Federation of Labor.
Rhode Island State Federation of Labor.
Missouri State Federation of Labor.
Montana State Federation of Labor.
Amalgamated Lithographers of America.
Nebraska State Federation of Labor.

Now, I anticipate it will be said that, after all, it is a matter of small importance that the men and women who work with their hands have gone on record in opposition to this bill.

The author of the ship subsidy bill did not take that view, and in speaking of the author of the ship subsidy bill I refer to the chairman of the Shipping Board. In a manner which I shall not now take occasion to characterize, Chairman Lasker sought to win the support of the working people of this country for the bill which is now pending in the Senate.

I content myself with the statement that Chairman Lasker of the Shipping Board sought a conference with Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, and made a highly improper proposal to a group of labor officials that they disregard the will and the interests of their membership and support the pending bill.

This conference took place on April 6 and 7 in the headquarters of the American Federation of Labor in the city of Washington. Chairman Lasker then and there, I am informed, offered to withdraw certain provisions in the pending bill dealing with labor if he could thereby induce the labor organizations to abate their opposition to the bill.

Let it be said to the everlasting credit of the representatives of the workingmen of this country that they spurned and rejected this barefaced proposal that they barter the public interest for what was held up to them as a special provision which would be inserted in the bill in the interest of labor. They sent Chairman Lasker back to the Shipping Board with a refusal of his suggestions. He found that he could not buy American labor, and to-day he faces the unbroken and unyielding opposition of the wage earners of the United States.

Now, Mr. President, I believe I have demonstrated to the satisfaction of any fair-minded person that the pending bill is opposed by the great mass of the American people. Its passage at this time would be a gross violation of the very spirit and letter of the principles of representative government.

I am confronted with a choice that confronts every other Member of this body, as to what course I shall pursue as a representative of the people in the situation which the Executive has forced in this Chamber.

Let me say at this time that, carrying out the pledge I gave to the people who elected me and expressing so far as I may the plain mandate of the people of the Nation, I shall continue as a Member of the Senate to register my opposition to this bill so long as it is before the Senate. I do not know of any higher public service that I can perform during the present session than to do what it lies in my power to do to defeat this legislation, and to the limit of my ability I am prepared to work with other opponents of the bill toward that end.

I can not be unmindful, Mr. President, that an effort will be made to place upon the opponents of this bill responsibility for delay in the enactment of farm-credit legislation for the relief of farmers who have been brought to a condition of grave distress by the policies of this administration.

Let me say at the outset that no such subterfuge will succeed. The public knows that, representing the will of the administration, you have framed the program of legislation for this session of Congress. The public knows that the President and his advisers have decided to give the farmers of this country not one additional penny of credit until you have first voted hundreds of millions of public money into the coffers of the private shipping interests of the country, unless it may be that there are enough Members of the Senate to force the substitution of a measure looking to the relief, the immediate relief, of distressed agriculture. I shall at the proper time be ready to submit or to support a motion which will insure immediate relief to the American farmer.

Let me say in passing that I do not favor merely passing a bill which on its face purports to relieve the farmers, but which in reality will serve only to increase their indebtedness and will leave them in their present helpless and intolerable situation, unable to market their products and unable to meet the obligations they already owe.

I propose to support legislation, such as the Norris bill or some like measure, which will enable the farmer to market his products at a reasonable and fair profit in addition to making money available for direct loans to farmers without the intervention of the bankers, who have thus far handled all moneys loaned to the farmers at high rates of interest.

THE PRESIDENT'S ARGUMENT CHALLENGED.

Mr. President, I challenge the correctness of the proposition which underlies the whole argument in support of the immediate passage of this bill. That proposition is that the drain upon the Public Treasury incident to the maintenance of our Government-owned merchant marine is so great that its longer continuance is a serious menace to the country, and that this bill, if it becomes a law, will immediately relieve the public from this burden in whole or in part.

In his message on this subject, addressed to the joint session of the Congress on November 21 last, the President said:

Our immediate problem is not to build and support a merchant shipping * * *. Our problem is to relieve the Public Treasury of the drain it is already meeting.

In the same message he said:

I am very sure the need for decisive action—decisive favorable action—never was so urgent before.

Again, he said:

When the question is asked, Why the insistence for the merchant marine act now? the answer is apparent. * * * We have the unavoidable task of wiping out a $50,000,000 annual loss in operation and losses aggregating many hundreds of millions in worn-out, sacrificed, or scrapped shipping. * * * This problem can not longer be ignored; its attempted solution can not longer be postponed. The failure of Congress to act decisively will be no less disastrous than adverse action.

Any question concerning replacement of worn-out ships can only arise in the future.

The immediate problem, the President tells us, is to relieve the Treasury of the drain of $50,000,000 a year. To what extent does the President claim that this bill will relieve this drain upon the Treasury? I quote again from the same message:

When your executive government knows of public expenditures aggregating fifty millions annually which it believes could be reduced by half through a change of policy, your government would be unworthy of public trust if such a change were not commended, nay, if it were not insistently urged.

So that the most the President claims that this bill will reduce public expenditures for the maintenance of a merchant marine is $25,000,000 annually, with this difference, that when, as the President says, $50,000,000 annually is spent now of the people's money to maintain a merchant marine it is spent to maintain the people's own ships, but when the millions are spent under the plan the President proposes it is to maintain the ships as the property of private owners, to whom the Government will have practically given them, according to the scheme proposed in this bill.

So it would seem that even according to the President's contentions the great and overpowering necessity for the immediate passage of this bill is no more than to save the public $25,000,000 a year. But even this claim of the President is without any support in the facts. Neither $50,000,000 a year nor any other sum is being lost through Government operation of our ships.

The only ships operated by the Government are those of the United States Line and the Panama Line, and the ships of both these lines have been making money at the very time when the President claims our ships had been operated at a loss.

Of the manner in which our ships have been operated and their alleged losses I shall speak later.

This program of Mr. Lasker and the President so far from saving the public anything will, if adopted, tax the people much more to maintain the ships in the hands of the private parties to whom they will have been practically given than even the advocates of this bill claim they are costing now. But I am not now discussing that question.

ABSURDITY OF CLAIMS MADE FOR THIS BILL.

I am merely pointing out the absurdity of the contention that there is anything in the present situation which requires the immediate passage of this or any other measure which has for its object the transfer of these ships at the present time from the Government to private owners on any terms which the Government can make at this time. Why, sir, the few million dollars, which is the most the President promises to save the public revenue annually under this measure, is only a small fraction of what he will ask for and receive annually for the maintenance of the Navy. Hundreds of millions will be spent to maintain a naval program for war purposes, most of which is unnecessary for any purpose of defense, but $25,000,000 spent to maintain a great merchant fleet in peaceful commerce is something that this administration will not tolerate.

The President's message, however, furnishes the best answer to the contention that there must be a sudden transfer of the title to these ships from the people, whose money paid for them, to private individuals who are to receive them practically as a gift with a bonus for their operation. I quote once more from the President's message.

The net loss to the United States Treasury—sums actually taken therefrom in this Government operation—averaged approximately $16,000,000 per month during the year prior to the assumption of responsibility by the present administration. * * * It is very gratifying to report the diminution of the losses to $4,000,000 per month, or a total of $50,000,000 a year.

Mark you, he says—

in this Government operation.

Why, sir, if the President's figures are correct, within less than two years and under the most unfavorable circumstances imaginable a deficit of $16,000,000 a month has been reduced to only $4,000,000 a month, and that reduction has been made at a time when not only the shipping business of this country but of the world was depressed as never before in history. Mr. Lasker, chairman of the Shipping Board, in his testimony before the House committee described the world trade at the present time as at the lowest ebb. In the document prepared and distributed under the direction of the Shipping Board in behalf of this bill, and made a part of the record of the joint Senate and House committee hearings thereon, it is said:

One of the most difficult problems confronting the Shipping Board is the sale and transfer of Government-owned ships to private owners. The task has been made especially difficult by the present world-wide depression in industry and by the large overproduction of ships. These two important factors have delayed the sale of Government-owned tonnage to such a degree that only a few ships have been sold in the 18 months that have elapsed since the passage of the Jones law. * * *

The present depression in shipping will doubtless continue for several years. Ships can not, therefore, be sold except at very low prices, as is evidenced by the low prices at which privately owned British tonnage and a few Shipping Board ships have been sold in recent months. * * *

The condition of world shipping is well described in the minority report of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House accompanying the bill. From the report I quote this paragraph:

There is a large amount of idle tonnage all over the world. France pays the most liberal subsidies of any nation, and yet on March 1 one-third of her tonnage was laid up. Sixty-five per cent of Italian, 50 per cent of Belgian, 40 per cent of Danish, 40 per cent of Swedish, 38 per cent of Spanish, and 25 per cent of Greek merchant tonnage are laid up. A large amount of Japanese tonnage is idle, but the exact figures are not available. Great Britain, which pays no subsidies and whose seamen receive the largest wages of any country except the United States, has the smallest percentage of idle tonnage—I believe about 22 per cent—except that there is probably a smaller percentage of idle German tonnage, although their entire fleet is very small. Italy, which pays the lowest wages of any country except the oriental countries, has the largest percentage of idle tonnage, although she pays ship subsidies.

That accurately describes the present condition of world shipping—a condition which no subsidy could avert or mitigate—and subsidy has nothing to do with it. That condition is the logical outcome of the late war, which, on the one hand, greatly increased the number of ships, while, on the other, it well-nigh destroyed the producing power of the belligerent nations and the products which they transport. The United States alone raised its tonnage engaged in foreign commerce from something over a million dead-weight tons to 16,000,000 tons.

The United States Shipping Board in its report for the year 1922, made public within the last few days, on page 111 gives a table which graphically illustrates the increase in our merchant marine tonnage, and in that portion of it employed in foreign transportation. I ask leave to insert at this point the table which I hold in my hand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

Total United States merchant marine and tonnage employed in foreign trade.

Fiscal year.	Total merchant marine.	Tonnage in foreign trade.
	Dead-weight tons.	Dead-weight tons.
1800	1,458,738	1,000,661
1810	2,137,175	1,471,529
1820	1,920,251	874,486
1830	1,787,664	806,345
1840	3,271,146	1,144,257
1850	5,303,181	2,159,541
1860	8,030,809	3,509,094
1870	7,309,761	2,173,201
1880	6,022,051	1,971,003
1890	6,635,746	1,302,003
1900	7,747,208	1,225,193
1910	11,262,123	1,173,776
1917	13,308,586	3,661,164
1920	25,027,342	15,092,631
1921	27,538,464	16,819,943
1922	27,784,989	16,279,371

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. This is a very interesting table, let me say in this connection, and one which Senators will find fruitful of much reflection and many deductions not only upon the issues raised in this bill but upon other economic issues which are now foremost in the public mind.

The marked drop in the tonnage of the American merchant marine employed in foreign transportation covering certain cycles, certain extended periods of consecutive years, coincident with legislation affecting the industrial interests of the country, will prove suggestive to Senators in the debate upon this bill and other measures likely to follow it.

The 1917 foreign-trade tonnage of 3,661,164 tons shows the commencement of the great increase due to the war. Perhaps I ought to say that the reported tonnage for 1910 employed in foreign trade was 1,173,776 tons.

Mr. POMERENE. At what time was that?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. This is given by 10-year periods. I believe I will just read the figures of our tonnage employed in foreign trade, as published in this late report, just issued a few days ago by the Shipping Board:

	Dead-weight tons.
1800	1,000,661

1890	1,392,093
1910	1,173,776

That is the report for 1910. The next year reported is 1917. Then the effect of the European war had expressed itself in the tonnage of American vessels used in foreign trade, and the tonnage ran up to 3,661,164 tons. By 1920 we had 15,692,631 tons employed in foreign trade. By 1921 we had 16,819,943 tons employed in foreign trade. In 1922 there was a slight drop, but for this present year it stands at 16,279,371 tons.

To recapitulate, the 1917 foreign-trade tonnage of 3,661,164 tons shows the commencement of the great increase due to the war. It will be observed that from a little more than three and a half million tons in 1917 we rapidly increased to more than fifteen and a half million tons in 1920, and to more than sixteen and three-quarter million tons in 1921, and that our tonnage engaged in foreign trade stands at over sixteen and a quarter million tons in the present year, 1922, as reported in this document just issued by the Shipping Board.

After the war the surplus of ships remained, but there was an enormous shrinkage in products for overseas trade. It will take several years to recover from this condition under the most favorable circumstances. During this period ships will remain a drug upon the market. Their price is probably right now at the lowest point, unless we were seeking solely to consult the interests of the purchaser, and not Uncle Sam, the seller. There never could be a worse time selected for marketing our ships than the present. The man would be counted a fool who in private business, unless on the verge of bankruptcy, selected the time of greatest depression to dispose of his property, knowing that it would not bring more than 5 cents on the dollar of what it cost, and only a small fraction of its real value. But that is precisely what this bill proposes we shall do with the great merchant marine now belonging to the people of this country and in the disposition of which we are merely trustees.

The Shipping Board has authority to sell the ships under existing law. It has not done so because there was no market for them. There is no market for them because there is little or no employment for them. A subsidy will not increase the business. A subsidy will not create cargoes. There is no certainty, indeed there is no evidence tending to show, that the proposed subsidy would make a market for the ships or increase the price for which they can be sold. The most optimistic claim that I have seen put forward by Mr. Lasker and other advocates of this measure is that the ships might be sold for $200,000,000. This is something like 5 or 6 per cent of what the ships cost the American people. It is a small part even of the pre-war value of such ships or their cost of construction under normal conditions.

Everyone knows that if European conditions become more nearly normal and as the commerce of the world is reestablished the market value of these ships will greatly increase. If, on the other hand, Europe is plunged into another war, judged by the increased volume of traffic during the last war, that fact will greatly enhance the value of the ships; so that, viewed from any possible angle, the plan to dispose of the ships immediately means a tremendous loss to the people of this country, no matter whether the world is entering upon a period of peace-time development or of further wars.

All this agitation and propaganda to try to prove to the people that a great crisis exists which makes it necessary to sacrifice their property at a few cents on the dollar is fictitious, if not fraudulent.

The attempt to foist a ship-subsidy plan upon the people is no new scheme. It has been tried by far more powerful and able financiers and politicians than those supporting the present administration. The scheme has always failed, as it will fail now, because the people are opposed to it.

But whatever difference of opinion may honestly exist as to the wisdom or unwisdom of a ship subsidy, I can see no room for any difference of opinion on the proposition that this is not the time to commit the country to a permanent policy respecting our Government-owned merchant fleet, nor is it the time to try to make a market for that fleet. The price of ships can not go lower; that price must inevitably advance. A worse time could not be selected for the Government to sell these ships or a better time for the favored purchasers, in which to attempt to dispose of our merchant fleet or to decide the question whether it shall be subsidized or not. Just in proportion as we approach more normal shipping conditions we will be able to decide more intelligently what action to take and secure a better price for our ships if we decide to sell them at that time.

EXPERIENCE SHOWS OUR SHIPS CAN BE OPERATED SUCCESSFULLY.

The President tells us that in a few months the expense of maintaining the fleet has been reduced from $16,000,000 a month to $4,000,000 a month. This reduction has been made with less than a third of the Government fleet in operation and at a time when shipping the world over is at the lowest point. But this is not all. This result has been accomplished under the direction of a Shipping Board, not one member of which claims to be experienced in ship operation. The chairman of the Shipping Board was selected, as it now appears, not because he knew anything about shipping but because he was a clever advertising man. He was put in his present position at the head of the greatest merchant fleet in the world, not to operate ships but, as he is reported to have declared, as I think he himself has testified, to "sell" ship subsidy to the American people, and one can see some logical reason for his selection for that purpose. For months an intensive propaganda has been carried on to so blind the American people to the real facts as to lead them to acquiesce in being plundered and robbed, as they will be, according to the terms of this bill.

Very frankly Chairman Lasker admits that the Shipping Board, of which he is the head, has not tried to build up the shipping business of the country during his administration. Chairman Lasker, at the joint hearings of the Senate Committee on Commerce and the House Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries on this bill, testified upon this point as follows:

> The Shipping Board is not trying to establish trade. * * * We are only taking such trade as is offered, and you can not build up an American trade that way. We get only the plusage of the trade, as is proved by the fact that now we have tied up much more than Great Britain has.

Why, Mr. President, it has been pointed out on this floor again and again in the last year or year and a half that the policy of the Shipping Board was one of hostility to making the operation of the Government-owned ships a success. It is akin, sir, to the policies which have been employed widely wherever there was an opportunity, because of exceptional conditions, to discourage the Government operation of anything, and to reserve that field entirely for private profits and exploitation of the American people. A new day will come, sir. I believe that it is not far distant. I trust it will not come before we are ready for it and ready to deal with it on sound economic principles.

Why, sir, I pause briefly to say that it is a fact, sustained by the record, that the men who have been put in the responsible positions under the present Shipping Board, operating, handling, and directing the operation of the Government-owned ships, were drawn from private shipping corporations more British than American, and every man of whom, influenced by his years of service in those corporations, had interests not only inimical but hostile to the successful operation of any fleet owned by our Government. I go further than that and say that their connections, as I demonstrated on the floor more than a year ago, were such as to make them more friendly to other interests, if they, as most men under like circumstances are certain to be, were influenced by their long and previous connection with interests which were not American and not in sympathy with the development of an American merchant marine. But more of that later in this debate.

I remind the Senate again of the quotation just made from Mr. Lasker's testimony, in which he said that the Shipping Board "was not trying to establish trade," and yet the point that is driven in here by the President's message, by arguments which have been presented by supporters of the bill, by all the propaganda that has flooded the country, is that the terrible expense, the outlay for handling these Government-owned ships, is so great that it is the duty of Congress immediately to rescue the Government from the expenditure. If the Government-owned ships all could be employed in the business of transporting, limited as the products for transportation have been and still are, and had been honestly and sanely employed to make money for the Government, no such balance as a $50,000,000 expense would have been rendered or could have been used as an argument to push this legislation through. The Government-owned ships that have been run, not as the Shipping Board has run them, but which have been run to establish trade and to make them profitable—the Panama Canal Co. and the United States Lines, operated by Mr. Rossbottom—made money. During the very lowest ebb of shipping there were some months in which they did not make money, but taking the whole period, which shows loss year by year on the part of the Government under the management of the Shipping Board, and contrasting it with the Panama Co. and later with the United States Lines under the management of Mr. Rossbottom, the manager of the United States Panama Line, it will be found they have been operating at a profit with the exception, I think, of one single year. Had they been permitted to lay by a surplus to draw upon for that year a still better showing would have been made.

I return now and again remind Senators of the quotation from Mr. Lasker's testimony and take up the argument at that point. I wish to reread the quotation from his testimony just to get the connection:

> The Shipping Board is not trying to establish trade. * * * We are only taking such trade as is offered, and you can not build up an American trade that way. We get only the plusage of the trade, as is proved by the fact that now we have tied up much more than Great Britain has.

That is the policy upon which it is admitted that our ships have been operated since the close of the war. They have made no effort to get business. Wherever they have come into competition with privately owned American ships the Government-owned ships have been taken off. In the language of Chairman Lasker, they have only been taking such trade as was offered. That has been the deliberate policy of the administration.

And yet, in the face of all that and in spite of the fact that every man, from Chairman Lasker through all his organization of $35,000 a year assistants who have been operating these ships, has tried to make Government operation a failure—yet the deficit from their operation has been reduced from $16,000,000 a month to $4,000,000 a month.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator who testified to the fact that when the United States Shipping Board vessels came in competition with privately owned ships the Government owned ships were taken off?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is the testimony of Mr. Lasker and, I think, of other witnesses. I have not noted the pages of the testimony, so I am unable to refer the Senator to them.

Mr. POMERENE. What reason was assigned for that action?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not at this moment recall that any reason was assigned for it, but just simply the fact stated.

Mr. CARAWAY. As I understand the Senator from Wisconsin, that was the statement of Chairman Lasker?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The statement which I read was the statement of Chairman Lasker, and I distinctly recollect, though I have not quoted the testimony upon that nor made reference to it, that in reading the mass of testimony taken by the committee it was admitted that wherever the Government-operated ships came in competition with private-owned lines, the Government-operated ships have been taken off. If I am in error about that I ask to be corrected.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield with great pleasure.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the reason given for that action was that no ships privately operated long continued in competition with Government ships and as the only purchasers they could hope to get for ships would be private operators, if we drove them out of business then we would have no purchasers whatever for the Government ships. I think that was the reason.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have no doubt that is the reason, and which they assigned. It is the fact that that has been the policy of the board.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think so.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am glad to be confirmed in my statement of the testimony by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. The testimony of Lasker is that the operation of Government ships was at a great loss. Then he said if we put those ships which we were operating at a loss in competition it would destroy vessels which were operating at a profit. I am curious to know how that could be.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator please repeat his question?

Mr. CARAWAY. Lasker said that the operation of Government ships was at a great loss; that it cost more to operate them than they earned; and yet he testified that because of their competition, which would necessarily mean they were running at a less cost, they would destroy privately owned ships being operated at a profit. If a privately owned ship was operated at a profit, I do not see how it would be destroyed by being put in competition with any such incompetent concern that was operating at a loss.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. May I suggest that if we put all of the resources behind the Government ships we could keep them going even though we ran them at a loss, and if we did that we would soon drive the private shipping out of business.

Mr. CARAWAY. If I may be permitted to say to the Senator from Washington, that is rather a remarkable statement in view of his oft-repeated statement that we had hundreds of ships tied up which we did not operate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. To resume my argument:

The report just issued by the Shipping Board, however, shows that in spite of the maladministration of our Government-owned ships and the adverse conditions which have attended shipping operations the world over we have fared very well. I quote from page 44 of that report:

> During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922, United States ports witnessed 37,312 arrivals and departures of vessels engaged in waterborne foreign commerce, which aggregated 80,231,000 long tons of cargo. Of this total, 52 per cent moved in American vessels, including tankers and Great Lakes traffic, in which our ships predominate. Excluding these, American ships moved 30 per cent only of our commerce. The total vessel dead weight entering and clearing was 214,952,000 tons, 51 per cent of which was American tonnage.
> In relative efficiency, as indicated by the relation of load to dead-weight tonnage, the American percentage was 37.9 per cent and the foreign 36.4 per cent. In other words, while American vessels used 2.62 dead-weight tons to transport each ton of cargo, foreign vessels used 2.74 dead-weight tons per cargo ton.
> Exports constituted 54 per cent of the total commerce. Forty-nine per cent of the entrances and clearances and 51 per cent of the dead weight entering and clearing were American vessels, and carried 68 per cent of the total imports and 39 per cent of the total exports.

Fifty-two per cent of our foreign commerce carried in American vessels during the time of the great depression in our shipping business is certainly nothing to be discouraged about.

Again, I quote from page 106 of the Shipping Board Report of 1922, and I might remind any Senators who have come in since I referred to the fact that the report from which I am about to quote has just been issued, and it will be found to be very interesting.

> Efforts of the corporation during the year to secure shipment of Egyptian cotton for American vessels were successful. This trade was under the control of British lines who, as a consequence, carried all Egyptian cotton to the United States. After considerable negotiation between representatives of the corporation and Egyptian cotton shippers an agreement was concluded whereby a division of American and British tonnage would take care of this cotton movement to the extent of 50 per cent of its exports by American and British vessels. A considerable portion of this cotton goes to Boston for New England mills, with occasional part cargoes for New York.

This shows what can be done in the way of getting business even with a very moderate amount of initiative.

Again, I quote from page 110 of the same report:

> General conditions in the Mediterranean trade, both from the Gulf and North Atlantic ports, were somewhat depressed owing to unsettled conditions. Both to continental Europe and Mediterranean ports the corporation made particular progress in the establishment of trade routes from Gulf ports.

Concerning the South American trade the report says:

> By close adherence to definite schedules and by placing the most suitable vessels in these trades the Shipping Board lines took a strong lead over the foreign lines; this was particularly true of the fast passenger cargo service between New York and Brazil and River Plata ports.

These are but samples to be found throughout this report, indicating the success and prosperity of American-owned ships, at least as compared with the ships of other countries. If this report is true, and there is certainly no reason to suppose that it exaggerates in favor of American shipping, it is conclusive proof that we have not only been able to hold our own but that our merchant marine has gained upon its rivals in competition for business during the last year and that it has done this without any subsidy.

We have heard much about loss on the operation of Government ships, and the effort has been made to mislead the public into the belief, by the most extensive and skillful propaganda ever attempted in behalf of any measure, that Government ownership and operation of a ship inevitably means a loss. The fact is that losses on Government-owned ships, if losses have been sustained, have occurred on those ships not operated by the Government but operated largely under contracts adroitly devised to make the Government lose money. When Mr. Lasker came into the Shipping Board he thus described the now famous or infamous MO–4 contract:

> The contract is the most shameful piece of chicane, inefficiency, and of looting the Public Treasury that the human mind can devise. (See testimony of Mr. Lasker on previous hearing and inserted in the record of the joint hearings before the Senate Committee on Commerce and the House Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.)

Under this form of agreement all expenses of the operation of the vessel covering wages, feeding, stevedoring, wharfage, repairs, fuel, port charges—in fact, expenses of every nature whatsoever incurred directly or indirectly by the ships—are paid by the Government. Under this form of agreement the managing operator receives as his compensation a 5 per cent commission on the gross freight revenue for securing the cargo and handling the vessel at the port at which the cargo is loaded, and 2½ per cent of the gross freight revenue additional at the port at which the cargo is discharged. In other words, a total of 7½ per cent on the total freight revenue of the vessel as shown by the manifest. Also 10 per cent of the gross passenger earnings.

The foregoing description of the MO–4 contract is substantially taken from the statement of Mr. Frey, vice president of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, Volume I, page 538, of the above hearings. Further speaking of the MO–4 contract Mr. Frey said:

> The most disturbing element in connection with the MO–4 system of operation is that there is no incentive for the managing agent to bring about economies in operation. His compensation is fixed entirely on the gross revenue of the vessel, and it makes no financial difference to him whether the expenses of the voyage are $50,000 or $80,000, with the gross revenue at, say, $60,000. So far as he is concerned his compensation is based on 7½ per cent of the $60,000, and it makes no change in his revenue whether he operates the vessel with economy and with quick turnabouts in ports and is able to keep his voyage expense down to $50,000, or whether he allows things to shift for themselves and the voyage expenses run up to $80,000—the deficit comes out of the Government Treasury. (Vol. I, joint hearings, p. 539.)

Yet, sir, it appears from this statement that Mr. Frey presented at the joint hearing of the Senate Committee on Commerce and the House Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, held on September 8, 1922, that the MO–4 agreement is the basis on which—to quote his words—"practically all of the vessels of the Shipping Board now in operation are being handled." (Vol. I, joint hearings, p. 538.) In view of this situation the wonder is not that some loss has attended the operation of our ships under the depressed condition of the last two years, but the wonder is that the loss has not been a thousand times greater.

The Shipping Board made elaborate preparations to present its case for subsidy at the hearings before the joint committees of the two Houses. It marshaled all its experts, its $35,000 a year employees, and with the whole force and power of the administration back of it tried to make a case for subsidy and it failed. The testimony of one witness which found its way in the record on this subject, contrary to the wish and purposes of the Shipping Board, largely nullified the efforts of Mr. Lasker and his associates to show the impossibility of operating our ships without a subsidy. I refer to the testimony of Mr. Rossbottom, who had for years operated the Panama Line of Government ships and is at present operating the United States Lines.

Mr. Rossbottom was called by the Shipping Board to testify merely with respect to section 301 of the bill relating to the carriage of immigrants in American ships. After he had completed his testimony upon that subject he was questioned by some members of the committee, who developed the fact that Mr. Rossbottom had for years managed the Government's Panama steamship operations at a profit, and was at the present time in charge of the United States Lines. On this subject Mr. Rossbottom said:

> You can not operate any ships, no matter how much of a subsidy you give them, unless they have a trade to carry (p. 350).

Mr. Rossbottom's testimony will be found in Volume I, page 335, of the joint hearings previously referred to. Pages 360 to 381 of his testimony are particularly illuminating. I had intended to read from it at some length, but I pass it by for the present. However, there may be occasion to refer to it later in the debate. This portion of Mr. Rossbottom's testimony shows conclusively that ships can be run successfully in competition with any other ships in the world and without subsidies both in South American and European trade if only honesty and ordinary intelligence are applied in their operation.

The substance of his testimony is that both these lines had been run successfully and profitably, and that they could compete with the shipping of any other country in the world, and this in spite of the fact that some of the ships in the United States Lines were obsolete and not up to modern standards.

Mr. Rossbottom was compelled by the Shipping Board to take such ships as they were willing to let him have. He was not permitted to pick and choose from the idle ships tied up at the wharves—ships that would have returned a much greater profit in their operation—but he was obliged to take, with some ships that were fit to be put into service, ships that were unfit for operation in that trade; but taking them all together, he found himself able to operate that line of Government-owned ships successfully. The fact is that just as soon as we get away from the infamous MO–4 contracts and operate our ships with the desire to make them succeed, instead of a fixed purpose to make them fail, we find that our ship operations have been as successful as those of any other country in the world.

CONGRESS DENIED NECESSARY INFORMATION BY SHIPPING BOARD.

There is just one other point I wish to make upon this branch of the subject in passing. It is this: We hear a great deal about losses in the operation of Government-owned ships, but as I read the record of the joint hearings of the Senate Committee on Commerce and the House Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries on this bill, Congress up to the present time has been denied full and definite information concerning the cause of those losses or the ships or lines upon which they have occurred. The Shipping Board—and I undertake to say that this information will startle Senators who are within the sound of my voice—flatly refused that information to Congress, as I read the record. On this point I quote from the minority report dated November 25, 1922, of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House, submitted to the House in opposition to this bill:

> Not only did members and representatives of the Shipping Board, who it had been announced would appear, fail to appear, but also other witnesses who had been requested by the Shipping Board and shipping interests to appear in behalf of the bill, were advised to send in written statements instead of appearing in person. It is known that a representative of the shipping interests, who took an active interest in behalf of the bill, wrote letters to some of those who had previously been requested to appear in person, not only advising them to send in written statements instead of appearing in person, but also advising that "this method will also prevent the cross-examination of witnesses."
> The hearings were not conducted in the interest of an unbiased investigation of the subject, but solely for the purpose of promoting the pending bill. The members of the Shipping Board who took an interest in the hearings manifested extreme partisanship. Meyer Lissner, a member of the Shipping Board, who was nearly always present, frequently interfered to prevent the development of important facts. The Shipping Board repeatedly refused to furnish important information called for by members of the committee. For instance, they refused to produce for insertion in the hearings the appraisal alleged to have been made in accordance with the law at the time all of the ships were advertised for sale; they refused to disclose the operating profits or losses of the different companies operating Shipping Board vessels; although they promised to do so, yet they failed to furnish an itemized statement of the expenditures from the $1,715,000 advertising fund, though repeatedly requested to do so.

Naturally, one might think that some of that advertising fund strayed off into backing propaganda for this ship subsidy bill.

> Of those who appeared in behalf of the bill at least nine were representatives from the Shipping Board, who, of course, appeared at the behest of Chairman Lasker; at least nine were connected with shipping interests who would share in the subsidies and other aids provided in the bill; it appeared that, with possibly two or three exceptions, the remainder who appeared in behalf of the bill did so at the instance of the Shipping Board or shipping interests, or both; some of these were representatives of licensed offices, one of whom, Luther B. Dow, business manager of the American Steamship Licensed Officers' Association, admitted that he was paid a salary of $5,000 per annum by certain steamship lines which he named, and that said steamship owners likewise paid their office rent of $237 a month and also the salaries of two subordinate officials; and that the licensed officers themselves did not contribute one penny to these expenses. He further stated that the said steamship owners had equal representation on their board of directors, etc.
> Five parties appeared and testified against the bill as a whole; four others testified against certain provisions of the bill without indorsing any of its provisions. As we recall, not a single witness—not even among those who appeared in behalf of the bill—approved all of the provisions of the bill. On the other hand, practically every witness criticized at least some of the features of the bill; but few of the objections thus pointed out have been remedied.
> Of course, those citizens opposing the bill did so from a patriotic standpoint, having no personal interest other than that of the great body of citizens generally. Consequently it was quite natural that but few would feel that it was incumbent upon them to voluntarily come to Washington on their own expense to help to protect the public interest. The members of the committees who were convinced that the bill was bad either as a whole or in part neither had the time, opportunity, nor facilities for ascertaining and procuring the attendance of witnesses to testify to the inequities of the bill. The hearings were rushed so rapidly that those who were faithfully attending and attempting to develop all the facts did not even have sufficient time to attend to their other official duties when not engaged in the hearings. We did not have a large force of Government-paid employees at our beck and call, as did the proponents of the bill. The committees refused to have summoned witnesses asked for by those opposed to the bill.

The correctness of these statements is vouched for by five perfectly reputable Members of the House of Representatives, who signed the report in which they are contained, and no one has denied or challenged the correctness of these statements.

In further support of what I say I will read a few questions and answers from the above record of the hearing in Volume II, page 1517:

Mr. DAVIS. Which information do you mean is not given out?
Mr. LOVE. The information that I have here.

For the information of Senators who may not happen to know, I will state that Mr. Love is one of the highly salaried employees of the Shipping Board who was taken over from one of the offices of the private shipping corporations and installed in that position.

I repeat the question in order that Senators may preserve the connection:

Mr. DAVIS. Which information do you mean is not given out?
Mr. LOVE. The information that I have here.
Senator FLETCHER. It does not cover the cargo ships at all; only passenger?
Mr. LOVE. No, sir. I had it made up in accordance with the request, Senator.
Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Love, I want to know whether there is any objection to furnishing the net voyage loss or the net profits of each of the Shipping Board lines for the past six months up to as near as you have it?
Mr. LOVE. That is, for the passenger services?
Mr. DAVIS. Both passenger and cargo.
Mr. LOVE. Judge, those figures all show in the monthly financial statements that we get out.
Mr. DAVIS. Chairman Lasker has already given the sum total?
Mr. LOVE. Yes, sir.
Mr. DAVIS. Of all of them combined?
Mr. LOVE. Yes.
Mr. DAVIS. I want to know if you are willing to break that up and give the same profits or losses as to individual lines?
Mr. LOVE. I would be very glad to confer with the chairman on that, but I do not believe this committee will be in session by the time we get it ready for you.
Mr. DAVIS. Have you an account with each company?
Mr. LOVE. Yes; but there are uncompleted voyages.
Mr. DAVIS. We will say, then, up to the period when the accounts are complete; in other words, Chairman Lasker furnished the voyage loss for February.
Mr. LOVE. Month by month?
Mr. DAVIS. For February and March. He had everything in before he could furnish that, did he not?
Mr. LOVE. Yes.
Mr. DAVIS. He had it in as to each individual line, then, did he not?
Mr. LOVE. That refers to the voyages closed within that month.
Mr. HARDY. I would like to know this, Mr. Love, in a general way: What kind of facts it is that you think can not be given out?
Mr. LOVE. I will read the headings.
Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that this examination is proceeding just the way it should.
Mr. GREENE—

Mr. GREENE is the chairman of the House committee.

Mr. GREENE. I think it is going pretty wide of the mark myself.
Mr. CHINDBLOM. Are we in the attitude here of trying to force the hand of the Government, which we represent? Why not tell the gentleman what you want him to furnish and let him confer with the chairman of the board and the members of the board and then let them come to a conclusion and give us a complete answer as to what their attitude is on it?
Mr. HARDY. That is what we are trying to get now.
Mr. GREENE. But he has told you he could not furnish it.
Mr. HARDY. And now I have asked what it is he can not furnish the committee.
Mr. GREENE. He stated he could not furnish it to you, and still you are insisting on trying to get it.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PEPPER in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. It occurs to me that if the Shipping Board had kept books they could have furnished the information sought.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. An examination of the testimony I think will convince anybody that the information could have been furnished, but it was not the purpose of the Shipping Board to uncover the facts. That has been the attitude of that Shipping Board ever since it has been in office; but more of that will, I think, appear later in the debate on this bill.

After an attempt to deceive the committee into the belief that the Shipping Board did not have the figures in question, a summary was finally produced before the committee giving the aggregate but not the detailed figures, and the detailed figures were flatly refused. (See pp. 1519 and 1520.)

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I confess I am somewhat amazed and astounded at the statement the Senator has made. Did the Shipping Board refuse to give the committee the information?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator will find on pages 1519 and 1520 testimony which supports the statement I have made, that it was flatly refused. That testimony was taken in joint hearings of the House and Senate committees.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to see if I get it correct. As I understand it, they did give the information in the aggregate as to all the lines for February and March?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. They did.

Mr. NORRIS. They refused to give the committee the loss or the gain of the different lines?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. For the voyages.

Mr. NORRIS. They must have had that information or they could not have given the other.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Or they could not have given the complete statement for February and March.

Mr. NORRIS. What reason was given as to why they would not say whether there were some lines which were making money, while others were losing, and which they were?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There was no definite reason given, according to my recollection.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, while these were joint hearings, I was not able to be present at the hearings very much of the time on account of other business in connection with the committee, which kept me elsewhere. My understanding of the reason why they did not give out the detailed information with reference to these different routes in particular was that it would give information to the competitors of those lines which would be very detrimental to our own lines. That was the sole reason why it was refused, as I understand. My recollection also is that the chairman of the Shipping Board stated that he was perfectly willing to give that information to the committee in a confidential way, so that the information would not get out to the competitors of those lines.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Of course, there is a great mass of this testimony, two very large volumes of several hundred pages each, and I did not quote that portion of the testimony. My recollection is that the members of that joint committee who were pressing for that information, when they found they could not secure the information for the record, to the end that it could be made available for Congress, asked to have it privately furnished to the committee, and that it was not furnished. That is my recollection of the testimony.

The fact is that the Congress is being asked to legislate upon a subject it knows nothing about and upon which it has been denied the very information necessary to enable it to act intelligently. Until you know the ships and the lines and the voyages upon which it is claimed money has been lost and the contracts under which those ships were operated when it is claimed the loss was sustained, I submit to any man of business experience in this body, you can not say that ships require a subsidy unless you know the profit and loss resulting from the operation of every ship and all of the facts, conditions, and circumstances connected therewith; and this whole argument for disposing of the ships and granting a subsidy is based upon the fact that we were sustaining a $50,000,000 a year loss. That is the burden of the President's argument in his special message for this ship subsidy bill.

You can not say that the loss was not sustained through incompetence or worse; you can not say that a subsidy would remove the cause of the loss and put the ship on an operating basis. Certainly when the Shipping Board, representing the President, comes to the Congress and asks for a subsidy for the ships, every fact and every figure with regard to the operation of the ships ought to be laid before Congress. Nothing better illustrates the depth to which the Executive must believe the Congress has sunk than that he should send his representatives to Congress demanding this legislation while withholding information necessary for Congress to have in order to form any intelligent judgment on the subject.

It is a remarkable campaign that has been conducted to put over ship subsidy. On the one hand, Mr. Lasker, probably the cleverest advertising man in the country, has for months, as he has testified himself, been "selling" ship subsidy to the people through the press, in pamphlets, and the influence of prominent persons and corporations; while on the other hand he has veiled in darkest secrecy and hid from the Congress itself the most vital facts and information upon this subject.

THIS BILL IS ADMITTEDLY CONTRARY TO THE WILL OF THE PEOPLE.

Mr. President, this bill comes before you with the admission written all over it that it is contrary to the will of the people we represent and that every man who favors it, from the President down, knows that it is contrary to the will and wishes of the people of this country. The central provision of the bill, section 403, which provides for the subsidy, is pregnant with this admission. That section declares:

The board is authorized and directed on behalf of the United States to enter into a contract with any person, a citizen of the United States, who is the owner of a vessel, for the payment of compensation in respect to such vessel, subject to the limitations of this title.

Why is it necessary to provide for this subsidy in the form of a contract? There is only one reason, and that is because it is known that the people are so far opposed to the subsidy that at the first opportunity they will send representatives here to Washington who will repeal any subsidy law, and so it is proposed to put this subject, if possible, beyond the control of the people for a period of 10 years. I suppose it is assumed that everyone supporting this legislation will be dead or out of office within the next 10 years. Certainly they will be out of office within a very much shorter period.

I observe that the majority of the Senate committee amended this section of the bill to provide—

That no contract made hereunder shall extend beyond a period of 15 years from the date of the enactment of this act.

Of course, the next or any succeeding Congress could repeal this section, as it could any other legislation, and that is the reason for the contract provision. It is fondly hoped that by making the subsidy a matter of contract between a Government official and the shipowner that the whole matter is placed beyond the control of Congress and the people.

The President when he came before the Congress a few days ago in a special message urging the passage of this bill had the temerity very frankly to urge that Congress should disregard the known wishes of their constituents upon this subject. He said:

In individual exchanges of opinion not a few in House or Senate have expressed personal sympathy with the purposes of the bill and then uttered a discouraging doubt about the sentiment of their constituencies. * * * Frankly, I think it loftier statesmanship to support and commend a policy designed to effect the larger good to the Nation than merely to record the too hasty impressions of a constituency.

Mr. President, there is no other government in the world laying any claims to being a representative government democracy in which such an utterance from the executive would be tolerated. Suppose that the premier of Great Britain, after an election at which the people had pronounced overwhelmingly in favor of a great governmental policy, should go before the House of Commons and urge the members to disregard the will of the people as expressed in the late election. That would be regarded in Great Britain as so dishonorable as to be practically unthinkable. A prime minister who would be guilty of it would not last for a single day. For the British King to do such a thing would mean a revolution and his overthrow in 24 hours. Yet, sir, such is the madness of the present administration that the President comes before the Congress, which has been but a few days previously advised of the people's will, and urges the Members to disregard it. "The too hasty impressions of a constituency" is not to weigh against "the larger good" to the ship magnates, including the Standard Oil, the United States Steel Corporation, the United Fruit Co., and other favored interests.

I shall not at this time attempt to discuss in detail the provisions of this bill. It is so fundamentally bad and conceived in such hostility to American institutions and so foreign to the will and purpose of the people of this country that no amendment could preserve the subsidy features and leave it a bill that any Senator, in my judgment, ought to support.

But there are some provisions in it that are so obviously vicious and so clearly indicate the real purpose of this bill that I will at this time call attention to a few of them.

SOME VICIOUS PROVISIONS OF THE BILL.

It will be observed that section 1 of the bill authorizes the disposition of the ships by public or private competitive sale after appraisement and advertisement substantially in the language of the existing law. So far so good. But turn to section 2 of the bill, which is new, and you read this:

That the board shall not for the period of two years after the enactment of the merchant marine act, 1922, sell vessels operating on routes established by the board prior to the enactment of this act to persons other than those who, in the judgment of the board, have the support, financial and otherwise, of the domestic communities primarily interested in such lines.

By this provision the whole matter of the persons to whom the ships are to be sold is left to the judgment of the board. They may go through the form of competitive bidding provided for in the first section of the act, but if, "in the judgment of the board" the successful bidder is not one to whom the board wishes to sell, the sale will be declared off and a new sale made, in which the successful bidder will undoubtedly be one approved by the "judgment of the board."

We deal with public lands. We have dealt with the lands of the wards of this Government as well as public lands. We have never lodged such power in a Cabinet minister as it is proposed to put in this board, which has lived under a cloud of suspicion for the last 15 months.

That the purpose of the framers of the bill was as I have stated is shown conclusively from the fact that the bill as it passed the House had in it a provision specifically authorizing the board to sell ships without competitive bidding or advertising. Just how it was possible for this board, even with its adroit advertising agent, Mr. Lasker, to put through the House of Representatives a proposition of that sort I am wholly unable to understand. The bill as it is now before the Senate gives the Shipping Board exactly this power, but the language in which it is done is made a little more obscure. They are invested with the discretion to set aside everything that is done under the provisions which require advertising and competitive bidding.

Everyone knows what will happen as soon as a contract is made with the Shipping Board for the sale of a ship. A corporation will be formed. The contract will be capitalized. Stocks and bonds will be issued and sold to the public. The insiders will get the bonds, the public will get the stocks at a cost greater than the value of the entire vessel.

The purchasers of the stocks will be lured on with the declaration that the Government has given a subsidy to the ship in which they are buying an interest. The money to purchase the ship will really be wheedled out of the public by clever salesmen like Mr. Lasker. The control, of course, will remain with the insiders, as is always provided in these cases. Then in a little while, when the public is getting no dividends upon its stock because the ship was capitalized for many times its actual value, the passenger and freight rates will have to be put upon the American people, and this fine scheme which is proposed to "save the farmers" and "furnish them transportation at reduced rates" will load onto their already bended backs unlimited advances in ocean transportation charges over which neither the Congress nor the Government proposes to exercise any control whatever. We are asked to give the big steamship corporations the Government ships, subsidize them on top of that to operate the vessels, and leave them unlimited authority to tax the public through transportation charges up to the limit of the paying power of the American people.

It will be the old, old story of the railroads over again. Think of the possibility of capitalizing and selling in this way ships which cost the Government three or four billion dollars, to be sold to such persons as the judgment of the Shipping Board approves. The merits of ship subsidy are lost sight of entirely in the presence of the great and immediate opportunity for graft and public exploitation under the provisions of this bill.

Section 5 of the bill provides for a revolving fund of $125,000,000, to be known as the "United States Shipping Board construction loan fund." This fund the board may use, according to subsection (b) of the bill, in making loans to aid such persons, citizens of the United States, as it pleases in the construction of ships or in the equipping of ships already built. This simply adds $125,000,000 more to the power of the board to dispense benefits to favored persons and interests. This section had an amendment added to it in the Senate committee, as follows:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to the construction or equipment of vessels by corporations or individuals primarily for the purpose of transporting their own products.

I suppose it will be contended that this takes care of the Standard Oil and Steel Trusts and other similar concerns and prevents their profiteering under the bill. Of course, the provision is useless for any such purpose. Even without this provision in the bill those concerns will doubtless organize separate corporations for owning and operating their ships so that the corporation owning the ships will not, of course, own the products which the ships transport. By this simplest of all devices known to corporation experts, the amendment added by the Senate committee will be completely nullified.

When you come to the sections dealing directly with the subsidy provisions of the bill the situation is even worse. Section 403, subsection (a) of the bill, provides that the board is authorized and directed to enter into a contract for the subsidy with any person, a citizen of the United States, who is the owner of a vessel. Then follows the provision: "The board shall not be required to enter into such contract unless in the judgment of the board such person possesses such ability, experience, resources," and so forth, as the board may approve. The whole matter is left to the absolute uncontrolled discretion of the board. You might just as well hand over the millions involved in this subsidy scheme to the Shipping Board and say, "Put it where you think it will do the most good," as to enact into law the provisions of this bill. The board would have just as much control over the money in one case as it would in the other.

Subsection (b) of section 409 contains what looks like a very reasonable provision. It provides in effect that the compensation or subsidy after three years shall not be paid to any vessel owner unless at all times during the period covered by such payment a certain percentage of the total gross tonnage of the vessel is registered under the laws of the United States. Turn, however, to subsection (d) of the same section, and it reads:

The board may suspend from time to time the provisions of subdivision (b) in respect to a power-driven vessel—

And so forth.

In other words, the provisions which are so elaborately set out in subdivision (b) are by subdivision (d) made subject to suspension by the board according to its pleasure.

Subsection (a) of section 410 provides that whenever the board thinks that the regular rate of compensation or subsidy provided in the bill is not sufficient, the board in making the contract with a particular shipper may increase the rate of compensation to "double" that provided for in the bill. In other words, the board is authorized to contract with favored shipowners or lines for double the ordinary rate of subsidy provided for in the bill.

Subsection (c) of the same section provides:

After the making of the contract of compensation the board may, with the consent of the other party thereto, decrease or, within the limit provided by subdivision (a), increase the rate of compensation to be paid.

In other words, the owner of the ship may with his consent have his compensation reduced, but if he prefers to have it increased, then the board may increase it above the amount provided in the contract. To this section of the bill as it passed the House the Senate committee added the following amendment:

Provided, That no expenditures shall be made from the merchant-marine fund because of any increased compensation granted under the terms of paragraph (c) of section 410 except out of the appropriations made annually therefrom by Congress.

As the bill passed the House, section 402 had added to it subsection (d), as follows:

No expenditures shall be made from the merchant-marine fund except out of the appropriations made annually therefrom by Congress for carrying out the purposes of this act.

The result is that the provision in the bill as it came from the House, which was really notice that Congress would exercise some sort of control over the matter, is stricken out and a perfectly useless provision is added.

I deliberately assert that this amendment, added in the Senate committee in lieu of the so-called Madden amendment, amounts to nothing so far as affording any protection to the Treasury of the United States. Suppose that a contract is made with a favored shipper and afterwards the Shipping Board and the shipper agree that the rate of subsidy provided in the contract is not high enough and they fear that the proposed increase of subsidy is so obviously undeserved that Congress will not make an appropriation for it. That is the only conceivable situation in which this amendment would apply at all. In the situation supposed, what would be done? Both parties being in favor of the high rate of subsidy, they would simply agree to cancel the existing contract and make a new contract, naming in the new contract the rate of subsidy desired. That procedure is perfectly permissible under the amendment which was added to this bill in the Senate committee. Moreover, by making the rate of subsidy sufficiently high in the contract in the first instance, there would never be any reason or excuse for increasing it.

Section 411 of the bill provides that the contract for subsidy may require the vessel to be operated in a particular service, but subsection (b) thereof gives the shipowner the right to terminate the contract upon six months' notice, so that the first part of the provision is of no avail.

Section 413 provides that the repairs or renewals shall be made in ports of the United States. But the only penalty for disobedience of this provision is that the board may deduct what it pleases from the subsidy otherwise payable to the offending ship or line. This is simply an additional club which the board may hold over the head of the vessel owner. The board may withhold the subsidy for any reason or for no reason, but the unfortunate shipowner is powerless.

Of course, these provisions about the United States taking over the ships and paying compensation for them in case of war or other emergency adds nothing to the rights which the Government already possesses.

Another remarkable provision in this bill is that which provides that an owner of vessels registered under the laws of the United States and of other States may, nevertheless, receive compensation under the terms of this bill. It has been iterated and reiterated that the great purpose of this bill is to build up a 100 per cent American merchant marine; that in times of peace it shall enter into the sharpest kind of competition with the vessels of every other country in order to obtain business, and that in times of war it shall be an asset to the Government for national defense. This means and must mean that there can be no divided allegiance on the part of the person or the corporation receiving a subsidy in order to build up a great American merchant marine.

But what this bill does is to permit a person or corporation to be nine-tenths or ninety-nine one-hundredths foreign, so far as the ownership of vessels is concerned, and still draw the subsidy upon its American registered vessels under the terms of this bill. It is not until after three years have elapsed that any limitation is put upon it, and then that limitation is such as to still permit the subsidy to be drawn by the vessel owner, provided 50 per cent of the gross tonnage of his vessel, plus the total gross tonnage of vessels owned by persons with whom he is affiliated, are registered under the laws of the United States.

To-day we have one company, at least, which well illustrates the situation provided for in the bill, and it is doubtless for that company, and perhaps others similarly situated, that the provisions of the bill were framed to which I now call attention.

It would have been easy enough to have required in this bill that no person or corporation should receive the subsidy it provides for if such person or corporation was the owner of and engaged in operating ships of any foreign country. That is what the bill ought to have provided; and what it would have provided if its framers had considered the interests of an American merchant marine instead of the interests of certain favorite shippers who have always been more British than American.

Section 406 provides that compensation shall be paid in respect to any vessel only for mileage covered while the vessel (1) is privately owned and (2) is registered or enrolled and licensed under the laws of the United States.

Section 409(a) provides that compensation shall be paid in respect to any vessel only while the vessel is owned by any person who is a citizen of the United States. These sections seem to mean, upon their face, that no owner shall receive compensation unless he is an American citizen and his ships are registered under the flag of the United States. A little more critical examination shows, however, that the sections mean nothing of the kind. If a particular vessel is American owned and if it is registered under the laws of the United States it is entitled to compensation even though the owner may own four times as much tonnage registered under the British flag, and, consequently, his interests in a merchant marine would be four or five times as much British as American.

Then comes subsection (b) of section 409, which provides that if after three years—you see no question is raised about it until after three years—the compensation will be continued to the owner if during that three-year period 50 per cent of his tonnage, plus the tonnage of affiliated concerns, is registered under the laws of the United States. The Senate very generously reduced this percentage of tonnage from 75 to 50 per cent, going even farther than the House bill, and even further apparently than Mr. Lasker cared to go in allowing foreign influence to get a controlling grip upon our merchant marine.

Whether these sections were put into this law simply to fit the International Mercantile Marine Co. or not, or whether there are other companies to which they are equally applicable, I do not know. But I do know it fits the International Mercantile Marine Co. exactly, and it allows that company, although nine-tenths British, to profit on its American-owned ships under this bill precisley as though it were wholly an American company.

The International Mercantile Marine Co. owns a few American ships, but it owns, according to its last report, or the last one available to me, about 100 British ships, nearly ten times its holdings in American ships. And these British ships, which traverse every route of maritime commerce open to American ships and enjoy the most profitable of the carrying trade of the United States, are just as completely British ships and subordinated to British interest as any ships which fly the British flag.

In my remarks in the Senate printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 1, 1921, I dealt with this subject very fully, and demonstrated how completely British interests dominated the International Mercantile Marine; and yet, sir, so cleverly is this bill framed that this thinly disguised British concern is to receive compensation under the terms of this bill. I read at that time the provisions of the contracts, which showed how completely the ships of this concern are tied up to the British Government, and the substance of those contracts will be found in the RECORD containing my speech on that subject on August 1 and 2, 1921.

In order to refresh the recollection of Senators, I quote the principal provisions of those contracts.

The contract of 1903 between the British Government, the International Mercantile Marine Co., and the subsidiary British companies provides in its first paragraph that these ships shall be on an equality with all other British ships "in respect of any services—naval, military, or postal—which His Majesty's Government may desire to have rendered by the British merchant marine."

The second paragraph provides, respecting these companies, that "a majority at least of their directors shall be British subjects."

The third paragraph forbids the selling of any of these ships to other than British subjects without the consent of the British Board of Trade.

The fourth paragraph provides that the officers shall be British subjects, and such proportion of the crew as the British Government shall prescribe.

The fifth paragraph provides that these ships must be sold or let to the British Admiralty upon the Admiralty's demand.

The sixth paragraph provides for the building of ships for British companies.

The seventh paragraph deals with the manner in which other British subjects or corporations may become associated in the business.

The eighth and ninth paragraphs provide for the contingency of some one other than a British subject or corporation becoming connected with the enterprise and subjects them to the terms of the agreement.

The tenth paragraph provides that the contract shall run for 20 years from September 27, 1902, and shall continue in force thereafter subject to a notice of five years on either side—

Provided, That His Majesty's Government shall have the right to terminate this agreement at any time if the association pursue a policy injurious to the interest of the British mercantile marine or of British trade.

The eleventh paragraph provides that the agreement shall take effect as a contract made in England and in accordance with the laws of England.

The twelfth paragraph provides that in case of any difference as to the interpretation of the contract or any dispute arising out of it "the same shall be referred to the lord high chancellor of Great Britain for the time being, whose decision, whether on law or fact, shall be final."

I come now to the second agreement which controls the International Mercantile Marine Co. I have just given the Senate the first agreement, which was made in 1903; the second was made on October 1, 1910. The agreement of October 1, 1910, between the same parties increased the facility with which the Admiralty might obtain control of any of the ships of the subsidiary British companies, and provided that any such ships "which may be considered by the Admiralty suitable for the employment as armed cruisers or commissioned auxiliaries shall be sold or let on hire to the Admiralty" as therein provided. Great Britain evidently saw something in 1910 from afar off.

A further agreement of September 2, 1919, is even more significant than the other two.

Paragraph 1 thereof provided, respecting these subsidiary companies, that—

No person shall henceforth be a director, managing director, managing agent, manager, or person to carry on or manage the business of any such companies unless his appointment shall be acceptable to the board of trade.

That means, of course, to the British Government.

Paragraph 2 places the entire management of the subsidiary companies under its British board of directors, and even assumes to extend the power and authority of such directors beyond that provided in their articles or by-laws.

Paragraph 4 provides that these subsidiary companies shall not be regarded "as a foreign-controlled company" as to the building, purchasing, and operating of vessels and the acquisition of shares in other British steamship companies.

The succeeding paragraph provides that these subsidiary companies shall be on the same footing as all other British steamship companies, which are free from foreign control as to any facilities or advantages for the development of the business, but if the British companies shall give notice for the termination of the principal agreement these advantages shall cease.

These are the ships—nearly a hundred of them—which must be run entirely in the interest of British commerce and as the British Government directs, from which the International Mercantile Marine Co. derives the bulk of its revenue and upon the continued operation of which it must depend if it is to succeed. The International Mercantile Marine Co. is bound to serve British interest; first, by the natural desire to make a profit out of its business; and, secondly, by its contracts which place it absolutely under the control of the British Government. Yet this bill was purposely so framed as to allow that company to share in the subsidy for which it provides.

In concluding what I have to say at this time, I desire to call special attention to section 272 of the bill, which assumes to confer upon the Shipping Board powers entirely foreign to any legitimate function of the board. Subsection (a) of that section provides, in effect, that the Shipping Board shall determine and allocate to the proper years the allowance to the shipowner for exhaustion, wear and tear, and obsolescence, which is provided for in the revenue act and which has been determined as provided for in that act. Whether this provision of subsection (a) of section 272 of the bill is intended to be retroactive and give the Shipping Board power to reopen what has been settled and determined by the Treasury Department is problematical. But there is no doubt that subsection (b) of section 272 confers upon the Shipping Board the power to make a deduction from the value of the vessel for income-tax purposes, going back to the year 1914. Subsection (b) provides:

In the case of a vessel of 1,000 gross tons or more (as shown by her certificate of admeasurement) registered, enrolled, or licensed, under the laws of the United States, acquired after August 1, 1914, and prior to January 1, 1921, there shall be allowed for the taxable year 1922 and each of the four succeeding taxable years a reasonable deduction for the exceptional decrease in value thereof since the date of acquisition, but not again including any amount otherwise allowed under this act or any previous act of Congress as a deduction in computing net income.

It is further provided that this deduction to be determined by the Shipping Board shall be allocated to the taxable year 1922 and the four succeeding years. This section means nothing more than this: A vessel may have been purchased or built during the war at war prices, operated sufficiently to pay many times her cost, but at the present time there is an "exceptional decrease in value." The Shipping Board is now going to open up this whole question, going back to 1914, and although the vessel may have received the allowance provided by law for exhaustion, wear and tear, and obsolescence, this new element of "exceptional decrease" is to be allowed by the Shipping Board, written into the revenue law, and the deduction made from the taxes of the vessel owner going back to August 1, 1914. When the exceptional circumstances are considered under which vessels were acquired and operated during the war period and their great decrease in value since that time, the tax which the shipowners will recover will run into tremendous amounts. This one section of the bill in the benefits conferred upon shipowners may well exceed in value all other provisions in the bill.

I do not believe that a worse bill than this ever came before the Senate of the United States for consideration. It represents a policy that has been repeatedly rejected by the people of this country. The public opinion of the country is overwhelmingly opposed to it to-day. It simply means turning over the people's property to favored interests for a few cents on the dollar and a tax of millions of dollars levied annually in order to pay as a subsidy to those who take the ships practically as a gift. It means millions of dollars of tax refunds to the shipping interests. It does not even promise, much less guarantee, cheaper rates for ocean commerce. It proposes to destroy our Army and Navy transports and turn this great agency of potential defense over to private shipowners. It does not guarantee the building of a single new ship or the maintenance of those we have. It is wholly bad, and the attempt to force it upon an unwilling country can not be too strongly condemned.

APPENDIX.

Resolution adopted November 24, 1922, by the National Grange in national session at Wichita, Kans.

Resolved, That the National Grange, in the fifty-sixth annual session, assembled at Wichita, Kans., November 24, 1922, and representing nearly 1,000,000 organized farmers of America, hereby declare its unalterable opposition to all ship subsidy legislation and to every form of direct subsidies to private enterprises; and

It hereby pledges the full strength of the organization toward the defeat of whatever form of ship subsidy legislation has been or hereafter may be introduced in Congress.

If upon investigation it is found that the American merchant marine is handicapped in its operation by present conditions and laws, then the grange favors a revision of the navigation laws rather than Government aid through a ship subsidy.

C. M. FREEMAN, Secretary.

Resolution of the National Farmers' Union passed at annual convention.

LYNCHBURG, VA., November 21, 1922.

We hold that public subsidies for private business enterprises are inconsistent with legitimate governmental functions, and therefore we are opposed to ship subsidies or to any other Federal appropriations designed to support failing private enterprise at the expense of the taxpayers.

Resolution of American Federation of Labor.

Whereas Congress through its committees is now conducting hearings on S. 3217, a bill to amend and supplement the merchant marine act of 1920, and for other purposes; which is, in fact, a bill to subsidize the shipowners of America; and

Whereas this bill in every feature thereof is predicated upon the unfounded claim that such subsidy is needed to equalize the wage cost, which it is claimed runs strongly against the American vessels; and

Whereas there is no material difference in either wage cost or subsistence cost running against American vessels, and any real enforcement of the seamen's act will prevent any differential against vessels under the American flag in the future: Therefore be it

Resolved, That, acting for and on behalf of the trade-unions of America, we reiterate that we are generally opposed to subsidies of any kind, and specifically opposed to subsidies being granted to shipowners, because, first, there is no proof that subsidies ever built up or materially aided in building any merchant marine; second, because it is provocative of inefficiency and graft and general parasitism.

Resolved further, That we are opposed to this particular bill for reasons some of which we enumerate as follows:

First. Because it presumes to sell the vessels now owned by the Government, when in fact the so-called sale is nothing but a smoke screen to hide the fact that the shipowners are to receive the vessels for nothing and then some $300,000,000 over and above the purchase price for operating the vessels for 10 years, after which time the ship operators may turn the vessels back to the Government.

Second. Because this bill confers upon the Shipping Board powers such as have never, so far as we can ascertain, been given to any commission or board in any country. Under this bill it can give the subsidy or withhold it; it can reduce the subsidy or double it; it can sell the vessels at any price to one person or refuse to sell to another person at a higher bid because it is of the opinion that the bidder's character is such that he may not use the vessel to promote the interests of the United States. It can lend money to one person at 2 per cent interest and refuse it to another when both are to use it for the same purpose.

Third. Because the shipowners who are advocating the bill and will be the recipients of the bounty refuse to give any real information about their business during the last 10 years; in fact, any information which might show whether any subsidy is really needed, even from the point of view of those favoring subsidies as a principle, unless ordered to do so by the joint committee conducting the hearings.

Fourth. Because the shipowners are so organized that there is not, nor will there be, any competition between them in the buying of the ships.

Fifth. Because the shipowners have dominated the policy of the Shipping Board during nearly all of its history. They are dominating it now, and there is no reason to believe that they will not continue to control it in the future.

Sixth. Congress has, during our history, except in two or three instances, given the shipowners anything they asked; and it is, therefore, the shipowners and shipbuilders who are at least indirectly responsible for the decay of our sea power, and there is no good reason to believe that the shipowners and their policy will improve after getting the subsidies.

Finally, we believe that this is no time to sell the vessels, but that, having tried to operate the vessels under agreement with the shipowners and having failed, we may now try to operate them directly in the manner that Mr. Rossbottom is now operating his "spiked team," without any serious loss to the Government. We believe that the losses would be much less, if any, and that the shipowners would then buy the vessels which they have so far refused to buy.

Resolutions of International Seamen's Union of America.

CHICAGO, ILL., January, 1922.

Whereas the agitation for some kind of a ship subsidy is continued; and

Whereas the bases claimed for such subsidy seem to be (a) the greater cost of shipbuilding and (b) the greater cost of operation on account of greater wage cost; and

Whereas the cost of shipbuilding, because of the monopoly of shipbuilders, is true as to ships to be built, but has no application now, because the Shipping Board may sell vessels at any price; and

Whereas the difference in wage cost in so far as it may now exist arises from failure to enforce the seamen's act: Therefore be it

Resolved by the International Seamen's Union of America, That we are opposed to any ship subsidy and protest against it on the ground of its proven ineffectiveness in promoting a merchant marine and in building sea power: And be it further

Resolved, That we favor any just mail subsidy on the ground that such is not a subsidy but payment for work performed.

Resolutions of Washington State Federation of Labor.

SEATTLE, WASH., March 22, 1922.

Whereas there is now before Congress a bill known as H. R. 10644 and S. 3217 which provides for a subsidy, a naval reserve, and an amendment to the immigration law as now applied to seamen; and

Whereas it is a well-known fact that where subsidies have been in operation they have proven failures, and in many cases abandoned, as in France, where the vessels sailed all around the globe in ballast, and the people were mulcted so the shipowners could draw dividends; and

Whereas the American shipowners in 1921 made from 10 to 20 per cent dividends, and their cry that they must have financial assistance from the Government has no bearing on facts; and

Whereas the bill provides that no seaman coming into the United States on a foreign vessel can enter unless he has a consular certificate, which seamen can not procure, and if he should leave the vessel the owner will have to pay for him the sum of $200, which means that he will be unable to leave, because the owner will see to it that he remains on board; this will not work the same way with the Chinese, because it is a well-known fact that a Chinese landed in the United States is worth from $750 to $1,000, and it does not take much imagination to see that this proposed law would legalize importation of Chinese into the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Washington State Federation of Labor, That we are opposed to said bill and urge upon all our Senators and Congressmen to vote against it.

Respectfully submitted.

W. M. SHORT,
President Washington State Federation of Labor.

Resolutions of Waterfront Workers' Federation.

Whereas the President of the United States, in a recent message to Congress, recommends the enactment of legislation providing for the payment of a subsidy to certain shipping companies: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Waterfront Workers' Federation, in meeting assembled this 13th day of March, 1922, That we are opposed to the proposed subsidy legislation on the grounds—

1. Instead of promoting the rehabilitation of the American merchant marine such legislation is more likely to have the opposite effect, inasmuch as the subsidized vessels would be put into competition with nonsubsidized craft and thus destroy the business of the latter; and

2. We are opposed to the expenditure of public funds to promote private enterprise; and

3. We feel that the Nation owes a prior duty to its ex-service men, and until that obligation is discharged the question of aiding private enterprises should be held in abeyance; further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States and to the Members of Congress from California.

M. T. DOYLE, President.
E. F. KRAUT, Secretary-Treasurer.

[From American Federation of Labor information and publicity service, Washington, D. C., December 8, 1922.]

Protests against the enactment of the ship subsidy bill now pending before the United States Senate have been reaching the American Federation of Labor from labor organizations throughout the country. These protests have been received from officials of international unions whose membership reaches from coast to coast, and also from State federations of labor and from local bodies of labor throughout the country. The protests indicate a thorough understanding of the measure and a genuine apprehension on every hand of evil results in the event of its enactment into law.

Because of the widespread interest in the ship subsidy issue a number of these protests were made public to-day at the office of President Samuel Gompers. They are attached hereto.

A COST-PLUS PLAN.

(By G. W. Perkins, president Cigarmakers' International Union.)

If we subsidize the so-called ship marine for the purpose as stated of enabling our ships to compete with the ships of foreign nations, the foreign nations would immediately subsidize their shipowners, reduce wages, or otherwise cheapen the cost of shipping by water. We, in that event, being bound by a 20-year contract on the cost-plus plan, would have to increase our subsidy to the American ships. Such a system leads nowhere except to piling up taxes on the innocent, burden-bearing masses. Some are bold enough to say that the question of subsidizing our ships originated in foreign countries. The idea is that if America subsidizes its ships it would give these foreign shipowners an excuse to go to their own Government and demand an equal subsidy for their ships. The whole system of subsidizing or anything else is economically and financially unsound and perniciously vicious and should under no circumstances be tolerated.

SUBSIDY AND SOCIALISM.

(By John A. Voll, president Glass Bottle Blowers' Association of the United States and Canada.)

The cry has been that Government ownership of railroads and merchant marine is socialistic. What, may we ask, is a subsidy to private industry? If private industry in the shape of public utilities can not stand upon its own bottom and will function only through a subsidy, then those public utilities should be owned and operated by the Government, for if there is a deficit in the operation that must be met by taxation, the expenditure of the money thus derived should always be in the hands of the people's representatives upon whom they at all times have a check through the ballot and which eliminates 20-year contracts that deprive the people from taking any advantage of changes that may occur favorable to their interests in the method of transportation or prevent abolishing entirely, if in their minds, this burden of taxation for making up a deficit in transportation on water or land does not meet with their views or expectations.

PREMIUM UPON INEFFICIENCY.

(By E. William Weeks, secretary-treasurer Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America.)

The Shipping Board experts in a report state that subsidy in building up a merchant marine for foreign countries has been unimportant. It has only been through the superior skill and technical ability that other nations have maintained the lead, and no gift or reward from our Government to our shipowners will take the place of the necessary mental qualifications held by others who have prospered without a subsidy. In this particular case it is not a matter of fostering or protecting an infant industry. It is a matter of meeting efficiency with efficiency.

The second opposition is based on the fact that the people of this country do not want a ship subsidy. Both in the primaries and in the fall election adherents of the scheme have been replaced by those in opposition to the measure. The very anxiety shown in forcing through the bill, before the political death of those who favored it, is evidence that something is contemplated at variance with the wishes of the people.

CLASS LEGISLATION.

(By Daniel J. Tobin, general president International Brotherhood of Teamsters and Chauffeurs.)

In every instance I have found that all classes as a unit are opposed to the passage of this measure. In many instances business men, as well as the workers, call it a "steal" from the American people in behalf of certain shipping interests. They say, "If the Government has the right to subsidize the shipping interests, why not subsidize the farming interests which are suffering as a result of the many perplexing conditions that surround agriculture?" They say, "Why not subsidize the packing houses or the packing industry so that the price of meat may be reduced?" In short, the masses of people say that no special interest in this, or any other country, during times of peace, should be subsidized by the Government, taking it from one class and turning it over to another class.

UNFAIR TO FARMERS.

(By H. M. Thackrey, secretary-treasurer Arkansas State Federation of Labor.)

I realize the fact that the legislative committee of the American Federation of Labor and the joint legislative conference are using their best efforts to defeat the ship subsidy bill that has been brought forward by the President as the reason for calling a special session of Congress.

I heartily commend you for your untiring efforts and urge your continued efforts in the defeat of this measure.

It will place an excessive burden upon an already overtaxed people for the benefit of existing shipping companies or companies to be organized.

This bill provides for a loan to shipowners of a revolving fund of $125,000,000 at 2 per cent interest and for a period of 15 years at a time and up to two-thirds the cost of the ships upon which the loan is to be made. Whereas under the Federal farm loan system farmers are compelled to pay 6 per cent interest and are not allowed to borrow more than 50 per cent of the market value of their farms.

This bill does not require the Shipping Board to make any report or accounting to the President or anyone else. It confers upon the Shipping Board the most autocratic and unprecedented powers ever conferred upon any board.

The labor provisions of the seamen's act would be partially destroyed, and there is no doubt that eventually the shipping business would gradually come into the hands of powerful shipping combinations.

AN ENDLESS DRAIN.

(By J. P. Noonan, president International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.)

We are entirely in accord with the American Federation of Labor on the ship subsidy bill because we are fully convinced that the public has been systematically robbed and burdened with taxes; first, by paying the railroads unearned money; second, on a more gigantic scale by the passage of the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill and because our experience with such legislation leads us to the belief that a ship subsidy, however innocent appearing at the time of its birth, will develop into a feeding trough for certain financial interests whose appetite will prove insatiable and while the first year of its operation may cost what our financially erudite administration may term a nominal sum of $50,000,000 a year difficulties and exigencies will continuously develop that will cause expenditures far more than $50,000,000 a year. An indebtedness of this nature under a contract such as proposed would, in my opinion, be progressive, and if the tenth year would see the country escaping an indebtedness for that year of $200,000,000 it would, in my opinion, not only surprise those who desired it but would also surprise the oldest and most capable of our politicians.

MINNESOTA PROTESTS.

(By E. G. Hall, president of the Minnesota State Federation of Labor.)

I am writing you briefly that the labor forces of Minnesota object to the ship subsidy bill that is coming up before the United States Senate in the very near future. The men and women of labor of Minnesota desire to register their protest against the passage of this bill.

We believe that the Shipping Trust, the Railroad Trust, Steel Trust, the Standard Oil Trust, United Fruit Trust, the Sugar Trust, etc., have got more now from our Government and its people than they are justly entitled to. We do not believe in a government paying a premium to any business or the administration at Washington now to give over its millions of investments and then to guarantee a payment in addition for their operations.

UNITED STATES AGAINST SUBSIDY.

(By J. L. Coulter, secretary International Association of Oil Field, Gas Well, and Refinery Workers of America.)

President Harding and his colleagues plainly see from the reflection in the mirror of our last general election that the people of the United States do not want such a law enacted. Therefore the reason for calling a special session of Congress to arbitrarily force this bill through, if possible, before the Wall Street puppets must relinquish their seats to their progressive successors. The people of the United States do not want individual, group, or class legislation, and every effort should be put forth to prevent such being arbitrarily forced upon them.

The American people to an extent are losing confidence in constitutional government as maneuvered as it has been by big business, and such legislation as proposed by our President in the ship subsidy bill only adds fuel to the revolutionary propaganda that is already falling on attentive ears.

FLAG-WAVING BUNK.

(By Roscoe H. Johnson, international president Commercial Telegraphers' Union of America.)

Flag waving in connection with establishment of a vast subsidized American merchant marine is the bunk, and our hypocritical incumbent of the White House knows it.

Slip a good fat subsidy into the coffers of the shipping interests—American so called—and the people are promised that nice pretty American flags will make their appearance at the mastheads of every emergency-built piece of junk now resting peacefully at anchor in our seaports.

And how long will these subsidized flags remain there? Just so long as the Shipping Trust is successful in milking Americans of further "Government aid."

INVITATION TO GRAFT.

(By E. H. Fitzgerald, president Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employees.)

I am unqualifiedly, whole-heartedly, and bitterly opposed to this legislation.

First, it will adversely affect American seamen. I note that twice within a year the pay of American seamen has been decreased until now the official Shipping Board rate is $55 for seamen and $57.50 for firemen, per month. Why should the American people subsidize an industry which treats its employees in this fashion? Why should such industries be given further authority by the United States Government to mistreat American seamen?

Secondly, the great American public, most of which consists of us common people, must foot the bill, which will be more than $50,000,000 annually to be handed to shipowners if this nefarious legislation is adopted. In return, the public gets no guaranty of improved shipping conditions, no assurance of lower freight rates, and no assurance of better service.

The bill further provides that merchant ships which have cost the taxpayers of this country $3,500,000,000 are not only to be given away at panic prices but the big shipowners are actually to be paid for taking them. The bill does not provide that they shall be sold under competitive bids. Therefore, in that respect it is un-American and is in fact an invitation to graft and thievery.

PRIVATE ENTERPRISE AT PUBLIC EXPENSE.

(By M. S. Warfield, president Order of Sleeping Car Conductors.)

The transfer of ships and shipping from Government to private interests will not remove the burden from the taxpayers. The drain on the Treasury will continue. The public will be compelled to establish and maintain a profitable business for a few individuals by financial guaranties. Shipping will thus become private enterprse at public expense, and for this reason the bill should not pass. The problem of handling the United States merchant marine should be solved in the interests of all the people.

(By A. F. Eagles, president, and H. B. Brawn, secretary, Maine State Federation of Labor.)

The Maine State branch of the American Federation of Labor is absolutely opposed to the ship subsidy bill, for the following reasons:

First. Nobody knows what this class of legislation will cost the people of this country; no limitations are specified as to what the actual cost will amount to.

Second. We are opposed to the enactment of any law that would not allow of the repealing of that law if it shows defects, and as the law would allow of 20 years to elapse before it could be repealed or amended we object to this class of legislation.

Third. The ship subsidy bill deals with special interests and opens up the way for unlimited grabs upon the Public Treasury.

Fourth. It denies to those who follow the sea for a livelihood that protection which should be given toward the upholding of good American standards of living, and would in the end place the American seaman on a level with the Chinese coolie labor.

Fifth. We believe that general principles should defeat and not enact legislation as contemplated in the ship subsidy bill.

REPEAL IMPOSSIBLE.

[By J. J. Handley, secretary Wisconsin State Federation of Labor.]

The ship subsidy "steal," known as a bill now before Congress, is a most brazen attempt to fleece the American people. It means selling the Government-owned ships to a monopoly at 10 cents on the dollar, and then pay a subsidy of $75,000,000 a year to operate them. Their attempt to hoodwink the people of the Northwest by attaching an amendment purporting to favor the deep water-power interest, purporting to favor the deep-waterway plan from the Great Lakes to the Gulf, should not be tolerated. Labor would not feel so keen about this legislation were it possible to repeal the law after this session, when the people would have realized what had happened, but because of the contracts it carries its repeal will be impossible for many years.

Organized labor of Wisconsin is opposed to the ship subsidy and warns against any scheme in putting it across, be it the deep waterway or anything else, because it practically gives to a private shipping monopoly our Government ships and then requires our Government (the people) to pay an enormous sum to this private ship monopoly for operating them.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Fernald	Ladd	Robinson	Watson
Fletcher	Lenroot	Sheppard
George	Lodge	Shortridge
Gerry	McKellar	Smith

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I want to take just a few moments on the subject referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] in connection with the efforts on the part of some members of the committee when this bill was under consideration by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House and the Commerce Committee of the Senate, sitting together to get certain information. The hearings beginning at page 1517 and on through to page 1521, inclusive, cover that subject, and they show that the effort was made on the part of Mr. DAVIS, Mr. HARDY, and myself while Mr. Love was on the stand to secure those statements showing the operation of each line and the result as to each ship, the idea being that we could thereby establish the weakness, wherever it existed, and determine what ships were losing and what ships were not losing, which would be very helpful to the committee, much more so than a general statement merely showing the aggregate of revenues received, voyage expenses, repairs, insurance, lay-up, administrative expenses, and all that sort of thing included in the general summary which the Shipping Board furnished. We wanted a statement as to each ship, and especially as to each operating agent, so that there would be details before the committee which would enable us to determine what routes were paying and what routes were not; what ships were profitable and what were not; where the losses were occurring, if any, and also separating the other items in the general summary so as to be able to have clear before us a view of the situation in connection with the operation of the ships.

That inquiry began while Mr. Love was on the stand, as I have said, and this occurred:

Mr. DAVIS. I want to know if you are willing to break that up and give the same profits or losses as to individual lines.

Referring to the combined summary:

Mr. LOVE. I would be very glad to confer with the chairman on that, but I do not believe this committee will be in session by the time we get it ready for you.

Mr. DAVIS. Have you an account with each company?

Mr. LOVE. Yes; but there are uncompleted voyages.

Mr. DAVIS. We will say, then, up to the period when the accounts are complete; in other words, Chairman Lasker furnished the voyage loss for February.

Mr. LOVE. Month by month?

Mr. DAVIS. For February and March. He had everything in before he could furnish that, did he not?

Mr. LOVE. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. He had it in as to each individual line, then, did he not?

Mr. LOVE. That refers to the voyages closed within that month.

Mr. HARDY. I would like to know this, Mr. Love, in a general way—what kind of facts it is that you think can not be given out?

Mr. LOVE. I will read the headings.

Then followed further discussion, when Mr. HARDY inquired:

And now I have asked what it is he can not furnish the committee?

Mr. GREEN. He stated he could not furnish it to you, and still you are insisting on trying to get it.

On page 1519 this occurred:

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Love, I am sure, undertook to speak accurately for Mr. Lasker in the matter.

Mr. HARDY. I do not think that the aggregate or data inserted in the record as to the aggregate should go in as a statement of fact unless we are allowed to put in the same thing as to the particular companies. I think we should have the figures as to those particular companies that make up that aggregate.

Then this followed:

Mr. HARDY. Do you think it would be more important to the foreign competitor to have the details of that statement than to have the aggregate?

Then followed further discussion of the subject, the point being made that it would be information to competitors. Finally Mr. HARDY said:

Mr. HARDY. Unless the Shipping Board furnishes the details we do not know what we get.

Mr. GREENE. He states he will furnish it for the consideration of the committee.

Mr. HARDY. Under the ban, Mr. Chairman, that the committee will not make it public, and we will still be in the same shape.

* * * * * * *

Senator FLETCHER. Right on that point, I think we are entitled to know, the committee and the country, precisely what routes are established and are in operation and what service is being rendered.

Mr. LOVE. Senator, that is all here.

* * * * * * *

Mr. HARDY. And don't you think a separate analysis of this ought to be given to us, too?

Mr. DAVIS. This data just submitted here does not give anything at all about the losses or profits. It simply gives the names of allocated ships and the lines operating them, etc.

Mr. LISSNER. Well, we give you the aggregate figures on the losses and profits.

Mr. DAVIS. Oh, yes; I know.

Mr. LOVE. If you will allow me to read the headings of this statement it will answer Senator FLETCHER'S question.

* * * * * * *

Senator FLETCHER. Now, I understand the financial statement, in each instance, is to be taken up with the chairman of the Shipping Board, and we will hear from you further?

Mr. DAVIS. Do we understand, Mr. Love, that the question of submitting this financial information, profits and losses per line, is to be taken up with the Shipping Board and an answer given to the committee about that?

Mr. LISSNER. I just stated that would be done, Mr. DAVIS.

Mr. DAVIS. Senator FLETCHER asked that question and not one of you answered it.

Mr. LISSNER. What was that?

Mr. DAVIS. The question as to whether it was understood that that would be done, and I just repeated it so that some of you would catch it and respond.

Mr. LISSNER. Yes, sir; that will be taken up and an answer given.

Up to this time we have never had any answer. I have never had information to the effect that it could or could not be furnished in detail. The only definite thing about it is an intimation by Mr. Love that it would probably take until Congress adjourns before the statements could be prepared; at any rate, the information was that those statements might be furnished to the committee if Chairman Lasker permitted it, and the committee was to be advised whether they would or would not be furnished, and that was the end of that matter.

I wish to refer further to the document attached as Appendix A of the hearings, "Report on the history of shipping discriminations and on various forms of Government aid to shipping," prepared at the instance of the Shipping Board, and to a statement there which I think I omitted to mention yesterday. In the conclusions of that report to the Shipping Board by an expert on the subject, after a thorough investigation, he said:

A study of the authorities on subsidies, taking into account the policies adopted by the various countries, would seem to indicate that, with the exception of Japan, the policy has not been important in the building up of a merchant marine.

Mr. POMERENE. Who is that speaking?

Mr. FLETCHER. This is a report sent out by the Shipping Board in the first instance, prepared at their request by an expert on the subject, and subsequently it was put into the RECORD at the instance of the minority of these committees, and I understand the Shipping Board did not care to circulate it further—either suppressed it or failed to circulate it.

Mr. POMERENE. Who was the expert?

Mr. FLETCHER. The name escapes me just at the moment, but he was a professor in one of the universities in New York, whether in Columbia or New York University I am not sure. I can give the name a little later.

I have heretofore referred quite extensively to that report, but that conclusion I wanted to get into the RECORD, as I think it bears very materially on the subject.

Just one other thing with reference to the statement by Mr. Chamberlain, Commissioner of Navigation, which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of November 28, 1922, referred to yesterday and the day before, and particularly mentioned by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] as tending to show that the minority were in error in their views as to the subsidies furnished by various countries. I call attention to another statement in that table furnished by Mr. Chamberlain, of the Department of Commerce.

I showed yesterday, I think, that the total cost of the construction of the fleet by Australia should not be included under the head of subsidies, as it is included in this statement. But there appears in the statement also a list of countries providing subsidies, subventions, and the like, and the payment made by Canada is given as $10,149,944. I have before me now the budget statement just issued, giving mail subsidies and steamship subventions for Canada, and it shows that the amount to be voted for those purposes is $1,100,755.66. There is a difference of nearly $9,000,000 between the public statement by the Government of Canada, made since these figures were furnished, and the figures as given by Mr. Chamberlain. I ask to have that inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CANADA.

Mail subsidies and steamship subventions.

Amount to be voted, $1,100,775.66.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have before me extracts from the Shipping World of November 29, 1922, referring to subsidies and subventions by Italy. It will be recalled that on yesterday I challenged with great confidence the correctness of the statement appearing here as to the subsidies paid by Italy. The concluding portion of the article is as follows:

Will Mussolini be strong enough to say to the shipbuilding interests of Italy: "You are employing your capital in modes that can not bring profit to you, and you are expecting the State to find the return that your industry can not possibly find. Close your yards, turn your machinery and plant to other purposes, as your own commercial judgment may direct, and cease to rely on the State"? Or will he relieve them of the tariff burdens and obligations to which they are subject and let them establish themselves on a basis of freedom? It needs a courageous man to take either of these steps. And Mussolini is reputed to be courageous.

This shows that whatever Italy may have done in the past in the matter of aid to her shipyards and shipping, the new administration contemplates a complete revision of the whole subject and undoubtedly intends to impose restrictions on subsidized shipping lines and shipyards and to limit appropriations very greatly in those regards.

I ask to have the article inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The article is as follows:

ITALIAN SHIPPING.

MUSSOLINI'S TASK.

The world is watching carefully to see the results of the new experiment in the Government of Italy. Signor Mussolini, the leader of the Fascisti, has been called to office and, what is more, is actually in power, relying as he does on the sympathy and support of his fellow countrymen. It is clearly a case of a strong man being called in, or calling himself in, to cut the Gordian knots that weak and inefficient governments have been unable to untie. And outside Italy people are anxiously asking, Will he succeed?

Many difficult problems face him—problems of foreign and domestic policy which have become intensely complicated. The industrial situation is worse perhaps than in the majority of European countries. Previous Governments have attempted palliatives which have only caused more confusion, and at best have only deferred the inevitable crisis. The position in the shipyards is a case in point. These yards hold big stocks of materials bought at high prices, and without serious loss they are unable to compete with foreign shipbuilders, especially British firms. They can obtain no orders except from the State and these are insufficient to keep them going. Besides, according to a law of 1911, they are obliged to purchase 75 per cent of their materials, tools, and plant from Italian firms. For these the prices are excessive because of the prohibitive customs duties, amounting to from 600 to 1,100 lire per ton on manufactured metals and 160 lire per quintal on motors. As a result they can not fit out their works in such an economical manner as to be able to compete with foreign yards and turn out ships at a price that permits of remunerative operation. Instead of relieving them of these burdens former governments have sought to aid them by subsidies. Ships on the stocks were to be continued, and the State would pay a certain part of the cost.

But this was not facing the situation. The ships were not required, either for Italian or for foreign trade. And there were too many yards engaged in their production. Their capacity of production exceeded by 100 per cent the possibility of absorption of their output. It was next proposed that the shipbuilding firms form a consortium, which should decide which yards should continue open and which should be closed down. The yards that were to continue in work would receive the State subsidy, and out of their total proceeds would pay compensation to the yards which had ceased to operate. This, however, was only removing the unpleasant task one degree further aloof, so that the Government might be relieved of the responsibility for performing it.

Will Mussolini be strong enough to say to the shipbuilding interests of Italy: "You are employing your capital in modes that can not bring profit to you, and you are expecting the State to find the returns that your industry can not possibly find. Close your yards, turn your machinery and plant to other purposes as your own commercial judgment may direct, and cease to rely on the State?" Or will he relieve them of the tariff burdens and obligations to which they are subject and let them establish themselves on a basis of freedom? It needs a courageous man to take either of these steps. And Mussolini is reputed to be courageous.—(From the Shipping World, November 29, 1922.)

Mr. FLETCHER. I also hold in my hand an extract from Review of the Foreign Press, in the Economic Review of December 1, 1922—note the date, December 1, 1922—containing a statement by the minister of the treasury on the Government's scheme of retrenchment and reform, which is supplemented by a communication issued from the premier's office announcing certain reform measures, among others—

Restriction of subsidized shipping lines to those which perform the services to the colonies and the islands, and reduction of the number and speed even of these during the present crisis; reduction or suppression of subsidies to lines competing with the railways and one another and plying to those ports and countries, communication with which is not absolutely essential.

This shows that the subventions and aids heretofore provided by Italy are being already revised and an entirely different policy is about to be adopted and different provisions to be made, all in conformity with the statement which Mr. Chamberlain himself made in the Commerce Reports as of December 4 when he said that there was now contemplated a possible abandonment of previous provisions as to subsidies in Italy. I ask to have the extract inserted in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ITALY MERCANTILE MARINE.

THE PREMIER'S COMMUNICATION.

The statement by the Minister of the Treasury on the Government's scheme of retrenchment and reform is supplemented by a communication issued from the Premier's office announcing the following measures of reform to be adopted in various departments.

* * * * * * *

Restriction of subsidized shipping lines to those which perform the services to the colonies and islands and reduction of the number and speed even of these during the present crisis; reduction or suppression of subsidies to lines competing with the railways and with one another and plying to those ports and countries communication with which is not absolutely essential. Transfer without exception of State-owned lines to private enterprise, for which purpose the necessary measures will be introduced into Parliament forthwith, probably before the end of the year. Suppression of a number of harbor boards and other independent organizations connected with ports, the chief functions of which appear to be continuous demands on the Government for grants and provision for their officials.—(From Review of the Foreign Press, The Economic Review, December 1, 1922.)

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if it is agreeable to the Senator in charge of the bill and he wants an executive session, I think the time has come to take such action.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think we desire an executive session to-day. If the Senator has concluded, I am willing to adjourn for the day. Before doing that, however, I would like to ask unanimous consent that when the Senate closes its business to-morrow it shall recess until 11 o'clock Monday morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know of any objection on this side of the Chamber to the proposal. It is entirely agreeable to me personally. I think perhaps it may be a little inconvenient for some Senators to be on hand promptly at 11 o'clock. That is a pretty early hour. I wonder if the Senator would not be willing to recess from to-morrow until 12 o'clock on Monday. I am willing to agree to a recess.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would like to have the Senate meet at 11 o'clock Monday morning. I will say that I expect to close the session to-morrow probably rather early, say about 4 o'clock.

Mr. FLETCHER. With that understanding, I shall not raise any objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection to the request of the Senator from Washington, it is so ordered.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think I should give Senators notice that I expect to press the bill a little more persistently next week than I have done this week. I think the Senate should begin to give more time to its consideration. There has been no unnecessary delay in connection with its consideration this week, but I feel that we have held it back more than we should do after this week.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that when the Senate convenes on Monday, I shall address the body on the pending bill as soon after it convenes as I can secure recognition from the Chair.

EXCESS EARNINGS OF RAILROADS.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, a few days ago I submitted the resolution (S. Res. 379) calling on the Interstate Commerce Commission for certain information as to excess earnings of railroads, and I asked that the resolution lie on the table. I now ask unanimous consent that the resolution be taken up and passed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let the resolution be read so that we may know what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution, S. Res. 379, submitted by Mr. CAPPER December 8, 1922, was read by the Assistant Secretary as follows:

Whereas by the section numbered 15a of the interstate commerce act, which was added by the Cummins-Esch Act, the Interstate Commerce Commission, after the termination of Federal control, was required to group the railroads of the country, and to adjust rates so that an aggregate fixed percentage return, specified in said section, should be earned upon the aggregate value of all such railroads; and

Whereas it was stated in said section 15a that the rate-making provisions therein contained would enable some carriers "to receive a net railway operating income substantially and unreasonably in excess of a fair return upon the value of their railway property"; and

Whereas with the purpose of recovering a part of such unreasonable excess, and of securing the use of the same for the benefit of the public in the promotion of interstate commerce, it was provided in said section that any road that should receive such excess income should hold one-half of the excess above 6 per cent upon the value of its railway property "as trustee for the United States," and that the amount so held in trust should "within the first four months following the close of the period for which such computation is made be recoverable by and paid to the commission for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a general railroad contingent fund"; and

Whereas it is now almost three years since the termination of Federal control, and it is reported that many railroads, under the rates which have been fixed through the application of the provisions of said section 15a, have earned in excess of 6 per cent upon the value of their railway property, but have failed to make report of the same to the Interstate Commerce Commission, or to pay over one-half of such excess to said commission, and in disregard of the trust created by said section, have devoted all of said excess to their own uses; and that 13 great railroad systems will increase their dividends this year; and

Whereas it is reported that none of the railroads have paid over to the commission any excess earnings under said section 15a, and that in fact all the railroads of the country which have received earnings in excess of 6 per cent have, with few exceptions, failed to pay over one-half thereof, or any part thereof, to the commission for the uses and purposes provided by said section: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be requested to report to the Senate the following information:

1. The "rules and regulations for the determination and recovery of the excess income," payable under section 15a, which have been prescribed by the commission.

2. The Class I railroads which have made reports to the commission as to their earnings in excess of 6 per cent; the value of its railway property claimed by each; the excess earnings admitted by each; the value of the railway property of each as found by the commission under section 15a, in each case where a tentative or a final valuation of the same has been made, and in each case where no such valuation has been made, the nearest approximation to the value which can be readily reported, according to the rules and regulations applicable for the determination thereof, prescribed by the commission; the excess earnings of each such railroad computed according to the value so found or determined; and the amount of excess earnings paid to the commission by each such carrier.

3. All other Class I railroads which, from any reports made by the same to the commission, annually, monthly, or otherwise, appear to have received in excess of 6 per cent upon the value of their railway property; the value of such property of each, found or approximately determined as aforesaid; and the excess earnings of each computed according to such value, or the nearest approximate estimate of the same which can be readily reported.

4. Each railroad other than a Class I railroad that has reported any excess earnings to the commission under section 15a; the value of the railway property of each, as claimed by it; the excess earnings admitted by it; the value of the railway property of each such railroad as found or determined by the commission as aforesaid; the excess earnings of each such railroad as computed on such value so found or determined by the commission; and the amount of excess earnings paid by each such railroad to the commission.

5. The aggregate of excess earnings which remain payable to the commission from all railroads, according to the provisions of said section 15a, as computed by the commission, or the nearest approximation or estimate thereof, which the commission can readily report; and the items which make up the aggregate, to the extent that the same have been separately computed or estimated.

6. Whether any railroad which has failed or refused to make any report as to excess earnings required by such rules or regulations as the commission may have prescribed, or to pay over one-half of such excess earnings in accordance with the provisions of said section 15a, has made any statement of its grounds or reasons for such failure or refusal; and, if so, the name of each such railroad, with a copy of such portion of such statement as sets out such grounds or reasons.

7. As to any railroad or railroads appearing to have received in trust for the United States excess earnings which remain payable to the commission, according to the provisions of said section 15a, the steps or proceedings taken or begun by the commission to enforce payment of the public moneys so unlawfully retained; and be it further

Resolved, That the commission be requested to make report of the information called for by the foregoing resolution not later than January 1, 1923, if the same can with reasonable diligence be prepared for transmittal before that date; and if the same can not all be so prepared by that date, that it then make report of all information which can be at that time transmitted, and that it make a supplemental report as soon thereafter as may be practicable, completing the information called for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the resolution be taken from the table and that the Senate proceed to its consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. For the purpose of considering the resolution, I ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas is calling for some information. It would be very useful information. It is information that I personally would like to have, because I was interested in the workings of the proposition limiting the earnings of the great railroads of the country and establishing this fund. But I notice that the Senator in his resolution calls on the Interstate Commerce Commission to report on the final valuation or the tentative valuation, one or the other, of the railroads of the country.

To make a report of that kind I imagine would take a great many clerks and involve a great deal of work. I would be glad to hear what the Senator has to say on the subject. He may have better information as to what it would require. I am referring to the mere clerical work of reporting the value of the railroads. Of course, that work is not finished, and when it is finished it will be a very elaborate report. I am not saying this with any desire to oppose the Senator in getting the information, but I am not sure that he can get the information without securing an additional appropriation for the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Alabama has a rather exaggerated idea of the work which would be entailed upon the Interstate Commerce Commission in preparing the report. I think the resolution clearly states that only such information is asked for as the commission have or which is readily obtainable and which they can forward to the Senate without any great amount of work.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course I do not belong to the majority party; I am not responsible for the expenditures of the Government; and if the majority party thinks it is necessary to entail this expenditure it is not for me to object; but I wish to call the Senator's attention to the information which is asked for by the resolution and see if he can give me some opinion as to the cost which it is going to entail. In the second clause of the resolution it asks for information concerning—

The Class I railroads which have made reports to the commission as to their earnings in excess of 6 per cent.

That ought not to occupy many pages. Then the resolution asks for information as to—the value of its railway property claimed by each; the excess earnings admitted by each.

When the Senator uses the word "each" in that connection I assume he refers to the railroads, and there are many railroads in the United States.

The resolution also requests information as to—the value of the railway property of each as found by the commission under section 15a, in each case where a tentative or a final valuation of the same has been made and in each case where no such valuation has been made—

And so on.

If the Senator from Kansas does not think that the resolution, if passed, will require a vast deal of labor on the part of the Interstate Commerce Commission in order to make the report which it calls for, I shall not have the slightest objection to his getting the information.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I made some inquiry as to the work which would be involved in preparing the information called for by the resolution, and I have reason now to believe that it will not be a great undertaking and that the information asked for is readily obtainable.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If that be so, I shall not object to the resolution.

Mr. CAPPER. I agree with the Senator from Alabama that it is not desirable to go to a great expense in securing the information asked for by the resolution, but I think it is all now available to the Interstate Commerce Commission and may be obtained without any difficulty.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator's opinion is that the information is available and obtaining it will not involve a great charge to the Government, I shall not object to the resolution.

Mr. CAPPER. I feel sure of it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But from the language of the resolution I was apprehensive it would require a considerable expenditure of money on the part of the Interstate Commerce Commission to assemble the data with which to answer the Senator's inquiries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I send to the desk an amendment to come in following the last clause of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, after line 2, it is proposed to add:

3. That the commission report the amount of the value of each of the railroads in each State, respectively.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I agree with the author of the resolution that it is a very wise resolution. In my opinion, the information called for is very necessary. If there is one calamity more than another with which the country has been afflicted during the last two or three years it has been that of excessive freight rates. That is particularly true in my section of the country and in my State. I understand that under the law pertaining to the valuation of the property of railroads such valuation is required to be given not only in the aggregate for each system but to be segregated as to States. Such information could be utilized by the State commissions for the purpose of regulating freight rates within the State.

I hurriedly prepared the amendment which I have sent to the desk as an additional section of the resolution, but I am seeking to ascertain whether or not the Interstate Commerce Commission has complied with the provision of the law that the valuation of the railroads shall be determined and stated within the States respectively. I should very much like to have that information. I have heard that the data as to valuation have not been compiled upon that basis. If they have not, I should like to know why not, and if they have, I should like to have the information.

In my State freight rates are very excessive; they are unreasonable; and, except when those who consume our products pay for them what may almost be termed exorbitant prices, the producers of my State can not earn sufficient upon which to defray the expenses involved in maintaining their groves and their farms. I want to secure any information that may assist in bringing about a freight rate reduction.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask whether or not the Senator's amendment would require the Interstate Commerce Commission to ascertain the value of any railroad regarding which they have no available data?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do not think it would do that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It seems to me the amendment is very broad in its terms.

Mr. TRAMMELL. It merely asks for the information set forth.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the information is not available, then would they be required under the amendment to go ahead and secure it?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do not think the amendment would require them to do that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is not the Senator's intention?

Mr. TRAMMELL. No; I do not intend that shall be done; but it is my understanding that the law at present requires the commission to collect the information suggested by my amendment. I have understood, however, that the data have not been compiled strictly within the provisions of the law.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We have a law, of course, providing for the valuation of the railroads, but I do not know whether the work has been completed or not. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] advises me that it has not been completed. Therefore, if it has not been completed, possibly the information which the Senator desires would not be available. I think the amendment should be modified in some way so as to call for the information only in case it is available.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The commission may report to the effect that the information is not available. The resolution itself provides that they shall report by January 1, 1923, such of the information called for as they possess. The amendment would not require the commission to submit a report as to information not now available to them.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I thought the language of the Senator's amendment was very broad.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the language of the Senator's amendment is, I think, out of line with the provisions of the original resolution. It is made clear in the resolution that we desire only such information as is readily obtainable.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I will amend my amendment, then, so as to provide that the commission shall furnish the information requested if it be available.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, of course, while the information might be available, it might require several months' work to compile it and submit it in the shape of a report. I suggest that there be added to the amendment the words "so far as the same has been compiled."

Mr. TRAMMELL. Very well, that is satisfactory to me. I wish to have the subject developed. If the commission are not complying with the law in regard to the matter of having the valuations segregated according to States, so that one State will not be required to pay excessive rates for the purpose of building up railroad systems in other localities, I wish to know it. Then we can go into the subject as to why they do not comply with the law on that question.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida, with the suggestion made by the Senator from Wisconsin, is satisfactory to me.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Very well; let the words "so far as the same has been compiled" be added to my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). Without objection, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida as modified will be agreed to. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). Without objection, the preamble will be agreed to.

SALARIES OF APPOINTED AND ELECTED SENATORS.

Mr. SPENCER. From the Committee on Privileges and Elections, I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 248) to provide for the payment of salaries of Senators appointed to fill vacancies, and for other purposes. I ask that the joint resolution may be read, and, if there be no objection, I shall then ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. I do not think there will be any objection to the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The Assistant Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That salaries of Senators appointed to fill vacancies in the Senate shall commence on the day of their appointment and continue until their successors are elected and qualified; and salaries of Senators elected to fill vacancies in the Senate shall commence on the day they qualify.

Mr. SPENCER. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I wish to say that I think the joint resolution ought to pass. It is a very important measure, and its importance might warrant a full Senate; but some days ago it was fully discussed in the Senate, and at that time there was no indication that there was any opposition to it from any source. Therefore I make no objection to the resolution being considered at this time of the evening.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR STERLING.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I have before me a copy of an address on the subject of the constitutional and political significance of Federal legislation on education delivered by my colleague [Mr. STERLING] before a conference on the relation of the Federal Government to education held at the University of Illinois on December 1 and 2 of last year. In view of the interest in this subject and the important bearing it has on pending legislation, I ask that the address may be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

CONSTITUTIONAL AND POLITICAL SIGNIFICANCE OF FEDERAL LEGISLATION ON EDUCATION.

Delivered at a conference on the relation of the Federal Government to education, held at the University of Illinois, December 1 and 2, 1921, by THOMAS STERLING, United States Senator from South Dakota.

In speaking to you on the subject assigned, namely, "Constitutional and Political Significance of Federal Legislation on Education," I should, perhaps, say a word for the purpose of clarifying the theme itself. By the "constitutional significance," I understand is meant the bearing, if any, the Constitution of the United States may have in the way of either permitting or preventing any legislation by Congress for the purpose of controlling or promoting education.

By "political significance," I understand is meant the bearing such legislation may have on the relations of the individual citizen to the State or the Federal Government, including its bearing on the social and political life and ideals of the people.

While in our day education is an all-absorbing and practical source of effort and desire, we search the Constitution of the United States in vain for the word "education." It is, in this respect, a barren field. So far as we know, no proposal in the interests of education was brought before the convention of 1787 save one, by James Madison, which would have given Congress the power—

"To establish seminaries for the promotion of the arts and sciences.

"To establish public institutions, rewards, and immunities for the promotion of agriculture, commerce, trade, and manufacture."

It appears that the proposal was not discussed by the convention except that one member expressed the view that it was not necessary to grant such power to Congress, as "the exclusive power at the seat of Government will reach the object."

We read the specifically enumerated powers of Congress contained in section 8 of Article I of the Constitution, beginning with the power "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, etc.," and ending with the power "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, etc.," and find no authority, expressed or to be implied, in this grant of powers for congressional action in directing, controlling, or promoting the education of the people. The nearest approach to the subject is found in that clause which confers upon Congress the power—

"To promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries"— the constitutional warrant, of course, for our copyright and patent laws, but never thought of by the most liberal constructionists as affording ground for Federal interest in or control of education.

To come to the point, the powers of Congress under the Constitution are delegated powers. By the terms of Article X—

"The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people."

The power to direct or control education is not delegated to the United States—that is, not delegated to the Federal Government acting through either the legislative or executive branches thereof. It is not a power prohibited to the States, and is, therefore, a power reserved to the States or to the people.

The various grants of power are in the most concise terms possible. In many cases they have been apparently extended by judicial interpretation, or by what the criticis would more harshly term "judicial legislation." The framers of the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution, giving Congress the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, could hardly have dreamed of those new conditions and that more complex society which have invited or demanded the frequent application of the right of Congress to regulate commerce among the several States of the Union. It is in this sense, rather by judicial legislation, that the powers of Congress seem to have been extended.

Likewise, the power to establish post offices and post roads is couched in so many words, but as a result we have the Postal System, which is the marvel of the world. Moreover, rural and city free delivery; the parcel post; the exclusion from the mails of certain matter regarded as dangerous to the morals, health, and peace of society; the appropriation of more than $300,000,000 of Federal money since 1916 to aid the States in the construction of roads, have followed as a consequence of this apparently limited grant of power.

Of course, with each new exercise or application of the power has come the cry of unconstitutionality, or centralization, of paternalism; but, recognizing new conditions and new needs, the highest judicial tribunal has for the most part sustained the legislation enacted in pursuance thereof, and the people have come to realize that there has been no usurpation and no infringement upon the principles or spirit of true democracy.

But in the cases I have cited there is the ultimate power found in the language of the Constitution. In the matter of education there is no such obvious starting point. Is there anything at all on which to build?

There is little question but that the desire for the general welfare has been the animating cause for much of the legislation assumed to be in pursuance of a power under the Constitution, and that it has been a factor also in judicial interpretation.

To what extent may the general welfare be the ground of congressional action where no express power whatever concerning the particular subject is conferred upon Congress?

The general welfare is twice mentioned in the Constitution. First, in the preamble, where to "promote the general welfare" is named as one of the objects for which the Constitution is ordained and established; and secondly, in section 8 of Article I, where, among objects for which Congress may collect taxes, is the one to "provide for the general welfare of the United States."

To what extent may Federal legislation relating to education be built on these two?

As a background to some conclusions reached, let it be observed that the omissions of the Constitution do not reflect the attitude of the fathers of the Republic in regard to education, although considering the fact that so many of these were educated men with their traditional belief in the diffusion of education among the people, and that it must be counted on as the very corner stone of free government, the wonder to the superficial observer at least is that their beliefs did not find some expression in the fundamental law.

But now, in the light of our wonderful history, with our better understanding of all the forces and factors that have entered into the problem, I am convinced that if the founders of the Constitution did not "build more wisely than they knew," they builded more wisely than many who came after them have known. For it was a new and as they hoped permanent Federal Government they were constructing, and that, too, out of States most sensitive as to their prerogatives. Few, indeed, were the interests which they were willing to yield to the control of a central power, and thus education, like a hundred other interests, was left to the initiative and control of the local community or of the State.

I think for those what we might term "formative days" it was better so. Out of the knowledge of the people of the several States of their own particular conditions and needs, out of State pride and a spirit of emulation, and out of the dependence of the State upon its own educational resources came that State initiative, development and strength which contributed more to the strength of the whole than if from the beginning there had been reliance on the central Government for controlling and directing aid in the maintenance of their several school systems.

Back of it all, however, was the American spirit in education. It had been manifested in many ways—by the admonition of individual leaders; by the action of legislative and governing bodies; by the quick response of the people to every proposition to widen the field or raise higher the standard of education. Let me recall a few of these:

The ordinance of the Continental Congress of 1785 gave the sixteenth section in every township for educational purposes, this out of lands ceded by the original States to the United States.

The celebrated ordinance of 1787, for the government of the Northwest Territory, contained the declaration:

"Religion, morality, and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged."

From the year 1803 to the year 1846, inclusive, 12 States had received the sixteenth section as an endowment for public schools, either out of the lands ceded by the States to the United States or out of the Louisiana Purchase, the total being 10,919,586 acres.

From the year 1850 to the year 1875, inclusive, 15 States received sections 16 and 36 out of every township belonging to the public domain for common-school purposes, or a total of 52,869,872 acres.

Certain of the original 13 States gave of their own State-owned lands for school purposes.

The munificent endowments of land for the purpose of general education rest for their authority on that part of section 8 of Article IV of the Constitution which gives Congress the power "to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States," and Congress thus empowered could not have more nearly reflected the American genius or have better served the general welfare than it did in rendering this aid to education.

Aside from the strong religious motive which prompted much of the early colonial effort in the establishment of schools, these acts of Congress harmonized with what from the earliest times in our history has been the general American ideal.

Washington, as we know, cherished the idea of a national university. He made some provision for it in his last will and testament. From that remarkable document I quote these significant words. They have a bearing upon the scope and purpose of present congressional effort:

"For these reasons it has been my ardent wish to see a plan devised on a liberal scale which would have a tendency to spread systematic ideas through all parts of this rising Empire, thereby to do away with local attachments and State prejudices as far as things would or, indeed, ought to admit from our national councils."

The words, too, of his farewell address will be as appropriate down to our remotest posterity as when first uttered:

"Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of Government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened."

Thus both the will and testament and the farewell address state in a broad way the political significance of Federal legislation on education. Local attachments and State prejudices should yield to those systematic ideas through which men comprehend not merely local or special interests and institutions but the national welfare, and it goes without saying that in the last analysis it is public opinion in this country that governs, and in order to govern aright, it must be an enlightened public opinion.

Now we come to a new era and a new form of Government grant. It is not one in aid of the common schools or of education generally, but for institutions of a new type where, in the language of the grant—

"The leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, in such manner as the legislatures of the several States shall prescribe, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions of life."

The Morrill Act of 1862 was approved by President Lincoln after it had been vetoed by President Buchanan on the grounds that it was both inexpedient and unconstitutional. I do not think the constitutionality of that act has ever been questioned in any judicial proceeding. It has been characterized as "probably the most important single specific enactment ever made in the interest of education. * * * It expresses the final emancipation from formed traditional and aristocratic ideas." It recognizes the democracy of education.

This great State of Illinois was one of the first beneficiaries of the Morrill Act, and this, one of the most prosperous of our State universities, was established as the "Illinois Industrial University," by aid of the land scrip which the act authorized. It has been said that you have dropped the "industrial," but from all accounts you retain the industry.

But this was only a beginning. It is followed by the Hatch Act of 1887, which gives money, $15,000 a year, the proceeds of the sale of public lands, but not lands, to each State for an agricultural and experiment station. This amount is doubled by the Adams Act of 1906.

The second Morrill Act, that of 1890, gives as a further endowment to the agricultural colleges $15,000 a year to be increased by $1,000 a year until a total of $25,000 is reached.

And now comes the recognition of a new principle. It is found in the third Morrill Act. Senator Morrill foresaw the day when, with the decrease in the available public lands, there must necessarily be a decrease in the funds to be derived from the sale for apportionment among the several States, and so he provided that any deficiency arising from such sales should be made good from any funds in the National Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

We have crossed the line; we have set the precedent. If it were ever doubted whether the words "or other property" in that paragraph of Article IV of the Constitution, which gives to Congress "the power to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory 'or other property' of the United States," could be construed to include money, the doubt was in effect removed by the third Morrill Act. We did it. Not to my knowledge has the constitutionality of this act ever been questioned in any judicial proceeding.

The enactment successively of the agricultural extension act of 1914, the vocational education act of 1917, the maternity act of 1921—all educational, all now acquiesced in, and as I believe, all rejoiced in—have given such strong legislative construction as to what Congress may do in the laying of taxes and the granting of money for the public welfare, that there is now no danger that the power will ever again be called in question.

But there is one more step. It must be taken if we keep pace with the growing American spirit in education. From the political standpoint it is of the utmost significance. Professor Bryce, in his American Commonwealth, third edition, 1895, after speaking of the Americans as an educated people compared with the whole mass of the population in any European country, except Switzerland, parts of Germany, Norway, Iceland, and Scotland, says parenthetically:

"I speak, of course, of the native Americans, excluding Negroes and recent immigrants."

And then he goes on further to say:

"The instruction received in the common schools and from the newspapers and supposed to be developed by the practice of primaries and conventions, while it makes the voter deem himself capable of governing does not fit him to weigh the real merits of his statesmen, to discern the true grounds on which questions ought to be decided, to note the drift of events and discover the direction in which parties are being carried."

Taking the two passages together with what he says by way of parenthesis in regard to the inclusion of native Americans and the exclusion of "recent immigrants," from his estimate we can readily discover our new need for legislation that will insure further aid and encouragement out of the national resources.

If when Viscount Bryce wrote these passages the recent "immigrant element" would have lowered the general high standard of American literacy, by how much more would it have done so a quarter of a century later, considering the swarms that have come to our shores within that period and the parts of Europe from which they have come.

A brief survey suggests these inquiries:

Is there need that these numerous alien elements, representing every variety of political, economic, or social creed, or without any creed at all, should be quickly assimilated and brought into harmony with our ideals of free Government?

Visit Ellis Island, the great immigrant port of entry for the United States, or the great industries—steel or cotton or coal—or the little Greece, or Italy, or Poland, or Russia, or Rumania, or the big ghetto, as you will find them in the big cities of our country, and tell me how long you think it will take and by what available processes or facilities the task will be accomplished?

Does this present a national problem? Is there need that the General Government aid in encouraging the States in extending the field and increasing their educational facilities?

Let the United States Army and the selective-service records made during the late war, with their astonishing if not alarming story of illiteracy and physical unfitness, answer the question.

Would you know to what classes and to what degree of ignorance and illiteracy the men who advocate the overthrow of government or the accomplishment of industrial revolution by force and violence make their most successful appeal? The records of the courts, State and Federal, will tell part of the story. The Immigration Bureau at Washington and the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice can add to the information, but those to whom such appeal is made are numbered by the million.

Can the Nation ignore this menace to its peace and good order by failure to do its part in providing means of education and Americanization?

Again, is it not a matter of national concern that the opportunities, especially for primary and rural school education, should be increased and equalized so that the children of America, whether they live in Massachusetts or in Texas, in densely or sparsely settled communities, shall have equal chances to obtain a common-school education and learn the fundamentals of good citizenship?

These are all national problems thrust upon us as the natural and logical result of our national policies and of our growth from the simpler needs which the community or the State could perhaps at one time supply to a nation-wide and complex social and political condition. These problems must have national sympathy and cooperation for their proper solution.

Let it be remembered that all these classes which I have just mentioned, un-American in spirit and sympathy as many of them are, are yet citizens or potential citizens, not of the State alone in which they reside but of the United States. They can not be Americanized out of hand overnight; Americanization involves education, and that takes time, skill, and fit instrumentalities. Let us not forget that the citizenship of every man, woman, and child, if they have citizenship at all, is a dual citizenship, one a citizenship of the State, one of the Nation, and each is the source of its peculiar rights and obligations.

It is no less imperative that the citizen respond to the call to perform his national duty than it is that he perform his duty to the State. More and more and sometimes in spite of ourselves do we recognize the all-pervasiveness of national interest and policies, and more and more do we share in the national consciousness. The Nation then is interested in the moral, educational, and political equipment of its citizenship. To refer again to the language of Mr. Bryce: The Nation even more than the State is interested in knowing that the voter is "fit to weigh the real merits of statesmen, to discern the true grounds on which questions ought to be decided, to note the drift of events, and discover the direction in which parties are being carried."

So, as it seems to me, viewed from the national standpoint, the political significance of Federal aid in education can no longer be open to conjecture. Further, that the aid thus far given in lands or in money has resulted in promotion of the general welfare there can be little doubt. But there are present-day exigencies not within the scope of existing legislation to aid in meeting which is, in my judgment, the imperative duty of the General Government. They can not be met by a submerged and unrelated bureau in the Department of the Interior, empowered to gather and distribute statistical information; nor can they be adequately met by Federal contributions only for specific objects to be matched by equal contributions on the part of the States accepting them. The vital importance of the subject, its intimate relation to the well-being and safety of the people—and this is the highest law—as well as the dignity of the subject, all combine to urge as the next great step the creation of a department of education, with its secretary a member of the President's Cabinet, whose proper function it shall be not alone to administer funds apportioned to the States, important though this may be, but through investigation and research to cover the whole field of our educational resources and needs; and which, without dictation, without ignoring State plans or encroaching upon the freedom of State initiative, shall from its higher vantage ground encourage, stimulate, and lead in every constitutional cooperative educational enterprise that will enhance the general welfare.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the unfinished business may be laid before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, December 16, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 15, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, Thou dost reveal Thyself unto us as a heavenly Father on earth, full of compassion and plenteous in mercy. We humble ourselves in Thy presence, for we are conscious of our unworthiness. Let Thy will and work appear unto us, and may this day be what it ought to be. Enable us to see with full understanding that our high office is to render a most helpful part in the service of our country. Whether the lessons of our own lives be easy or difficult, may we accept them cheerfully, for perfection lies this way. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND JUSTICE.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the appropriation bill just returned from the Senate, and to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill which the Clerk will report, and to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 13232) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell us how much increase the Senate has added to this bill?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman has not examined it?

Mr. MADDEN. No.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman is not going to agree indiscriminately?

Mr. MADDEN. We will not agree to anything that we can cut out. I will tell the gentleman that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. HUSTED, Mr. EVANS, and Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. DALLINGER. I move the adoption of the resolution contained in the report.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the gentleman's motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves the adoption of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Thomas W. Harrison was not elected a Member of the House of Representatives from the seventh congressional district of the State of Virginia in this Congress and is not entitled to retain a seat herein.

Resolved, That John Paul was duly elected a Member of the House of Representatives from the seventh congressional district of the State of Virginia in this Congress and is entitled to a seat herein.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] has the floor.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I wish to submit a point of order against the consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the proposition which I wish to discuss very briefly is this: That what purports to be a report bringing this resolution before the House is not in fact a report and can not be considered as such; that therefore the resolution itself is not before the House for consideration.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state the grounds for his point of order?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I will indicate exactly what is in my mind. I will endeavor to present the matter very briefly, but I hope clearly.

This case was referred to the committee, of which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] is chairman, early during the present Congress, with instructions to investigate and report. The committee did investigate. The committee formulated and agreed upon a report, and a report was directed to be presented to the House. It was presented to the House on the 14th of June of this year. It was received by the House, and ordered to be placed upon the calendar and to be printed. That report was never printed as required by the rules, and has not been printed as required by the rules up to this time, and has not been distributed among the Members of the House as contemplated by the rules.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If the gentleman will pardon me just a minute, I want to make a consecutive statement. The report was sent to the Government Printing Office. It was placed in type and the proof was turned over to the chairman of the committee. That document, thus dealt with, is the only report that has ever been brought into this House within the meaning of the rule. When the chairman received the proof he undertook to change the report. He changed it elaborately; he changed it substantially and materially. For example, the report having declared that certain precincts should not be counted but disregarded altogether, the chairman changed that feature of the report and varied the number of precincts to be treated in that way. The chairman went further and added two independent important sections, something like three to five hundred words, in which he embodied calculations as to what would occur in the result on this or that hypothesis. That paper was substituted for the original paper and without any permission from the House. That paper went to the Government Printing Office and was printed and distributed, and that is what purports to be the report of the committee that is before us now.

The minority members of the committee in presenting their views spoke of that report, and it is called "the alleged report." That was an intimation to the gentleman from Massachusetts that it would be attacked as not being a report.

The SPEAKER. Is that the only intimation that was given?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The only one of which I have any knowledge. Upon that intimation the gentleman from Massachusetts called his committee together again, and that committee proceeded to give its approval to this second paper, which is now designated as a report. That action was taken without the authority of this House.

There was an original reference to the committee of the case and there was never any subsequent reference, and the central suggestion I wish to submit is that when the committee presented here the first paper that was agreed upon it exhausted its authority. Thereafter the Committee on Elections was powerless to go a step further. That would seem to be the view based upon common sense. If that is not a correct view, then this House is under the control of a committee, however arbitrarily it may choose to act.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman need not argue that any further, for the Chair is inclined to agree with the gentleman, unless there is something to the contrary.

Mr. MOORE of Virgnia. I was about to say that that is the general law and is the view supported by the only precedents I have been able to find.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I have not ascertained exactly what the gentleman's point of order is.

The SPEAKER. Assuming that that is true, how is this resolution out of order?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Because I understand the case that has been referred for investigation and report is not before the House until there is a report on it for distribution. The case has been reported, but the report has been handled in such a manner by the committee that it can not be considered here.

The SPEAKER. How does that make the proposition before the House out of order?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The proposition before the House is the resolution that comes here only in a report.

The SPEAKER. The committee has reported, according to the gentleman's statement, and why is not the resolution before the House?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. But that is not the report.

The SPEAKER. Does the fact that a proper report was not printed make the resolution out of order?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I should say so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear arguments upon that point.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Otherwise the report goes for nothing. Suppose we were talking of an alleged, but not in fact, report of the Ways and Means Committee bringing in a tariff bill. Could the mere schedules be taken up for consideration?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I will.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The gentleman's point of order is that the resolution is not up for consideration because it has not been printed?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The case is not up for consideration because the case was originally referred to the committee for investigation and report, and the committee has not made a report. The thing that is tagged by the name of a report is not a report of the committee and does not respond to the reference.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The gentleman knows that the chairman of the Elections Committee presented a report which was filed——

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman fails to understand the point I make. There was a report to the House made on June 14, and it was put upon the calendar and ordered printed. It has not been printed, and the case is therefore not here for consideration.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Because it has not been printed?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Because it has not been printed and another and materially different thing has been adopted by the committee.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. That is something that occurred subsequently to the filing of the original report?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. That is true, but the original report has not been printed. We are entitled to the report, and it is not here; it has not been printed, but another and entirely different paper has been presented.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. That is what I am trying to arrive at, whether the point of order is that the committee has made no report or whether the point of order is that it did make a report and that precise report has not been printed.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I make the point of order for the reasons I have given. Now the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] has just called my attention to a ruling that is reported in Hinds' Precedents.

I refer to section 3117, Hinds' Precedents, volume 4:

A bill improperly reported from a committee is not entitled to its place on the calendar. On January 17, 1890, Mr. James T. McCleary, of Minnesota, made the following statement:

"It has been found that the vote by which the bill No. 10289 (a bill to provide for strengthening the public credit, for the relief of the United States Treasury, and for the amendment of the laws relating to national banking associations) was reported to the House from the Committee on Banking and Currency was not taken in due form. I am therefore authorized and directed by the committee to ask that the bill be recommitted."

The Speaker said:

"The Chair desires to say that if the vote in committee was improperly taken the bill would not be properly on the files of the House. The easiest way, therefore, to reach the matter would be to ask unanimous consent, which proposition the Chair will regard as agreed to if there be no objection, that the bill be recommitted. The Chair hears no objection."

On January 20, 1899, Mr. Marriott Brosius, of Pennsylvania, made this statement:

"I have been authorized by the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service to ask to recommit to that committee the bill (S. 3256) in reference to the civil service and appointments thereunder, which was reported to the House and went upon the calendar some time ago in an irregular manner. I ask to have it recommitted."

The bill was recommitted by unanimous consent.

The report came here in a regular manner. Then the chairman threw it overboard and brought something else here in an irregular manner. My proposition is that the only course the House can take now is to recommit the case to the committee, and that otherwise the committee is without any jurisdiction, just as it was without jurisdiction at the time when it met and agreed subsequent to June 4, 1922, that a certain paper should be presented to the House as the report of the committee.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The gentleman said something about the minority views. I find no minority views printed.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Oh, yes; the minority views are in this paper which contains what is called the report.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The point that the gentleman is making, as I understand it, is that this irregular report as appears here is not the authorized report of the committee.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Exactly, and that we are precluded from proceeding with the matter without a proper report, because the reference was for an investigation and report. Is it to be said, Mr. Speaker, that in considering an important matter of this sort, as to which there surely should be a report, that we are to proceed without any report?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] desire to be heard? The Chair will hear the gentleman briefly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Do I understand the gentleman to say that there is a definite statement in the minority report to the effect that the majority report has not been properly printed?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. No; I did not use that term. I said that there was an intimation in the statement of the minority views to that effect because the minority views referred to this thing as the "so-called" report.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am unable to find the statement. On what page did that appear? The minority report starts out with a clear recognition of the fact that the majority has made a report, and bases the entire minority report upon the majority report. There is no intimation whatever that it has been improperly filed.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I think the gentleman from Ohio is partly right. I am now informed by members of the committee on this side that that statement does not appear in the minority views, but that the statement was made in substance to the chairman of the committee by some of the members.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That seems to me quite a different proposition.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. But that is immaterial. That has no relation to the real issue here. The real issue is whether we are going to proceed with this contested-election case in the situation in which we find ourselves.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I merely desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the precedent cited by the gentleman is one where the matter was recommitted on a motion made in the House and not one presented to the Chair. On the gentleman's statement of the facts, this resolution is not subject to a point of order. The gentleman states that the chairman of the committee obtained recognition and filed the report of the committee, and that subsequently the committee had a meeting and took some action with reference to some printed report. Of course, all that is necessary is the filing of the report by the committee. That has been done, and whether it is a proper report it is not for the Chair, under the precedents, and it was not held to be for the Chair in the instance cited by the gentleman from Virginia, because the matter was submitted to the House, and all of the precedents are to the effect that the question of the sufficiency of the report is a matter for the House. I asked the gentleman from Virginia just what his point of order is. When it is all sifted down, the point of order of the gentleman from Virginia is that this is not properly up for consideration because some changes were made in the printed report before the House, which is in substance a point of order that it is not properly up for consideration because it is not printed. There is not anything in the rules that requires the printing of a report before it is considered by the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. When the committee made the original report, assuming the facts to be as stated by the gentleman from Virginia, its jurisdiction over the subject matter passed.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That being the case, that report having been ordered to the calendar, if it was changed, that which is now before us can not be the report, can it, because the committee at the time it acted the second time had no jurisdiction to act, the case not having been rereferred?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The report that was filed by the committee is the report that is before the House, and the resolution that was offered this morning by the gentleman from Massachusetts is the resolution that is now before the House. The gentleman from Virginia says that that particular resolution was made in the original report.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call your attention to one or two matters very briefly. I know nothing about the facts of the controversy but they seem to be conceded to be as stated by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Moore]. In Jefferson's Manual, section 400, it is provided:

> A committee meets when and where they please, if the House has not ordered the time and place for them; but they can only act when together, and not by separate consultation and consent—nothing being the report of the committee but what has been agreed to in committee actually assembled.

Section 412 of Jefferson's Manual:

> The report being made, the committee is dissolved and can act no more without a new power.

The SPEAKER. That does not apply to a standing committee.

Mr. CRISP. I think it would, and I think the Speaker, in his intimation to the gentleman from Virginia, said when a standing committee reported on a subject matter intrusted to it then their jurisdiction over that matter ceased unless recommitted——

The SPEAKER. The Chair agrees to that.

Mr. CRISP. Then I will not further argue that proposition. Now, as to the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Sanders] that the report of a committee is not required to be printed, I call the attention of the Speaker to section 803 of the manual, which is clause 2 of rule 18:

> And all bills, petitions, memorials, or resolutions reported from a committee shall be accompanied by reports in writing, which shall be printed.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. I will.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. There is nothing that requires the report to be printed before.

Mr. CRISP. It means when it is reported; when a bill is reported it is turned over to the bill clerk and takes the regular course and is printed and goes on the calendar. I do not want to be tedious but simply desired to give the Speaker the benefit of these two rules before the Speaker rules. It is conceded that this report was changed after it was agreed to by the committee. Under the section cited the chairman and no one else could add to or change the report as agreed to in committee actually assembled. That was done in this case. That being true it seems to me under section 8117, volume 4, Hinds' Precedents, that the report being improperly made and the matter improperly before the House, that this matter is not regularly and legally before the House.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, in substance the point of order is that the report as made was not printed, has not been printed. I am of the opinion there is nothing in the rule that requires a report shall be printed before the consideration of the measure. The report was made, there is no question about that, and therefore the matter is before the House. But, Mr. Speaker, this whole matter is proceeding, as I understand it, on a misunderstanding of the facts. I understand that the report now before us which the House has had printed is exactly the report read to the committee, passed on by the committee, and presented by the chairman to the House.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. No; I can not yield now.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I want to give the facts. The gentleman is not stating the facts as they occurred in the committee.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman can bring that out.

Mr. HUDSPETH. All right.

Mr. MONDELL. The only change made after the first printing was made to correct mistakes made by the printer.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman is absolutely mistaken.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, can I make my statement?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. MONDELL. The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Dallinger] can verify my statement. I am simply stating my understanding of the case. I have a right to do that. The only changes made in the original print were, I am told, changes made in order to include in the print certain matter that was in the report as presented by the chairman of the committee and omitted, probably by mistake, by the printer, and there is nothing in the report now before the House that was not in the original report. While a statement of this fact is not necessary to the decision of the point of order, I think it best that the fact be stated. I understand the facts of the case are as I have stated, and the chairman of the committee can state whether this is so or not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. The statement just made by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell], of course, puts a new aspect upon the case, but it is not necessary for the Chair to rule upon the discrepancy of fact. The Chair, to save time, is ready to assume that the facts are as stated by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will state, if the Chair will permit, those are not the facts—oh, yes; they are as stated by the gentleman from Virginia.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not wish, when there is a difference of opinion as to the facts, to pass upon the credibility of the witnesses or upon who is mistaken, so the Chair will assume the facts are as stated by the gentleman from Virginia. If that is true, it is clear that the committee which had jurisdiction to report this resolution, which the gentleman from Massachusetts calls up, reported it.

The report was submitted to the House and this resolution went upon the calendar, having been reported by the committee. That put it in the care of the House. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Virginia is correct in arguing that the committee's authority was then exhausted and the committee could not then make a new report without having the matter again referred to it by the House. But it does not follow, it seems to the Chair, that a point of order can be made against consideration of the resolution because the provision of the rule which requires the report shall be printed was not carried out. It is undoubtedly desirable for the convenience of Members that they shall have sufficient copies of the report at the time the matter comes before the House.

In this case the Chair will assume that this report, which is before the House, was not the same report that the committee made. But, of course, no harm has ensued to anybody. A full report is simply the argument of the committee. This is the report which the minority had before them and which their statement of views answered. It is the report that expressed the latest views of the committee. Apparently the committee supposed they had the right to correct and amplify their first report. As a matter of equity there could be no claim that this report should not be considered as the valid report of the committee. The only claim can be that, as a matter of strict technical law, the fact that the report which the committee first made was not printed prevents this resolution being in order.

There was here no improper vote, such as was referred to in the case in Hinds', volume 4, section 3117, cited by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE]. The report was properly made, and this being an election case it is not even necessary that there should be any report at all to make it in order. It has been held—Hinds', third volume, section 2584—that when an election case was before the committee, and a Member in the House, without waiting for the committee to report at all, moved a resolution on that case, a resolution similar to the one that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] moves now, that even then, without any report from the committee, that motion was in order. Much less, then, in this case, where the committee did make a report to the House, as is admitted, does such a point of order lie against the consideration of the resolution. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] if he and I can agree as to the allotment of time. The other day I had a talk with the gentleman from Texas in regard to this matter and he said finally that he wanted three hours for his side, and I agreed tentatively with him, subject to the approval of the House, that we should have three hours on a side, provided we could meet at 11 o'clock so that we could have a vote before dinner. At my suggestion the leader on this side yesterday made a request that when the House adjourned yesterday it should adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-day. When this request was made, however, objection was made on that side of the House. I told the gentleman from Texas that if such objection were made we could not have as long a time as three hours on a side, and inasmuch as this discussion on the point of order has consumed half an hour, besides the time occupied by the roll call on the question of no quorum raised by a gentleman on that side of the House, making an hour in all, I now ask unanimous consent that the vote on this question be taken at 5 o'clock, at which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered. That will give two hours of debate on each side; half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] and the other half by myself.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I did agree with the gentleman that if we could meet at 11 o'clock this side would be satisfied with three hours and allow three hours to the other side. But I want to ask the gentleman, in view of the record here of 2,000 pages; in view of the fact that Mr. Anderson, the attorney for the contestant, took two hours before the committee and then stated that he did not have ample time to state his case, and likewise the gentleman representing the other side, Mr. Fletcher, had two hours, I want to ask the gentleman if he thinks we could possibly present this case in two hours on a side?

Mr. DALLINGER. I have asked for four hours.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I would like to insist to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the time be fixed at five hours, and that he give us two hours and a half. This case took up some months in the committee to hear the case, and I do not think, if gentlemen desire to present the minority side, that we can get through in two hours and a half. The naval appropriation bill has been displaced in order to permit the taking up of this measure—an important measure—and I think we can save time between now and the 1st of January.

Mr. DALLINGER. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Texas wants two hours and a half on a side?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Two hours and a half on this side.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I do not think we want more than two hours on this side. I want to expedite the disposal of this case. We took only five hours, as I recall, on the Berger case. The custom of the House has always been to dispose of these cases in one day. I ask unanimous consent that the vote on this resolution take place at 25 minutes of 6. That will give the gentleman from Texas the time he desires.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I will say right now that I am not going to agree to fixing an hour to vote on this or any other matter before the 4th day of March. We are arranging in regard to the allotment of time all the time, but I am not going to agree to fixing a specific hour on anything. In order to save time I will put you on notice now.

Mr. DOWELL. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the vote be taken at 25 minutes to 6, the gentleman from Massachusetts to control two hours and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] two hours and a half. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as we can not agree upon the time for a definite vote, I will proceed with the case.

Mr. Speaker, at the commencement I desire to say that the record in this case is a very voluminous one and the committee did everything it could to expedite it. I know that there is a great deal of criticism in regard to the delay in bringing in these contested-election cases, but I desire to state that I have done everything I could to expedite these cases. Under the present law governing contested-election cases, however, if both parties take all the time allowed them by the statute and if the committee gives a reasonable time for the consideration of the case, as it should, it is usually a year and a half after the election before the case can be decided.

Now, in this case we delayed the hearing at the request of the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. Harrison, who wanted more time to file his brief, and later we delayed our consideration of it in order to enable him to submit certain figures. Finally, the report was made in June, and then the six weeks' recess came and we had a bare quorum for the rest of the session. The special session, as is well known, was taken up entirely with the consideration of the ship subsidy bill. Ever since this regular session came in, however, I have been trying to get a chance to bring up the case.

Mr. Speaker, ever since I have been a Member of the House I have been a member of the Committee on Elections No. 1, and it has been a source of pride with me to have each one of these contested-election cases decided absolutely upon its merits, upon the law and upon the facts. The record of the committee and my record, both as a member and as its chairman, shows that it has been my endeavor to have every case decided upon its merits regardless of any personal or partisan considerations.

Because of the limited time, I wish to state, Mr. Speaker, that I decline to yield, and I ask that I may not be interrupted.

The gentleman from Virginia, Mr. Harrison, during the campaign of 1920 made certain bitter and unwarranted statements about me and about the unfairness of the Republican members of the committee. I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD in order that I may insert the newspaper accounts of these remarks in my speech, as I shall not have time to read them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extent his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Is it to be understood that anyone in the House is to be permitted to extend his remarks in this case? I will ask the gentleman if he has that in view?

Mr. DALLINGER. I shall not object to anybody doing it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I shall not object to the gentleman's request unless there be some objection indicated to a general application for leave to extend remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Pending the disposition of that request, I ask unanimous consent that any Member of the House may have leave to extend his remarks on this case.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that any Member of the House may extend his remarks on this case. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman does not mean to include anyone except those who speak on the case, does he?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes; I do, because it is very evident that the matter is now in such a condition that perhaps only one person on a side is going to speak. That is the very purpose of asking general leave to extend.

Mr. MONDELL. That is not the fault of anyone on this side.

Mr. DOWELL. I object to the request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa objects. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. RAKER. I object to that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I have always been very proud of the fact that when in another election contest one of the contestants went to that friend of every Member of this House, Hon. Champ Clark, when he was the Democratic leader, and talked with him about his case, Mr. Clark said to him, "What committee is your case referred to?"

He said, "To the Committee on Elections No. 1."

Mr. Clark said, "Is that the committee of which DALLINGER is chairman?"

He said, "Yes."

"Then," said Mr. Clark, "you will get a square deal."

Mr. Speaker, we have had in this Congress nine contested-election cases, and in every one of them, except the present, a Republican committee has decided in favor of the Democratic sitting Member. This is the only case in which we have decided in favor of a Republican contestant and against a Democratic Member. In this case we tried and I hoped at one time to get a unanimous report in this case, but I was unable to accomplish it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what are the facts in regard to this case?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. I decline to yield, Mr. Speaker.

The Virginia constitution of 1902, which is the present constitution of Virginia and which was never ratified by the people of Virginia, can not be read by any fair-minded man anywhere in the country without his coming to the conclusion that its object was to put the election machinery of the State absolutely and for all time in the control of the dominant party in that State.

Under this grossly unfair system the legislature elects the judges of the circuit court, all of whom are members of the dominant party, even in those circuits where a majority of the voters belong to the minority party. The decisions of these circuit judges in all election cases are final, there being no appeal to the appellate court, as in other States. These judges appoint, in each county and city, electoral boards of three members each, with no provision for minority representation, and these boards are almost invariably composed entirely of partisans of the dominant party. The electoral boards in turn choose the registrars, who are always members of the party in power, and also the judges and clerks of election. In the case of the latter the only provision for minority representation is the loosely drawn requirement that in the appointment of the judges of election representation "as far as possible" shall be given to each of the two major political parties, but in all cases the selection of the so-called minority member is exclusively in the hands of the electoral board, which, as mentioned above, is always in the control of the majority party.

At the congressional election held in the seventh congressional district in 1920 the election machinery was absolutely in the control of the political party to which the contestee belongs. The judges who appointed the electoral boards were all Democrats, and all the electoral boards, except in the counties of Rockingham and Page, were made up exclusively of members of the same party.

Throughout the district all the registrars were Democrats, except where there were no Democratic voters. The testimony shows that in the Republican counties these registrars almost invariably required written applications from persons desiring to register, while, on the other hand, in the Democratic counties the registrars either absolutely ignored the mandatory provisions of the State constitution in this regard and registered persons without any applications at all, or else assisted them in making out their applications in spite of the constitutional prohibition. While it is true that usually no discrimination in these regards was made as between Republicans and Democrats, it is plainly evident that compliance with the constitutional provisions in Republican strongholds and a disregard of the same provisions in Democratic strongholds would in both cases be to the distinct advantage of the contestee.

Two out of the three judges of election were always Democrats, and in many precincts all were of the same party. Even in those precincts where a Republican judge was appointed by the Democratic electoral board the testimony shows that in many cases the so-called Republican judge was either a Democrat or a friend and a supporter of the contestee. For instance, in Albemarle County, the secretary of the electoral board testified under oath that J. W. Austin was the Republican judge at Proffitts precinct, whereas Mr. Austin himself testified that he was a Democrat and that there had been no Republican judge at that precinct for eight years. (Testimony, vol. 1, p. 140.) In another case a Democratic registrar testified that W. E. Wood was the Republican judge at Free Union, in the same county, whereas the evidence discloses that Mr. Wood voted in the Democratic primary in August, 1920. (Testimony, vol. 2, p. 1880.)

Now, the result of this situation is that the contestant in this case had to prove his case by calling hostile witnesses. This is to be borne in mind all through this case in weighing the reliability of the testimony that these men were reluctant witnesses and that the actual state of affairs was undoubtedly very much worse than is shown by the testimony. But the testimony of these hostile witnesses shows clearly that thousands of men and women were permitted to vote who had no qualifications for voting under the decisions of the Virginia courts themselves.

Three out of four of the decisions of the Virginia Circuit Court hold that under the constitution of Virginia in order to register a person, unless physically disabled, must present to the registrar an application in writing, prepared without aid, suggestion, or memorandum in the presence of the registrar, and that unless this requirement of the constitution is complied with the registrar acquires no jurisdiction, and that the vote of any person placed by him upon the voting list in the absence of such application is illegal and void. If, however, the application is made and accepted by the registrar, the constitution goes on to provide that further questions can be asked of the applicant under oath as to his qualifications. As Judge McLemore well says in his decision in the Virginia case, in re validity of local-option election held in the city of Suffolk (17 Virginia Law Register, 353):

> In the light of the authorities cited, and many others that could be vouched for if necessary, I find no difficulty in concluding that the clause of the constitution first herein referred to (sec. 20, clause 2) is mandatory and the observance thereof on the part of the voter necessary in order to give jurisdiction to the registrar to act. Now, if the clause referred to is mandatory and if the provision has been ignored by the voter and the registrar alike in the manner charged in the petition, then the conclusion is irresistible that the persons whose names were placed upon the registration books without having complied with the provisions were placed there without legal authority, the act of the registrar in placing their names on the books was ultra vires and void, and the vote of such persons should not be considered in ascertaining the result of the election in which they have participated. * * * To permit registrars, judges of election, or other servants of the people to reject provisions which are mandatory and thereby become arbiters of the qualification of voters is to give them the power, if minded to use it, of determining the electorate which shall pass upon any and every question that may arise.

I wish I had time to go into this phase of the case more fully, but the decision which I have just read was a scholarly decision, in which the court went into all the authorities at great length, and it is perfectly evident that the decision itself is not only good law in Virginia but that also it is common sense and in accordance with the fundamental principles of our whole system of jurisprudence.

Now, there were thousands of these illegal votes, and our committee has subtracted these illegal votes, where it could not be definitely ascertained for whom they were cast, pro rata from the total vote of the contending parties in accordance with the rule established in the case of Finley against Walls in the Forty-fourth Congress and a long line of congressional precedents.

Now, when this evidence was going in before the notary to the effect that Democratic registrars had put these names on the voting list in defiance of the mandatory provisions of the constitution, the testimony being drawn out of reluctant witnesses, seeing that under these circumstances that the contestee being returned by only 448 majority would be defeated by over 1,300 majority and the contestant elected, counsel for the contestee proceeded to put into the record a whole lot of alleged defective written applications made without aid or memorandum by voters in Republican counties and precincts but accepted by Democratic registrars.

The committee has examined with care the applications in the cases of all persons whose names were set forth in the contestee's answer and finds that a very large number of the applications contain all the information required by the second clause of section 20 of the constitution. In the case of a considerable percentage of the applications which are technically defective the voters, mostly women, voting for the first time under the nineteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution, have simply neglected to state that they had never before voted, a fact of which any court might well take judicial notice. It would be absurd to place such defective applications in the same category as cases where no applications were filed or where assistance was given, and I wish to cite the analogy of the validity of a judgment, even though the notice, in a court of record, is grossly defective in form, once the court has acted on it and entered judgment. Moreover, although a notice in a suit is defective, amendments are invariably allowed by the courts whenever the interests of justice demand.

Furthermore, the fact that the third paragraph of section 20 of the Virginia constitution provides for an examination under oath of the applicant by the registrar as to his qualifications, implies that the written application might not contain all of the required information, otherwise the registrar would not need to ask the applicant any questions but could from the application itself, after having sworn the applicant, make the proper entries on the registration book. If, however, the written application is imperfect, then the registrar can put the name of the applicant on the registration book after asking him questions as to his qualifications. In other words, while the registrar has no authority under the constitution to ask any questions or to do anything else until a written application has been made to him by a person in his own handwriting, without aid, suggestion, or memorandum, when such application has been made and accepted by the registrar, however defective it may be, then the registrar has jurisdiction to act, and he can ask the applicant any questions about his qualifications to vote, the registrar in such cases being required to reduce such questions and answers to writing and to preserve them. Consequently the committee is of the opinion that defective applications when once received by a registrar, under the Virginia law, are not void but merely voidable, and the vote of a person registered on such an application supplemented by the examination under oath by the registrar should not be thrown out in an election contest as contended by the contestee.

On this point the Virginia law and practice is perfectly plain. No judge of the circuit court has ever passed upon the question of defective applications because the question has never been raised by either party to a contest. They have had case after case of hotly contested local option contests, and both parties have always assumed that where the would-be voter went up and made the written application without aid, suggestion, or memorandum in the presence of the registrar and the registrar accepted it and took jurisdiction and by examination of the applicant under oath was finally satisfied as to his qualifications, the constitution had been complied with, and that the vote of such person could not be thrown out. If the courts of Virginia should throw out all the original written applications that are not perfect in form, as demanded in this case, there would be mighty few names left on the voting lists of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, it is not only the law and the practice in Virginia but it is in line with the underlying principles of the election law of the country, where the voter has tried to do his part, his vote will not be thrown out because of some technical defect which has been corrected by the registration officer.

It is like a case in court; until the man files his writ and his declaration the court has no jurisdiction. In this case there were thousands of illegal votes cast by persons who never tried to do their part by making out a written application without aid, suggestion, or memorandum in the presence of the registrar, and these votes were void ab initio and should not be counted. On the other hand, where a man does file his declaration in court the court gets jurisdiction and can amend the declaration if it is imperfect. This, Mr. Speaker, is the law and practice in Virginia, and it accords with common sense and the principles of American law.

Now, I want to call attention to the fact that while the committee on the law and facts finds that, with the illegal votes deducted pro rata from the total votes of the parties, Mr. Paul, the contestant, was elected by a large majority; it also finds that even if the contestee's contention is correct and defective applications render the votes of the applicants void, and these latter votes are deducted in the same manner, the result would still be that Mr. Paul was elected. But, in addition to the utter disregard of the mandatory provisions of the State constitution respecting registration and the failure to conform to the requirement in respect to the appointment of Republican judges of election, there were also in a large number of precincts violations of the constitutional and statutory provisions concerning the secrecy of the ballot, the keeping of the ballot box in view, the counting and disposition of the ballots, and especially the provision prohibiting the election officials from giving assistance to voters unless registered previous to 1904 or unless physically disabled.

Now, the law is plain that where there has been such an utter and reckless disregard of the provisions of the constitution and of the laws made to protect the purity of elections that it is impossible to say that there was a legal election, then those precincts where such irregularities occurred should be thrown out. Here again I deny that the committee has shown any discrimination. We have thrown out precincts wherever such practices occurred, no matter who it hit and no matter what the result was.

Mr. Speaker, I had intended, if time had permitted, to read a few quotations from the testimony outside of those mentioned in the report. I will simply refer to the testimony to be found on pages 155, 184, 195, 196, 252, 1785, and 1869 of the record in this case as fair samples of the irregularities referred to. This is what the majority found as a matter of fact, as set forth in our report:

In most of the precincts of Albemarle County particularly there was an utter and reckless disregard of these constitutional and statutory provisions from the beginning of registration down to and including the final return of the ballots. In many of the precincts of that county the registrars had made a practice for years of registering persons without requiring applications, so that a very large proportion of the persons voting at the congressional election in November, 1920, had no legal right to vote, while in other precincts the registrars made a practice of assisting persons to make out their applications, which rendered the votes of such persons equally void with the others already mentioned.

In this county the electoral board in violation of law delivered the official ballots previous to election to a deputy clerk of court, who gave no receipt for them and who distributed them throughout the county, in many instances to Democratic workers who were not election officials. The secretary of the electoral board, whose duty under the law it was to distribute the official ballots, admitted that in this instance the board had had nothing to do with it. (Testimony, vol. 2, pp. 1831, 1832.) The opportunity thus afforded to tamper with the ballots is too obvious to require any comment.

In most of the precincts in this county the provisions of the constitution in regard to the secrecy of the ballot, including the prohibition against giving assistance to voters in marking their ballots unless physically disabled, were openly violated. Judges of election openly and flagrantly assisted all voters who desired it in the preparation of their ballots without regard to the date of their registration or whether or not they were physically disabled. In many of the precincts the constitutional provisions in respect to the counting, disposition, and delivery of the ballots were entirely disregarded.

Similar conditions prevailed in the city of Charlottesville, in most of the precincts of Clarke County, in many of the precincts of Frederick County, and in the city of Winchester. In the latter city, the home of the contestee, the violation of the constitutional provisions in regard to registration, the secrecy of the ballot, and the indiscriminate giving of assistance in the preparation of their ballots to persons not entitled thereto was especially flagrant. The evidence clearly discloses the fact that for years the registrars in that city had entirely disregarded the mandatory provisions of the constitution requiring applications in writing and had filled their books with the names of persons who had never made any written applications at all. Consequently, at the congressional election in November, 1920, almost the entire registration was absolutely illegal and void. In the first ward, for instance, where 712 votes were cast at the election, there were 917 void registrations; while in the second ward there were 916 void registrations, although only 754 votes were cast at the election. The explanation of B. F. Davis, the Democratic registrar of this overwhelmingly Democratic ward, for this deliberate disregard of the constitution of the State is certainly illuminating:

"Q. Was there a great deal in the newspaper about it about that time?—A. Yes, sir; I said they were trying to make it as simple for the registrar as could be, and after as many registrants as possible; that is, what they wanted to do was to get as many as possible to register." (Testimony, vol. 1, p. 507.)

Although this was a large city precinct and the electoral board, composed entirely of members of the contestee's party, had months to make preparations for the election, there was no booth provided until 10 o'clock of election day; and even after two booths were put up the accommodations were entirely inadequate, and throughout the day voters prepared their ballots anywhere. Moreover, not only did the judges of election assist any voters who desired help, but bystanders indiscriminately helped voters mark their ballots. On this point the testimony of J. B. Beverly, Democratic city clerk of Winchester, is interesting.

"Q. In the second ward, were the judges helping anybody to mark their ballots who requested them—that is, were they doing that when you voted?—A. Well, yes, sir; I think they were.

"Q. Mr. Beverly, you, yourself, helped somebody to mark a ballot, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir; I helped quite a lot." (Testimony, vol. 1, p. 515.)

At this same precinct the used ballots were not sealed, but were put in the ballot box and the box returned to the clerk's office. (Testimony, vol. 1, p. 524.) Moreover, the clerk of the court to whom the ballots should by law have been returned after the count by the election officials, testified that he did not know whether the ballots were ever returned or not, but that the ballot boxes were simply delivered to the canvassing board. (Testimony, vol. 1, p. 515.)

All the way through there was such an utter and reckless disregard of the election laws that there can be said to have been no legal election in these precincts. Democratic election officers and Democratic workers marked the ballots openly at the polling places. And, Mr. Speaker, there is no question whatever but what the committee was justified in throwing out these precincts, but I wish to again call the attention of the House to the fact that even if no precincts were rejected, just deducting the illegal votes pro rata, the contestant, Mr. Paul, was nevertheless elected by a substantial margin.

I have already called attention to the fact that the Virginia law provides that all unused ballots shall be destroyed but that the unused ballots in many cases were put in with the ballots that had been voted and were put in places where they could be tampered with before the electoral board made the count, making it possible for them to manipulate the returns in Albemarle County and offset the votes coming down from the rest of the district.

Mr. Speaker, at this election the Democratic officials returned Mr. Harrison as elected by a majority of only 448 votes. They knew that the election was going to be close in 1920. What happened in 1918, and what happened this year has nothing to do with the case. In this election of 1920 they realized that unless they used their control of the election machinery to violate the law they would lose the district. You can not give any other explanation to the fact that they deliberately disregarded the safeguards thrown about the election than that they intended to win this election by fair means or by foul.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the time will not permit my going into the details of the minority report. But I wish to say that I have prepared an answer to every line of it. The minority raises the point that we were not fair in our conclusions in regard to certain precincts, whereas we have been absolutely fair.

Gentlemen should remember that in every case the absolute control of the election machinery was in the hands of the majority party and that whatever irregularities may have occurred in the Republican precincts they did not redound to the benefit of the contestant but to the benefit of the contestee. In any other State in the Union where the control of the election machinery is in the hands of the dominant party in the county you might say that because there were similar irregularities in the Republican counties that therefore those precincts should be thrown out, but in this case the Republican counties were absolutely in the control, so far as the election machinery is concerned, of the friends and partisans of the contestee. We have gone over very carefully every one of the Republican precincts, and although in some of the first testimony, some of those Democratic elections officials, knowing what it meant to show irregularities there, did exaggerate these irregularities, but on cross-examination it was shown that except in those cases where we threw out the precincts all through the Republican parts of the district, the provisions of this rigorous constitution of Virginia and the election laws made in pursuance thereof were rigorously enforced. The constitution of Virginia, which, according to the Hon. CARTER GLASS—and I wish I had time to read his remarks in the constitutional convention—was designed to disfranchise four-fifths of the colored voters of the State, and which, as a matter of fact, has also disfranchised a large part of the white population. It is interesting to note that in 1920 there was a total vote cast for 10 Congressmen in this State of Virginia of 223,267, while in the State of Minnesota, also having 10 Congressmen, there was a total congressional vote of 747,070 votes. The enforcement of these rigorous provisions of the constitution and election laws in the Republican parts of the district and the refusal to so enforce it in the Democratic parts of the State——

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirty-one Members present, not a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TILSON). On this call 276 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I intend to occupy the time of the House for only a moment or two, and then to reserve the remainder of my time. I ask unanimous consent that all Members who desire to speak upon this matter be given permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I already put the gentleman on notice that there would not be any more unanimous consents granted between now and the 4th of March, so what is the use of putting the request? I object.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, as I stated before the point of no quorum was raised, I intended, if conditions had warranted it, to make a reply to the minority report line by line, but I shall simply state, as an example of the inaccuracy of that report to show that Members can not rely upon it, that in the very first part of that report there is the statement that in 1918 the contestant, Mr. Paul, was a candidate and was overwhelmingly defeated. As a matter of fact, I have here the certificate of the secretary of state of Virginia to the effect that he was not a candidate, and, as a matter of fact, he could not have been a candidate at that time because he was then fighting for his country over in the Argonne. The fact is that a few men in his district—friends of his—wrote his name in and he got a scattering vote from the district, and they bring that in to show his overwhelming defeat. The minority report also states that because in the Republican counties a larger proportional vote relative to the total population was cast, that that shows that in the Republican counties the Democratic officials were easy with the voters. As a matter of fact, it is in the Democratic counties, particularly in the county of Albemarle, that there is a large colored population, which, under the constitution of 1902, is disfranchised, as was the intention of the framers of that constitution, as stated by the Hon. CARTER GLASS in moving its adoption in the constitutional convention. Of course, in the counties having a large nonvoting colored population, the proportion of voters to the total population is not nearly so large as in the Republican counties, where there is little or no colored population.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. I can not yield. Not only that, but the figures which the gentleman from Virginia presented to the committee and which I laboriously went over, because I have known him for years and I wanted to give him every consideration—the figures which he presented differ from ours, because where a voter whose vote has been found to be illegal has not himself testified as to how he voted, we have subtracted that vote pro rata. The gentleman from Virginia, however, in such a case would put on the witness stand one of his Democratic henchmen, and giving him the name of the voter would ask him what his politics were, and of course he would say that the particular voter was a Republican. Then, upon such testimony he would deduct that illegal vote from Mr. Paul's total vote.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. I can not yield. One of these henchmen of the contestee testified as to the party affiliations of almost a thousand voters and testified that these people were practically all Republicans. Judge Harrison then subtracts all of these votes from the vote of Mr. Paul, when, as a matter of fact, there was no evidence worthy of the name of how they voted.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. I can not yield. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman at any time has the right——

Mr. LONGWORTH. There has been practically no transaction of business since the last roll call.

The SPEAKER. It may be dilatory, but the Chair passes no judgment on that.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I have no desire to make it dilatory, but when a gentleman makes an assertion and will not answer a question in reference to it I think we ought to have a quorum here. I make the point of order there is no quorum here.

The SPEAKER. It is clear there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and seventy-five Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] asked unanimous consent to incorporate in his remarks certain newspaper clippings, which contained criticisms by me of the Committee on Elections. Objection was made; but if the gentleman desires it, I will ask unanimous consent to have these newspaper clippings incorporated as a part of my remarks. I think my friend, Mr. GREEN of Iowa, who is something of a Shakespearean scholar——

Mr. DALLINGER. Do I understand the gentleman wants to incorporate——

Mr. HARRISON. I will have these clippings incorporated as a part of my speech.

Mr. DALLINGER. Not unless I shall be given unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

Mr. HARRISON. I am not asking; I am just trying to get the gentleman's clippings in the RECORD if he desires it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was informed that during his momentary absence unanimous consent had been given to everybody to extend their remarks.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. No.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is mistaken. Does the gentleman from Virginia——

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent to incorporate the clippings the gentleman desires to have in his speech in my speech.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks for the purpose indicated.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent has been refused the gentleman from Massachusetts to extend his remarks, and I think it is hardly fair the gentleman from Virginia should have that privilege, as the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts was denied.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I have always felt with my colleague from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] that there ought to be some fair tribunal for the consideration of these election-contest cases. I know that is simply carrying out what has been proposed a number of times before by many great thinkers. Mr. Mann, that distinguished statesman to whom we all paid honor here a few days ago in this Hall, undertook to remove the objections and the criticisms and the partisan character of these contests when he was chairman of the Elections Committee by giving a sort of congressional jurisprudence to the consideration of those cases, and for over 20 years, nearly, the impression that he gave to the consideration of election cases lasted. But, of course, that good influence has gradually been growing less. What I have said on the stump I say here, that of all the cases I have ever had an opportunity to review in these election contests there never has been a more partisan or more unjust finding than there is in this case. The gentleman from Massachusetts starts out by saying he is standing by the constitution of Virginia, but runs away from it when it did not suit his purpose. He says that he stands by certain decisions of the courts of Virginia and does not when it does not suit his purpose. He misconstrues the decisions and then abandons them when it does not suit his end, even his own misconstruction of them. It is a matter of no moment to me what construction he adopts if he will apply the same interpretation honestly and justly to every contested precinct in the district. If he adopts any interpretation and will uniformly carry it throughout the district, he will be forced to find that I had been elected by an increased majority over the returns; but in order to avoid that calamity, in order to carry out the purposes that this contest was instituted to do, he simply ignores his own interpretations and throws out 32 Democratic precincts without condescending an explanation. Nobody can tell on what grounds he proceeded. I defy him to tell it himself. After throwing out these 38 precincts here is what he says:

> There was such an utter, complete, and reckless disregard of the mandatory provisions of the fundamental law of the State of Virginia involving the essentials of a valid election that it can be fairly said that there was no legal election in those precincts.

That is all he gives, all the information he vouchsafes, and proceeds to elect his man by throwing out precinct after precinct where Democrats prevail, disfranchising men who have voted for 40 years. I myself, who have held responsible offices, who have been a voter for 40 years, he disfranchises under his rule. Five hundred men in my home town, men against whom there could not be the slightest objection as to their registration, as to their right as citizens, or their right to assistance, men registered prior to 1904, were disfranchised ruthlessly. He simply on a general statement eliminates sufficient Democratic precincts to accomplish his purpose, and then blandly explains that the elections at these precincts were not conducted according to law. I noticed in this Hall a few moments ago what was called to your attention by the gentleman from Massachusetts, a bulletin which proposed to give visual expression to the laws of Virginia, but the trouble with that bulletin is that it was not truthful. The judges of the court are Democratic, but in numerous instances the registrars were not, and the electoral boards were not Democratic, and at every possible precinct there was a Republican judge.

Mr. VAILE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I have only 30 minutes; what is it?

Mr. VAILE. I want to ask if these 500 men——

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I suggest the gentleman's time is very limited.

Mr. HARRISON. I would be very glad to answer questions if I had the time.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] undertakes to say here that contestant had to resort to hostile witnesses. Why, he had his leaders, he had his supporters, he had his lieutenants, sitting beside him all the time, and he did not dare to put them on the witness stand. I did, and I proved beyond question and beyond the possibility of a cavil that in this whole election there was not one single act of fraud; not a single instance of the improper use of money; not a single instance of intimidation; and that the only thing they could possibly rest upon was to trump up some matters to throw out a Democratic precinct.

The contestant has been constantly before the people. He has been elected from time to time to office, and he has been a candidate time and time again for office, and yet in this election as in all others he was the principal offender, if any offense was committed. Why did he not call the attention of the authorities to these matters and have them corrected? He was only too glad to get his people registered, and his people voted under the very conditions of which he now complains. He comes in now on the proposition of "heads I win and tails you lose." I will abide by any interpretation of the Constitution and the laws. I do not care if you take the decisions that the gentleman from Massachusetts has quoted and then failed to follow. I do not care upon what theory you go or what construction he put upon those laws. Let him do it honestly and hew to the line, no matter where the chips fall, so long as he applies the law honestly and fairly to the various precincts of this district. That is all I ask.

I had hoped that this matter was settled by the last election. We had the case of Mr. Newberry, who bought his seat in the Senate, and when the people were heard from Mr. Newberry resigned. I took this case back to the people. I made it the sole and only issue before them. I said, "If I was not fairly elected, do not vote for me now." What was the result? I carried every county in the district, including the home county of the contestant and his own home precinct. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Give your majority.

Mr. HARRISON. My majority, instead of being 448, as it was at the last election, was 5,193.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. You carried the very counties which Mr. DALLINGER says were under Republican control and where there were no irregularities?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. Shenandoah County, that gave 1,100 against me in 1920, gave 250 for me in 1922. Rockingham County and Harrisonburg, that gave a majority against me of over 800, I carried by something less than 200. Page County, another Republican county that went against me by 450, I carried by over 100. One little county my contestant carried, and that was Greene County, by a miserable majority of 26. And yet you are going to ram this man down the throats of the people of the seventh congressional district as their Representative in spite of the resentment that they expressed even at such a suggestion.

Of course, if the law has been improperly construed and has not been properly followed in these cases, the proper method would have been to have declared the election void. He participated in these matters, just as I did, and he got the benefit of them without objection. But there was no occasion for either. The people have spoken. The seventh district responds with an unprecedented majority, For the first time in 20 years Virginia sends a solid delegation.

Now, let me tell you what I think about the upshot of this whole business. The people of the country do not altogether understand Virginia Republican politics. It is a pure matter of patronage and a question of who feeds off patronage. I have been hearing all over my district about the sale of patronage. Constantly reports have come to me that offices were sold for what money there was in it. Let me repeat, I do not believe Republicans of the North realize southern Republicanism, and I do not believe they would indorse southern Republican methods.

I am going to read some letters. A man whom I do not know and for whom I do not vouch—I have not any idea who he is; he claims, as I understood him, and I do not even vouch for that—he complains that he bought an office and it was given to somebody else because that somebody else had given more money for it, and he put the correspondence in my hands. Now, the head of this whole patronage business in Virginia is the distinguished Member from the ninth district, Mr. SLEMP. He is the disburser of all patronage. He is the man who has to give his indorsement to the applicant, not only in my own State but also, as I understand, in other States. Here are canceled checks. They are indorsed, some of them, by Mr. SLEMP, some by his secretary, all for the indorsement of applicants to office.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. SLEMP. Will you state to the House what year you are referring to?

Mr. HARRISON. These seem to run for over a year, from December, 1920, to January, 1922. The whole period seems to be for a year during which this matter has been going on. These checks are better understood in connection with the letters I shall now read. I pick these letters up at random. Here is a good opener:

COMMITTEE ON APROPRIATIONS,
UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. B. R. POWELL, Gretna, Va.

DEAR BEN: I have letters in regard to the collection of money for post offices. One must be very careful about this. It will bring the party into disrepute, which would be bad for everyone. We must preserve our standing with the people and with the administration.

With best wishes, I am,
Sincerely yours,
C. B. SLEMP.

The next one is from his secretary. I want to get the initial letter:

DEAR BEN——

Mr. LONGWORTH. What is the date?

Mr. HARRISON. December 27, 1921.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Read it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. This election was in 1920.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; but we have not got proof of what was going on except the letters that we now have. We may suspect a lot, but we have not got the proof, except these letters:

DEAR BEN: I inclose you a copy of letter I received from Mr. Jones a short time ago. I have succeeded in pulling his son over the top and am ready to make the appointment, but before we do so it will be necessary for you to get in touch with him and arrange for some money. We will have to have at least $150 in order to come out whole. It took half of that amount to put the matter over—which I will explain to you when I see you. I want you to handle the matter instead of writing to them direct. It is a very delicate matter and I had to do some strong wire pulling to get it through, and I know you can work it in the right way. I would not write any letter on the matter but phone the boy to come and see you. If you can I would like for it to all be arranged by the first of the year. This is a lifetime position for the boy, which he would not have gotten if it had not been for me, and I feel sure they will appreciate fully the circumstances and protect me in the matter. If you think it is worth more than the above amount you can arrange accordingly.

[Laughter.]

* * * * * * *

Your friend,
L. B. HOWARD.

P. S.—Be sure and destroy this letter if you are through with it.

Another:

Mr. B. R. POWELL, Gretna, Va.

MY DEAR MR. POWELL: Please accept my thanks for your letter of the 3d, inclosing checks in the amount of $100. You are doing good work. Keep it up.

With best wishes, I am, sincerely yours,
C. B. SLEMP.

Mr. CRISP. Who is L. B. Howard?

Mr. HARRISON. L. B. Howard is secretary to Mr. SLEMP. Here is another one:

DEAR MR. POWELL: The Civil Service Commission has announced examinations for postmasters on August 13 at Charlotte Court House, Halifax, and Concord Depot.

Please get in touch with our people at these places and have them thoroughly prepared for these examinations.

I have received your letter this morning in regard to the appointment of rural mail carrier at Wirtz; but it came too late, as on yesterday I succeeded in getting Mr. Clyde Boone appointed and wrote you accordingly.

I think you ought to see Mr. Boone before he gets his appointment and tell him what a fight we have made to have him appointed and make him promise to help out on expenses. Let me hear from you.

With best wishes, I am, sincerely yours,
L. B. HOWARD, Secretary.

Here is another:

DEAR BEN: I have had Mr. Moore appointed acting postmaster at Saxe. I suggest that you see him at once and have him help us. He should have his appointment within a few days.

Your friend,
L. B. H.

Here is another:

DEAR MR. POWELL: If you can arrange the balance of the $200 that I wrote you about, I am leaving for home on about the 23d and would like to have it before that time. Let me know when I can serve you.

With best wishes, your friend.
L. B. H., Secretary.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Just what has all of this to do with the election of 1920?

Mr. HARRISON. As I will show you, the whole business here is simply a question of giving the contestant in this case $15,000. I am not surprised that the gentleman from Wyoming should show some nervousness.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Go ahead.

Mr. HARRISON. Here is another letter:

Mr. B. R. POWELL, Gretna, Va.

DEAR MR. POWELL:

* * * * * * * *

Of course, you know that it is necessary in making these appointments to get men in that will help us in a financial way, and also I want you to look after the situation in Campbell County. * * *

I am just reading the parts that bear on this point. Here is a clause in the other:

Doctor Smith was here yesterday raising hell about matter in Henry County. Will write you fully about it to-day or to-morrow. Keep all my letters confidential and don't say anything about the Smith matter until you hear further.

Your friend,
L. B. H.

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES U. S.,
Washington, D. C., July 26, 1921.

Mr. B. R. POWELL, Gretna, Va.

DEAR MR. POWELL: I have succeeded in having Mr. Archie H. Kirkland appointed rural mail carrier at Concord Depot.

Can you see him and have him help out a little on expenses. You know how to handle matters of this kind so there will be no come back. I understand he is a very fine man. A good Republican coming from Massachusetts.

With best wishes, I am, sincerely yours,

L. B. H., Secretary.

I will not continue to read these. There are dozens and dozens of them, all showing the same thing that we have been claiming.

Mr. HUDSPETH. By whom are they written?

Mr. HARRISON. Some of them are signed by the gentleman from the ninth district, and some by his secretary.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Are these transactions with people in your district?

Mr. HARRISON. These particular transactions are not, but the point I am making is that we have got the proof here of certain matters that we know have existed in every district and all over the State.

Mr. LINTHICUM. On what stationery are these letters written?

Mr. HARRISON. On the stationery of the gentleman from the ninth district of Virginia.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Congressional letterheads?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. Now, here is the point I am making, that the only possible purpose that can be served by the action proposed to-day is to give the contestant the $15,000 which he has not earned by any service rendered in this Hall. After the election of 1920, when Republicans won, there were a number of important places that he might have been appointed to, but the ninth district was getting a little shaky. The ninth district was showing wavering toward the Democratic column, and so it was proposed to put all of the important officers down in the ninth district, and they were. The contestant here is promised his $15,000 to compensate him. It is just as much the policy of the Republican Party to take care of its lame ducks down South as it is to call on everybody to make a contribution for the appointment that they get. That is the point that I make.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The gentleman spoke of some checks there. Will the gentleman state to whom they were made and who signed them?

Mr. HARRISON. There are bushels of them.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Who made them?

Mr. HARRISON. They are signed by Mr. Powell, some of them payable to SLEMP and some to Howard.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Is SLEMP's indorsement on them?

Mr. HARRISON. On some of them; yes. Now I have not used this man Powell's name at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. Who is this man Powell?

Mr. HARRISON. He is the disburser of patronage, or what they call the referee in the fourth district.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. These checks are for private money, but this $15,000 that is to be paid to this gentleman is the people's money out of the United States Treasury.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. Why, what is the Treasury of the United States for? [Laughter.] To take care of Republican gentlemen who do not get elected.

He made the best run that any Republican has ever made in that district. He should have been proud of the accomplishments which he made. Had he rested satisfied with the honor he then won there is no telling but that he might have been here truly and honestly representing the people of the district in this election.

I regret the action of this House and this committee, because it prevents a real consideration in the South of the true political issues between the parties. You gentlemen want to know why you can not get a Republican Party down there. We would like to divide on party lines and party issues, but the moment a division arises it is abused here in the House or somewhere else to the prejudice of the rights of the people of that district.

I know of no more gallant people anywhere, of no more honorable and deserving people anywhere than in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia and Piedmont, which I have the honor to represent. They were men that followed Jackson in his successful fight and gave him the sobriquet of Stonewall.

Their forefathers were men that George Washington and all the Revolutionary heroes rested their strength upon, and to say that these people shall be deprived of their right of representation because a Massachusetts Congressman does not seem to approve of our constitution and laws seems absurd. I feel therefore that I have discharged my duty. I do not care whether the contestant gets the $15,000, which he seems to be scheduled for, but I do object to any Representative from another section of this country undertaking to say that we shall not have a Representative in Congress according to our own laws and our own statutes.

This constitution has been approved by the United States Supreme Court. The gentleman from Massachusetts can not say they are sorry for the poor colored brother because they claim to be lily white—nothing so white as are they. They kicked the negro out of the party after they had got their votes. They denied them representation in political conventions. They pride themselves on the fact of being extra-fine lily-white people. So the gentleman from Massachusetts may save his sympathy on the ground that the constitution of Virginia has in some way prejudiced the rights of the negro. As I say, the Supreme Court of this country has already passed upon the validity of that constitution, and we have a right to our constitution just as much as the gentleman from Massachusetts has to his. An investigation of election contest cases shows that there is about as rotten and corrupt exhibition of politics in Massachusetts contested cases as there are anywhere else. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the contestant, Mr. John Paul, be allowed to speak 20 minutes out of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the contestant be allowed to speak 20 minutes out of his time. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, I trust the House will pardon me for plunging immediately into the facts of the case, because I am frank to say they are the only things of moment to the House, and my time is very much limited.

Now, in the beginning I want to disabuse the minds of the Members of the House in thinking that there is any attempt by this committee or by me to override the laws of the State of Virginia or its constitution. I am simply here to sustain the constitution and laws of Virginia and to claim that they must be obeyed by the people who made them. [Applause.]

I can not go into detail, but the present election laws of Virginia are based on three primary qualifications. First, that a man must pay a poll tax; second, he must make before the registration officer a written application to register in his own handwriting, in which he shall state his name, age, date and place of birth, his residence and occupation at the present time and for the two years next preceding; whether or not he has ever voted; and if so, in what State, county, and precinct he last voted. The third qualification—if he is registered under the new constitution which went into effect in 1904—is that he must prove his ability, without suggestion, aid, or help from any source whatever, to prepare his vote on the printed form furnished by the election officer.

You might say on the face of it that these qualifications are good ones as a basis for an electoral system. In practice this electoral machinery charged with carrying out the administration of the election law is composed entirely of members of one party. I say entirely, practically so. The electoral board, which is the center of the system, is appointed by the judges of the circuit court, and these judges are always Democratic. There is no restriction on them as to the men they shall appoint on the board. They almost invariably appoint three Democrats. Now, the electoral board selects the registrar and judges and clerks of election. There is no restriction on the judges or clerks of election except a provision that where it is possible the minority shall have one out of the three judges of election. There is no restriction on the clerks at all. We find in my district in 1920 that out of 13 electoral boards in the district 10 of them are composed entirely of Democrats. We find that at every precinct in the district in which investigation was made that the registrar was Democratic except in one precinct where there happens to be no Democrats at all, and of necessity he was a Republican. It is true that 5 registrars out of over 100 testified that they voted for me on personal grounds, but not "many of them," as the contestee said a few minutes ago. Five voted for me on personal grounds, although they were appointed as Democrats and they said they affiliated with the Democratic Party. In a great many precincts there were no Republican judges. In the county of Albemarle, around which centers this case, there was not even a nominal Republican judge in 11 precincts.

When I say a nominal Republican judge, I mean that they never claimed that there was a Republican judge even in those 11 precincts. At certain other precincts in that county and in other counties through the district there were men appointed as Republican judges who were, in fact, Democrats in disguise. That is the way the system is operated. I once heard the Hon. William Jennings Bryan stand before the Legislature of Virginia and say that the election laws of Virginia were a shame to an enlightened people, and I also heard him point out this very fact of a member of the Democratic organization selecting the judge for the Republican Party, and, as Mr. Bryan said, this judge is usually a traitor to his own party, or a Democrat in disguise. That is the electoral system as it was operated in the seventh district of Virginia in 1920.

The election machinery in Virginia is in no sense judicial. It is an ancillary organization to the Democratic Party organization. This record shows that all the way through. You will find repeatedly in this record where registrars testified that they were appointed by the Democratic committee to act as registrars, and you will find judges of election testifying that on the day of election they were representing the Democratic Party in the duties they were performing. That is the situation we went up against. Remember that the three great essentials of a valid voter in Virginia are the prepayment of the poll tax, the making of the written application without aid, memorandum, or suggestion, and the ability to mark your own ballot without suggestion or aid of any sort. If that law were rigidly enforced we would have no complaint, but our complaint is that having made this law deliberately unjust and outrageous—and I think I am justified in saying that—under which every advantage is taken by the dominant party, they are not content with the advantages given them under the law, but whenever they find themselves under the whip of necessity they go outside of the law to take still greater and dishonest advantages. You can readily see that when this provision of the State constitution was put into effect in 1904 requiring the voters to make written application to register, that it was a test as to their literacy. That was the purpose of making it. A wise test, we will say. The second test of literacy was the ability to mark the ballot; and under our Virginia law the ballot must be kept secret until election day. It was a test of literacy that the man should come there and be able to prepare a ballot that he had never seen, the form and style and contents of which were unknown to him until it was handed to him by the judges of election. This is the way the election law operates in my district and the way it was operated in 1920.

In those communities where the population is overwhelmingly Democratic in its sentiment, where we will say that three out of every four or four out of every five inhabitants are Democratic or would vote the Democratic ticket if they could vote, there is no restriction whatever as to the registration. They do not have the written application for registration. They can appear before the registrar and he simply writes their names on the books. Under that system in Albemarle County alone there were 425 persons put upon the books who never made any written application to the registrar at all. In the city of Charlottesville there were 640 in the year 1920, and in Clarke County 301, in Frederick County 266, and in the entire district there were 2,414 persons registered without the semblance of a written application in the year 1920. It appears that something like 3,000 more had been registered under similar methods previous to that time. That is in the Democratic communities. Do not understand me to charge that in any given precinct the registrar discriminates as between a Republican or a Democratic individual in that precinct. He does not, so far as this record discloses. He does, of course, in some instances, but I mean on a vast scale. The system is more ingenious that that. It is to discriminate between communities where there is a predominant Democratic vote and those communities where there is a predominant Republican vote. For example, take Rockingham County, my home county. There is one magisterial district, known as Stonewall district, in which there are four big voting precincts, and all of them strongly Republican. All of the people in that section of the county are strongly Republican. You can not go into that district and undertake to register without an absolutely meticulous compliance with the very strict letter of the statute and the constitution. The registrar will not register you until you have done what the constitution says, in spirit and in letter. When the constitution of 1904 went into effect in our State and these people were compelled to register in Stonewall district we find that at the precinct of Port Republic in the first election following the total vote was 122, while in 1900, before the constitution went into effect, it was 268. Of those the Republicans lost 125 votes and the Democrats lost 21. In other words, in an overwhelming Republican community they enforced the law up to the letter and debarred all of these people from registering, with the result that the votes that were lost were about four to one. The same thing took place at McGaheysville precinct. In 1900 there were 346 and in 1904 there were 178. At Elkton there were 344 in 1900 and in 1904 there were 189. The Republicans lost 146 and the Democrats lost 41. At Swift Run precinct, a precinct that usually goes 10 to 1 Republican, the vote dropped from 133 to 83, of which the Republicans lost 49 and the Democrats 1. You will see the system now. In those heavily Republican communities they enforced the law right to the letter and barred Republicans from registering on the books.

We can not complain of that, because that is a rigid observance of the election laws of the State. What we do complain of is the fact that they go into Albermarle County and Clarke County and Frederick County and different counties in the district and throw the doors open, putting on everybody that applies and apparently a good many who never applied, but simply had their names written on the books by the registrar.

In 1920 the great opportunity came for the perpetration of these practices. In that year the women were enfranchised for the first time in Virginia. It was apparent in the summer that the election was going to be close in that district, and so, as I pointed out here a minute ago, in Albermarle County and in Clarke County and in Frederick County, over 2,414 persons were put upon the registrar's books who had never made the semblance of an application to register.

They will tell you they were all intelligent people. They were not all intelligent people. They were ordinary people living in rural communities such as our district is mostly made up, probably the same sort of people who live in Rockingham. Hundreds of people can not register, because they can not pass the qualifications in a Republican community. So we found considerably over 2,000 votes on the registration books previous to the election of 1920. They say it happened before 1920. I never attacked a single vote in my notice of contest except those registered immediately previous to the 1920 election. I want to insist again, so far as I can see, the committee is not attempting to override the courts of Virginia, and I never contended that the members of the committee should. Every decision made in this case is based upon the decision of a case in a Virginia court, and they have so repeatedly decided—not our court of appeals, for their is no appeal to the court of appeals in a contested-election case in Virginia. The circuit court is the first and last of the courts of record to which you can go. The circuit courts of Virginia have repeatedly held that where persons' names have been put upon registration books without application to register that the registration is void, and that the person has no right to vote, and that the vote could not be counted, and it can be attacked at any time, even years after. That is the decision which this committee followed in this case. I am trying to sketch for you, gentlemen, the theory of our case.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAUL. I will.

Mr. COCKRAN. Is it contended that these votes which the gentleman says were closely and unfairly scrutinized would have been cast for him if they had been accepted? Has the gentleman any figures to show exactly how many votes he lost by these alleged practices of which he complains?

Mr. PAUL. "Scrutinized"? I do not understand the gentleman.

Mr. COCKRAN. I mean can the gentleman show this House to what extent he was actually entitled to any votes which had been excluded by any of this procedure?

Mr. PAUL. The brief submitted before the committee shows absolutely every vote we contended is illegal, by every precinct. We itemized them one by one.

Mr. COCKRAN. How many of those by any degree of certainty can the gentleman claim should be counted for him?

Mr. PAUL. The committee adopted—there was no proof of the political affiliation of these people. The committee took the only possible method, as I understand it, and I assume the committee in formulating——

Mr. COCKRAN. There are two resolutions here—one declaring the seat vacant and the other declaring this gentleman was elected. Now, what I think the House would like to know is, Upon what basis does the gentleman claim that he had a majority of the votes?

Mr. PAUL. By the exclusion of the votes which were illegal.

Mr. COCKRAN. How does the gentleman know——

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Go ahead. Your time is limited.

Mr. COCKRAN. I think it is safer for the gentleman to go ahead; he can not stand any questions.

Mr. PAUL. I can stand questions. Now, gentlemen, here is the next question: It is stated that the committee threw out certain precincts for illegal registration. I am not, of course, authorized to interpret the mind or purpose of the committee. I know the contention I made before the committee, that wherever the committee could point to a person whose registration was illegal I asked that that illegal individual vote be thrown out, and I never asked that a precinct be eliminated on that account. [Applause.] I assume that the committee followed that. The third and one of the important qualifications of the Virginia election laws was also grossly violated in many precincts. Our constitution provides as a third great primary test of the voter's qualification and literacy that a person that registered since 1904 shall, unless physically unable, prepare and deposit his ballot without aid, on such printed form as the law might prescribe, and any voter registering prior to that date may be aided in preparing his ballot by the officers of the election.

As I said to you a moment ago, our ballot is a secret one in that no publicity is given to it. It is forbidden to give publicity to it before election. The voter must take the ballot and mark it properly without aid or help or written word or gesture, the law says. These were the three tests, the test of the voter's literacy and ability to vote, together with the payment of the poll tax six months before election and registration in conformity to the constitution.

Now, after they had put these persons on the registration books without any application for registration, they took them to the polls on election day, and the judges of election marked all their ballots for them. That happened, too, only in the communities which were Democratic.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes additional to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. PAUL. That happened, too, I say, only in the Democratic communities. In other words, we have Albemarle County, a county which we will admit is strongly Democratic, probably in the ratio of 3 to 1 or 3½ to 1, and there they put on the registration books hundreds and hundreds of persons without any application on their part for registry or any test as to their literacy. The same class of people is barred in the Republican communities. Then you come to the election day, and the judges of election take those persons who are illegally registered—and many of them could not possibly have registered—take them into the polling booths and mark their ballots for them.

I wish you would take these Democratic counties of Frederick, Clarke, and Albemarle and compare them with the conditions in Rockingham, Shenandoah, and Greene—those counties that are looked upon as strongly Republican or where at least the Republicans predominate. It is fraud on the wholesale. It is discrimination between communities, working and accomplishing, nevertheless, quite an effective result.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAUL. Yes; certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. How many Republicans were holding Federal offices in that district at the time of the election?

Mr. PAUL. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that I know of no one who was holding office in my district at the time of this election or indeed for a very few months after the beginning of the Democratic administration on March 4, 1913.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Therefore what has the question of Federal patronage to do with it? What bearing has it?

Mr. PAUL. I can say that it has none. I do not understand that the sitting Member from the seventh district suggested that it did have any. He did not undertake, as I understood it, to involve me in any way with these matters.

I simply want to say this, gentlemen, in regard to throwing out certain precincts here: I insisted and asked that certain precincts in Albemarle County, Frederick County, and Clarke County be eliminated because of certain wholesale violations of the law that had occurred therein. Let me read you, for example, a summary of what was shown as to some of them. We will take the precinct of Scottsville in Albemarle County. Now, mark you, this Albemarle County is the county where the electoral board turned the ballots over to a man who had no more business to have those ballots in his hands than any passer-by along the road. They turned them over to him. They were sealed, and when he delivered the ballots over to the judges of election for use they were unsealed. It is also true that the man to whom they handed them was the active Democratic manager in the campaign that year.

That went to the whole proposition of the votes in Albemarle County. But, in addition to that, in Scottsville the registration books contained the names of 106 persons who had never made the slightest application to register in any way at all. The poll books did not conform to the registration books at all, because many persons were recorded as voting whose names could not be found on the registration books at all. Assistance by judges of election in marking the ballots was given to every person who desired it, or to any person upon whom any of the judges could impress their assistance. It developed that early in the day the judges threw the registration books up on the shelf because they said they were mixed up; and from that time on they used poll-tax lists, and if they could not find them on the poll-tax lists they asked George Robinson whether they were entitled to vote, and if George Robinson said they were they voted. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. Let George do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAUL. In regard to the illegality of the election in this precinct, the contestee produced nine witnesses to combat our contention, and it developed on their own testimony that every one of them was an illegal voter. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER], the chairman of this committee, stated that out of nine contests—I do not know whether they were all before his committee or not—eight Democrats had been seated. I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that it is a great pity to blemish such a splendid record with the dastardly outrage perpetrated or attempted to be perpetrated to-day. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Gentlemen of the House, this is one of the most remarkable cases that I have ever confronted, and the most remarkable, I expect, that this House has ever confronted or will confront. Here is the gentleman who has just spoken, the contestant, asking this House, asking you gentlemen on that side, because you are in the majority, to give him a seat in this Congress, and incidentally $15,000. Of course he cares nothing about that money I am sure (?), but he wants the seat and the honor of being a Member of Congress.

Yet there is not, gentlemen, one scintilla of fraud alleged in this entire election. There is not one charge of the illegal use of money, and I defy the chairman of this committee to show a single line of testimony charging that there was any illegal use of money, charging that any voter was intimidated or attempted to be intimidated, or that any applicant who made application to register was not registered, or that any qualified voter that made application to vote was refused in any precinct in the seventh district of Virginia.

Now is not that a remarkable contest where they are asking you gentlemen to unseat Mr. HARRISON?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Is there any allegation that any citizen was denied any legal right?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Not a single one, and I defy any man to show it. I yield part of my time for any gentleman to take the record and show it, and this applies to the chairman or any Member on his side. There is not a single allegation, I will state to my colleague from Texas, that any man or any woman, white or black, who ever presented himself or herself to register that was not registered, or ever presented himself or herself to a judge of election who was not admitted to vote.

Is not that a remarkable contest? I know some of you gentlemen over there. I think some of you want to be fair. I do not want to make that statement general. No man can take the record, I will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts, and base an honest conviction on it that Tom Harrison ought to go out of this body and that Captain Paul ought to take his seat upon the record here made by Captain Paul himself.

Now gentlemen, I have heard it stated that he who asks equity ought to come into court with clean hands. Here is the contestant Captain Paul, who wants a seat in Congress and incidentally $15,000, who upon his own testimony violated the law of his State in two particulars. First, it is against the law to vote an open ballot, so you claim, and I agree with that contention. If your contention is correct that is against the law, and yet Captain Paul voted an open ballot, spread it out on the table before the judges and bystanders.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Just the same sort of technical violations on which they seek to unseat Mr. Harrison.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Just the same on which the gentleman from Massachusetts is asking to unseat Tom Harrison, on technicalities, the merest irregularities. Paul violated it and he knows it and he dare not deny that he voted an open ballot.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will not yield. I have not much time. I want to tell you some of the facts. If you will yield your mind and it is an open one I will give you some facts that will cause you to cast an honest vote and I believe you want to do right if you can get out from under the crack of the Republican whip.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes. I do not want to mislead you gentlemen over on that side. I have nothing to yield to you on the Republican side. I know that. I know, gentlemen, that the steam roller is all greased and ready.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The very disqualifications that it is claimed would exclude Mr. Harrison are permitted to Mr. Paul.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Absolutely; and that is not all. It is against the law to give aid, suggestion, or memorandum, is it not? You said it was, Mr. DALLINGER. I believe the statute of Virginia says so and the constitution of Virginia says so. Yet here are some blanks, one of which I will place in the RECORD:

FORM OF APPLICATION TO REGISTER.

To ———, Registrar:

I apply to register in ——— precinct, ——— County, Va.
(1) My name is ——— ———.
(2) My age is — years.
(3) I was born at ——— on the — day of ———, 18—.
(4) My residence is ——— and has been for the last two years.
(5) My occupation is that of ——— and has been for the last two years.
(6) I have never voted.

(Signed) ——— ———.

This form can not be used when you go to register.
It is simply to show the manner in which the application must be made out and the facts necessary to state in your application.
Study this form and get familiar with it; you will then be able to write out your application for registration without any difficulty on the blank piece of paper furnished you by the registrar.

And Mr. Paul swore upon the stand that he distributed these blanks.

Mr. VAILE. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. HUDSPETH. No; I will not yield. I could not enlighten you in a thousand years.

Mr. VAILE. And I can not enlighten you.

Mr. HUDSPETH. And you can not enlighten me, a man that looks like you, the man that has the facial expression you exhibit at all times. I never know whether you are laughing at me or whether you are crying for me. No, my friend from Colorado, you can not enlighten me or anyone else. The gentleman from Massachusetts said it is against the law to give aid, suggestion, or memorandum to the applicant to register. Yet Captain Paul distributed these blanks to his friends, and he swears to it in his testimony, a plain violation of the law. I got these very blanks from him when he testified, and he swore that he distributed them. Yet he comes in here and asks you to unseat Tom Harrison. Is that all?

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] talks about the constitution of Virginia and says it is framed for the purpose of perpetuating the Democrats in power, and he talks about Senator CARTER GLASS, that arch political conspirator down there, as the Republicans would want to call him. You remember what he said about it. Well, Col. Henry W. Anderson, a distinguished Republican politician, strutted into this committee; and, by the way, my friends, he is the only man I ever saw in my life who could strut sitting down. [Laughter.] Colonel Anderson denounced this constitution in the vilest terms, saying it was framed by only 47 men, that it was never ratified by the people. Yet the people ratified it time and again, and they ratified it last year, when Colonel Anderson was a candidate, by 60,000 majority against him.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. He denounces that constitution now, and yet several years after its adoption he applauded it.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Let me read you what he said. We have got it right here in black and white. Mr. DALLINGER, let us see what Mr. Paul's spokesman, Col. Henry W. Anderson, said. He was introducing President Taft on October 17, 1908. I am going to read to you, Mr. DALLINGER, what Colonel Anderson said about the constitution of Virginia—the man that you say gave the exposé of the law of Virginia. I want to read to you what he said about this constitution that you denounce and that Mr. Paul denounced, although he violated the law under it.

Mr. DALLINGER. I said it was framed for the purpose of perpetuating the dominant party in power.

Mr. HUDSPETH. You said it was for the purpose of perpetuating the Democrats in power and for the purpose of disfranchising the negro vote. Paul says in his testimony that there are no negro votes in the seventh district—are an infinitesimal number. So you could not disfranchise the negroes if there are none there. That is what Paul said. Let us see what Col. Henry W. Anderson said when he was introducing President Taft. He says:

The reason urged for the constitution of 1902 was that the adjustment of the problems which that instrument sought to settle would leave the people of this State free to divide upon economic questions, and thus increase the influence of Virginia in national affairs and promote the political and industrial progress of her people. The adoption of this constitution was the last step in the work of 40 years, which has placed the institutions of this State upon a sound basis, has assured the supremacy of intelligence in our government, and has opened to the people of all races and all classes the opportunity to reap and enjoy the rewards of good citizenship.

You see he says it would leave the people of this State free, not enslave them to Democracy, but leave them free to divide on economic questions, and assure the supremacy of intelligence in our government, and open to the people of all races—not a discrimination against the negro, as he stated when he addressed the committee, but to open to the people of all races and all classes an opportunity to reap and enjoy the rewards of good citizenship. Does that jibe with his statement before the committee and the statement of Mr. DALLINGER?

Now, my friend DALLINGER says that where a man made no application to register the vote ought to be thrown out, and the precinct.

Mr. DALLINGER. No; I did not say that.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Then I misunderstood you.

Mr. DALLINGER. We have not thrown out any precincts because of illegal registration, not a single one.

Mr. HUDSPETH. But in the report you do assign as a reason for the precincts you threw out that there was no application for registration and defective applications for registration. I will show it to you right here. Mr. DALLINGER in making up his report in order to unseat Harrison throws out certain precincts. Here is the statement made up by Captain Paul, in which he claims these precincts should be thrown out. It is too long to read the list, but he claims they should be thrown out because there was no application taken for registration. In the first report that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] filed, against which Judge MOORE made the point of order, in summing up Mr. Paul's majority they included the precinct of Berryville, which was carried by Mr. Paul. In the report that was actually printed they left that out. They did not need it. They had enough without it. They had just gone ahead in a hodgepodge and taken a certain number of precincts that Tom Harrison carried and thrown them out and elected Paul; and I insert it right here:

4,427	3,565	7,992		1,889	3,194	5,083

The above tabulation contains only those precincts at which there were no applications of any sort, and shows that at these precincts casting 7,992 votes there were 5,083 void registrations. These registrations are so plainly void and constitute such a large percentage of the persons voting that it seems apparent that the entire vote should be thrown out. To these are yet to be added other precincts at which assistance was given registrants to an extent making their applications a complete nonconformity with section 20 of the Constitution, as will appear from other tabulations filed.

But if you are throwing them out because there were no applications taken I want to ask you why you did not throw them out in Lindsay, Shirley, Port Republic, Newport, Berryville, Jolletts, and these other precincts? There were no applications taken there. Why did not he include them in the list when you went to make it up?

I want to tell you gentlemen how they figured it. They first started in for the purpose of throwing out Mr. Harrison and they agreed with the minority of the committee that the defective applications stood alongside of where they made no application. They found that would increase the Harrison majority by 622 and you could not get the $15,000 and Harrison seat that way. That would not do. Then they grouped a lot of precincts together where Mr. Harrison had carried them and threw them out and in that vote of the precincts that you threw out, Mr. Harrison got 3,900 votes and Paul got 2,200. This may not be the exact figures, but close to it. If they were thrown out on the ground that no applications were required, why did they not throw out the other precincts? Because he did not need them; he had enough without them.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. Does the law of Virginia permit a correction of the registration?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes, it provides that it can be corrected in only one way, that is that the registrar can go before the district judge and ask that it be purged, 30 days before the election, or any three citizens, or the contestant could have done so. The contestant did not do it and never has done it until this good hour. He ran in 1916 under the same system that was in vogue then and has been in vogue since 1902. He never has asked to have the registration purged. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] states that he was not a candidate in 1918, but his friends placed his name on the ballot. True he was fighting in the Argonne, but he was not fighting in the Argonne on the 7th of last November, he was fighting in Piedmont Valley and in the valley of the Shenandoah for an office which he lacked over 5,000 ballots of getting. Under the same system, with the same registration books that he has complained of, he has never asked that they be purged in the way that the law directs. He never has asked it up to this good hour. Mr. Harrison snowed him under by over 5,000. Now Captain Paul says there was a strict observance of the law in Albemarle and Shenandoah. He says that they observed the law strictly. Let me call to your mind, Captain Paul and the gentleman from Massachusetts, chairman of this committee, that in the recent election these counties went as strongly Democratic as any other county in the district. This seventh district of Virginia was never Republican and it never will be. But, you gentlemen are making it stronger Democratic by your high-handed procedure in this case.

What do you base it on? You say you will carry it in the next election, and as far as that goes you Republicans will say anything, but you have nothing to back it up.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Can the gentleman tell us how many votes they disfranchised?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Five thousand.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Is it not 7,608? There were 25,994 cast and they gave 18,308 under the reform procedure.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes, the gentleman is right; it was over 7,000. Under this constitution, under the same system, the ninth district, until this report was made taking away the rights of the people of the seventh district—the ninth district had been Republican during Mr. SLEMP's time, and his father before him—and I do not know but that his grandfather may have held the office. Anyway it has been in the Slemp family a lifetime; but a Republican will never tarnish the office again. It has been, ever since I have watched the history of Virginia, until you gentleman wanted this $15,000. That is all there is to it; you are attempting to take away the rights of the people down there and prostitute their will. Why do you say Mr. Harrison's majority was so small? I will tell you: They had a hot contest in 1920 in the Democratic primaries over the liquor question. You know what bitterness is always engendered by the liquor question. One candidate, Mr. Leedy, was in favor of light wines and beer and Mr. Harrison was in favor of the Volstead Act. There was a great fight and much bitterness was engendered, and it was carried into the general election and there was almost as great a landslide against the Democrats as we discovered against the Republicans on the 7th of last November. These things detracted from the Democratic vote. But, gentlemen, when they read the report of this committee they came back into the faith of their fathers and the good old Democratic fold. In the very counties Mr. Paul says there was a strict observance of the law there was the largest Democratic gain.

Now, in one instance where the registrar sent a woman back to get educated, as Mr. Paul says, I asked him about this and he said he educated them on the blank I exhibited, so that they could vote, although it was in violation of the law. They told this woman to go back and be educated, and she did not come back. That is the only person that made application to register that was not registered in this entire record. You know it, every man on that side knows it, and every member of the committee knows it.

Talk about irregularities; the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] threw out certain precincts because the ballot box was not kept in sight of the people. That occurred at Edinburg. It is testified that the ballot box was not at all times in public view; furthermore, why did you not tell the House that some gentlemen took tickets and went out and distributed them in the street to his henchmen. This was a Republican up at Edinburg. That is the only place I recall, just a mere technicality, no fraud alleged, no illegal use of money; but they did not have the box in sight all the time. Now, at Charlottesville the women had been enfranchised just before the election. The testimony is that the Republicans had been instructed to vote early, for if they did not vote early the Democrats would be in line and keep them out. The Republican women went to the polls and the Democratic and Republican judges had to request them to leave and get out.

They were nearly all Republican ladies. That is the testimony. Why do you not give them the record? I call the attention of the chairman to the testimony. They have been talking about aid. If you registered prior to 1904 and were on the permanent roll in Virginia you could get aid, if you desired. There were many registered at that time. The testimony is that in a number of precincts—I could not take the time to enumerate—the Republican and Democratic judges insisted upon the request of the Republican Party leaders in giving aid and assistance to voters. At one precinct, Fishers Hill, I believe it was, there was a Republican judge and two Democratic judges. One of the Democratic judges said that they were going to conduct this election according to law; that they were not going to give any aid. Then the other Democratic judge and the Republican judge said if that were the case, if they were going to conduct it in that way, they might just as well close the polls at that time, because they had always given aid and assistance, and they overruled the Democratic judge and did give that assistance. That is a part of this record. It shows that out of 2,400 votes that Paul claimed were illegal on account of no registration or that were there with the defective applications, he got a large majority of the benefit from them. That is this record, and I defy any man on that committee to go into it and get up here and state differently.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Did not Mr. Paul state before the gentleman's committee that he did not lose anything by these irregular votes?

Mr. HUDSPETH. He did. The statute provides that you must make application. I think that is mandatory, regardless of the able decision rendered by Judge Christian in the Suffolk local option case. I think it is mandatory that you must make out the application in your own handwriting without aid or suggestion or memorandum. The statute requires that sort of application, and that should be made. There were a number of defective applications where the man would say that he was of age and had never voted before and did not state on the application where he lived. There were numbers of those. If you took those defective applications, and where there were no applications at all, and you were to throw them out—and if you threw out one you would have to throw out the other—in other words, if you adhered to the strict letter of the law in the great State of Virginia it would increase Tom Harrison's vote by 622, and you know it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman has stated correctly, because I know the record, that there is no taint of fraud shown, no willful impropriety, in the conduct of this election.

Mr. HUDSPETH. No.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. But that the result is based on a charge that there were technical irregularities. When the case started the charge stressed was that there was a failure to pay the capitation tax, but they did not stand to that.

Mr. HUDSPETH. No, because it did not give them enough votes to throw Tom Harrison out and permit Paul to embezzle the seat.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. They changed their footings.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes. That is the reason they run away from that charge. Of course we are all agreed that the law requires a poll-tax payment, and as they had not paid the poll tax the law says that they are not entitled to vote. To adhere strictly to the law in that respect as I recall would have increased Paul's vote by 62 votes. If all the votes claimed to have been cast for Harrison and for Paul where they did not pay the capitation tax were thrown out it would have increased the vote of Mr. Paul by 62. But he needed 448. Then they had to go out and throw out a lot of precincts helter skelter, without rhyme or reason. Paul must have the seat and the Republican Party a part of the $15,000 as I believe. For instance, they threw out a lot of precincts in Tom Harrison's home county, but every one that they threw out was one that Harrison carried. They did not throw out any that Paul carried where there were some irregularities—not one precinct. Yet the chairman says that they want to be fair in this contest.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know, of course I have my own ideas, and my idea is that I think I see the steam roller coming. As I understand it, they figured that they would pull this thing off two or three days before the 4th of March, but they thought that it would not do to go back down there to the people of Virginia in that way, that that would be such a high-handed procedure so flagrant and raw that they better give two or three months and let Paul sit here a little while, and give a show of decency and having earned his salary. I have great respect and admiration for a man who wore the uniform of his country and fought across the seas for its preservation. That commands the admiration of every red-blooded American, but, Mr. Speaker, that does not entitle him to come back here and filch from the people of Virginia a seat in Congress that they have chosen Harrison to represent, and he knows it. However, you have the majority now, and I want to congratulate the majority on one thing, and say to them, that this is the only way in this country, now and this year, that you can win an election for Congress. The only way to do it is the way you are proceeding now. I think that you are going to follow the steering committee, I think that you are going to follow the crack of the whip, and I want to say to you, Captain Paul, that Tom Harrison came into this body with his head up and he will go out with his head up, and he will come back after the 4th of next March with his head up.

He will be able to look the people of Virginia in the face and to look his constituents in the face, and his children in future years will be able to point with pride to the fact that their father was a duly elected Representative from the State of Virginia; but I want to say, Captain, if you have any children, that I doubt very much if they will ever have the temerity to refer to the fact that you were a Member of this Congress. I doubt it very seriously. I doubt if they will ever refer to that fact, or that your grandchildren will, if you have any.

Let me say in conclusion that I have practiced a little in the courts of my country. I have practiced on the frontiers before good courts and bad courts, and in a few instances before kangaroo judges. I have practiced in Mexico over on the other side of the Rio Grande, where in times past the man who had the most political influence won his case in court. While I never appeared before him, I had acquaintance with the celebrated justice of the peace, Roy Bean—the law west of the Pecos. You have seen his name mentioned in western stories many times and in books and newspapers. He was the man who tried people for horse stealing and sent them to the penitentiary or started them on their way. I have known of his decisions where he has divorced people from one another and married them over again at $50 a shot. I remember one decision where a Chinaman fell off the Pecos bridge. He had $50 in his jeans and besides carried a six shooter. Judge Bean had his body brought before him and fined him $50 for carrying a gun.

But I have never seen as great an outrage, such a pernicious verdict, such a gross perversion of justice perpetrated by this or any other body—judicial, semijudicial, legislative, or otherwise—and I trust I will never see it again so long as God permits me to live. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be notified one minute before my time expires. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 11 minutes remaining.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, in bringing this debate to a close I want to reiterate what I said at the beginning, that if there is any one thing which I have tried to do as a Member of Congress it is to have these contested-election cases determined absolutely upon their merit—upon the law and the facts—regardless of any partisan or personal considerations. There is no reason, with the overwhelming majority which we have in this Congress, why we should unseat or seat any man for partisan reasons. The only question here is, who was elected in the seventh Virginia district not in 1922 but in 1920? It is to that question and to that question alone which your Committee on Elections No. 1 devoted its attention, and no matter how you figure it out Captain Paul was elected a Member of Congress from that district. [Applause.] Now, I wish to correct one or two misapprehensions raised by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH], first, in regard to the printed form of application which he says was used by the Republicans. In the Republican parts of this district this constitution which gives the control of all the registration and election machinery entirely into the hands of one party—so justly criticized by that great Democrat, Mr. Bryan—was enforced in all its rigor and with all its little details and at the same time was not enforced in the Democratic parts of the district. The result was that in those Republican parts of the district the Republicans had to go to school. They knew they would be held up to the strict provisions of the constitution, and so the Republican committee prepared these applications which the gentleman would have you believe were taken into the registration booths by the Republican voters. Not at all. They had them outside so that they could learn by heart what they would be required to do and how they must make out the application to the registrar.

In other words, they committed this form to memory so that they could go into the registration booths before a Democratic registrar and make application before him without assistance, suggestion, or memorandum from any person whatsoever. And the Republican committee in distributing these forms of application have in great big letters at the bottom of it this injunction, "Can not be used when you go to register." Yet the gentleman from Texas would have you believe that they took these forms in the registration booths.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will permit, that form is simply a copy of the constitution of the State.

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly; a copy of the registration provisions of the constitution that they studied before they went in. Now, in the Democratic parts of the district, particularly in Albermarle County, the Democratic registrars put men and women on the voting list who never filed any application whatever, and that fact was drawn out reluctantly from these hostile witnesses. They were asked under oath if they had required written applications, and they knew that if they said "yes" they would be asked to produce them. As Judge McLemore well said in the Virginia case, if the Virginia constitution is not mandatory——

Mr. GILBERT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. I can not yield. The registrar might sit in his own home and put men and women on the voting list. There was no way of finding out who these illegal voters were at the election of 1920. Although the law provided that they must post a list of registered voters, these Democratic officials neglected to do it and there was no way you could find out who these illegal voters were until after the election took place.

Do not let any man on either side of the House misunderstand this situation. We eliminated no precinct because of illegal registration, absolutely none, and without eliminating a single precinct, but simply deducting the illegal votes pro rata, on the law and the facts Captain Paul is elected by 1,352 majority. [Applause.] We did, however, as a matter of justice and of right, following the precedents of Congress, reject the vote of those precincts where we found in the conduct of the election such a gross disregard of all the safeguards put in the constitution and laws of Virginia around the right to vote, the preparation of ballots before election, the secrecy of the ballots during the election, or the counting of the ballots after election, or all of them, that it could not be said that there was a legal election in those precincts. Oh, my friends, I am not here to divulge any of the secrets of my committee, but I know that the three Democratic members of this committee know at the bottom of their hearts that there was not a legal election in many of those precincts, and that Judge Harrison was not elected a Member of this House. What we did was this: We found on the law and the facts that certain precincts ought to be thrown out; that certain illegal votes in the other precincts should be deducted pro rata, in accordance with congressional precedents, and we found that Captain Paul was elected by a majority of 1,556. We then for the moment disregarded the misconduct of the election and did not throw any precinct out, but left all of them in, and, as counsel of the contestee insisted all through the record, we confined both parties to the names mentioned in their pleadings, and Captain Paul was still elected.

Then we deducted the defective applications that were actually proved to be defective, and Captain Paul was still elected. Then we admitted a lot of defective applications that were not mentioned in the pleadings that both parties put in, where they were actually defective—and there was testimony that the applicants had actually voted at the election—and still Captain Paul was elected.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. In other words, you gave the sitting Member the benefit of every doubt?

Mr. DALLINGER. Absolutely; just as I gave him the benefit of the doubt when he appeared before the committee. I have served with him in four Congresses. I know him. I did not know the other man. But, Mr. Speaker, no personal considerations should enter into this matter. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Harrison] has gotten up here before you and spent half his time in attacking a Member of this House from another district for something that he says occurred in 1921 in another part of the State. It has nothing to do with this case. The question of whether Judge Harrison is an honest man or a pleasant companion has nothing to do with the case. It is a case solely of who was elected a Representative in Congress from the seventh Virginia district at the November election in 1920.

Something has been said about technicalities. Let me call your attention to the fact, shown on page 402 of Rowell's Digest of Contested Election Cases, that in the Forty-eighth Congress, in the case of O'Farrell versus Paul, a Democratic House unseated Captain Paul's father, not because certain men had not paid their poll tax, as required by the Virginia election law, and the money had not gone into the State treasury, but because some particular official had not given them a tax receipt.

I ask you today to give this man, whom you may not have met before this day, who fought for his country in the Argonne during the World War, a fair and square deal, which the Democratic election officials of the State of Virginia have refused to give him. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is the gentleman going to cut off debate now?

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion ordering the previous question.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 170, noes 84.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of ordering the previous question will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 203, nays 96, answered "present" 1, not voting 130, as follows:

YEAS—203.

Chamber of Commerce.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ASTORIA, OREG., December 13, 1922.

Senator C. L. MCNARY,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

On Friday morning last the entire business part of the city was totally destroyed by the most devastating fire in the history of the Pacific coast. Streets, water system, sewer system, and fire system in the entire devastated district are totally destroyed. Over 5,000 citizens have suffered loss of their entire property and are without employment or means of subsistence. Business is paralyzed and the city wholly without adequate means either to furnish employment or sustain its citizens who have so suffered. Contributions have been secured from coast cities and from individuals, but this can not be employed to rehabilitate the devastated district. In order to rebuild it will be necessary to fill by dredging the entire part of the city destroyed. Practically all of the streets and sewers destroyed were constructed on and under viaducts and cost assessed against the property. Such assessments have not been paid, which, together with the enormous loss sustained, makes it impossible to reconstruct. The situation is serious and appalling. Unless the city receives immediate Government aid it seems that it will cease to function and bankruptcy of its people, heretofore solvent, will result. The disaster, not counting loss of life, equals that caused by the tidal wave which devastated Galveston and the San Francisco holocaust of 1906. We deem the situation so critical that we feel it is necessary to appeal to the Congress of the United States for immediate aid, such as was granted Galveston and San Francisco. It is believed that it will require at least $3,000,000 to afford anyway near the adequate relief.

JAMES BREMNER,
Mayor of Astoria Citizens' Executive Committee,
By COL. W. S. GILBERT,
Astoria Chamber of Commerce,
By L. D. DRAKE.

PORTLAND, OREG., December 14, 1922.

Hon. C. L. MCNARY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Our board of directors and leading business men most earnestly appeal to our Oregon delegation for the maximum support possible from Congress for Astoria in recovering from devastation that has effaced practically entire business district of city. Per capita loss on population or wealth basis is apparently greater than in other disasters that have received Federal aid of substantial amounts. Business interests of city with high percentage of population seem to face bankruptcy and perhaps municipal ruin. Bonding power for municipal improvements had reached very maximum and much of these are effaced with debts remaining and a staggering reconstruction immediately compelled. Destitution of people losing all is being covered in way of food, clothing, and shelter through Portland contributions and from near-by sources, but such aid does not extend to vital requirements of city's future. We urge that all members of our delegation give most serious study to ways and means of securing congressional action in aid of Astoria. Generous contributions being made from all parts of Northwest and more distant points, but all this not sufficient for great future effort to save city.

O. W. MIELKE,
President Portland Chamber of Commerce.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

A bill (S. 4191) for the relief of Harry E. Fiske; and

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 257) authorizing a disarmament conference with governments with which the United States has diplomatic relations; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business has closed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12817.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. President, I have received a telegram from the Colorado Farmers' Congress protesting against the passage of the so-called ship subsidy bill. I send the telegram to the Secretary's desk and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The telegram was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

[Western Union telegram.]

FORT COLLINS, COLO., December 15, 1922.

Senator SAMUEL D. NICHOLSON,
Washington, D. C.:

Colorado Farmers' Congress in thirteenth annual session adopted following resolution, which is submitted to you for earnest consideration:

"Whereas there is pending in Congress a bill known as the ship subsidy bill: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we do not believe this bill will in any way benefit agriculture but that it will only be a further drain upon our national finances.

"Resolved, That we urge our Representatives in Congress to oppose this legislation and that telegrams be sent to our Senators advising of our action."

I. L. GOTTHELF,
President Colorado Farmers' Congress.

RELIEF OF AGRICULTURAL CONDITIONS.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, only a few days ago the President of the United States came before Congress and delivered what might be called his annual message as to the condition of national affairs. In that message he took occasion to stress the deplorable condition of agriculture throughout the country and recommended remedial legislation that would aid the farmer in solving his present problems and provide for him an adequate credit system to enable him to take care of his affairs in the future.

Subsequently to the President's address the Committee on Agriculture, being keenly alive to the terrible conditions which exist, have been holding hearings on different bills looking toward carrying out the purposes of Congress in that respect.

There have come before our committee in the last week representatives of the grain growers and cattle raisers of the West and of the woolen and wheat and cotton producers of the South and West. Those representatives were men of affairs; they were men who had been in the midst of the terrible calamity which overtook the agricultural and stock-raising interests of the country when, without warning, the price of farm products and of the products of the cattle raisers had gone to a point which meant bankruptcy. There was no question of the cost of production; there was simply an absolute slaughter of the values involved in farm production and in cattle raising.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator from South Carolina ought also to include in the class of men who appeared before our committee representatives of several hundred so-called country banks, in addition to the other classes mentioned by the Senator.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for that suggestion. I wish to state that there did appear before us also representatives of innumerable country banks who indicated that, as a necessary result, the collapse of the security which they themselves had been handling in the past had practically bankrupted them, leaving those banks absolutely without means of further financing the farmers of the country.

I am not going to take this occasion to give my opinion as to what has brought about this condition of affairs. The curse causeless does not count. Some of us know the cause. We were informed that the collapse of prices was a natural and necessary result of the war; that deflation and the restriction of credits and the denial of any financial accommodation to those who stood in the midst of ruin and bankruptcy was essential in order that we might get back to "normalcy" and to prewar conditions as they obtained in a normal way; and that prices were too high and that, therefore, they had to be brought down.

Mr. President, for a while there were some people, including even farmers, who believed that to be true. We would have believed it more readily had we had evidences that other business in this country, not so fundamental and not so necessary as agriculture and stock raising, had suffered in proportion. There is not a Senator on this floor who does not know that unless agriculture is relieved there is going to be produced in this country a condition that will be infinitely worse than that which now obtains. Hands are leaving the southern farms by the thousands and seeking industrial employment; they are leaving the wheat fields of the West. One of the witnesses who came before our committee exhibited a newspaper published in his county, which heretofore has been one of the most prosperous and productive counties in his State, in which there were six pages of nonpariel type advertising farms for sale for taxes. That showing can be duplicated in practically every county in the United States. Producers of grain of all sorts, of corn, cattle, cotton, and wool, are distressed to the point of bankruptcy, even to the extent of having taken away from them the very basis of their industry, the land itself.

In view of that condition being established, I wish to read to the Senate an item published in the Washington Post of this morning, showing conclusively that this condition was not universal and that the necessity for these measures and the consequent lowering of prices which the farmer received was not general; indeed, there was no corresponding reduction in the prices of commodities which others had to sell. I am going to read the item as it appears in the Post:

BOSTON, December 15 (by the Associated Press).—Another batch of increased capitalizations, with consequent stock dividends, brought further Christmas distributions representing many millions of dollars to stockholders in New England corporations to-day. To the large sums already diverted from surplus and other companies there were added several actions of recapitalization and disbursement that ran into many hundreds per cent.

The Browne & Sharpe Manufacturing Co., of Providence, making machine tools, filed with the secretary of State notice that its capital stock had been increased from $100,000 to $16,000,000. A stock dividend of 16,000 per cent was voted to dispose of the new stock.

WILL DISTRIBUTE 1,500 PER CENT.

Stockholders of the Wanskuck Co., manufacturers of worsted—

In other words, manufacturing the clothing that people wear—voted at Providence to-day to increase the capital stock from $500,000 to $8,000,000. They voted also to distribute among themselves the new stock as a 1,500 per cent stock dividend.

The York Manufacturing Co., of Saco, Me., making cotton cloths, by action of the directors, proposed to the stockholders a doubling of the $1,800,000 capitalization with a 100 per cent stock dividend.

The Oakdale (R. I.) Worsted Co., after increasing its stock from $60,000 to $540,000, distributed the difference in the form of an 800 per cent stock dividend.

The Merrimac Woolen Co. increased its capital stock from $750,000 to $1,000,000 and provided for a stock dividend from capital and surplus, the exact amount of which was not announced.

The New Bedford Cotton Mills Corporation declared a stock dividend of 200 per cent, increasing its capital from $350,000 to $1,050,000 to make it possible.

The article continues further along the same line, but I have read sufficient.

In the face of the universal suffering of the agricultural interests of this country and of the country banks comes this startling statement that one company made 16,000 per cent. I do not know during what number of years that profit was accumulated, but that announcement means that they lived and moved and had their being and created a surplus which, under the decision of the court, in order to avoid taxation, enabled them to declare a stock dividend of 16,000 per cent. Then I presume that the poor, distressed, and helpless woolen manufacturers by whom we were invoked here to pass an emergency tariff in order to protect the woolgrower from the inroads of foreign competition could only make 1,500 per cent. He could not get 16,000 per cent; he could only declare a stock dividend of 1,500 per cent.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator just a minute?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. Here is one woolen firm up in Massachusetts that declared a 3,333 per cent dividend the other day—another one of those poor industries.

Mr. SMITH. I will just read this item as it is handed to me. I do not know from what paper it is taken.

Mr. CARAWAY. The New York Times.

Mr. SMITH. It reads:

BOSTON, December 14.—Stock-dividend declarations by textile mills continued to-day. A new high-water mark in these increases of capitalization from which the distribution is made was set by the Davis & Brown Woolen Co., of Uxbridge, a relatively small concern, which expanded its capital stock from $15,000 to $500,000, to make possible a dividend of 3,333 per cent.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator let me ask him a question?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Are these some of the companies that are engaged in the production of woolens, on which last summer a very high and excessive tariff was placed in order to protect them from failure?

Mr. SMITH. Why, certainly. These are the suffering individuals whom we have to pension. Do you suppose a man is going to sit down and be satisfied with a miserable 3,333 per cent dividend when another one is making 16,000 per cent? You have no right to have any such unequal situation in this country.

Mr. President, how long do you suppose the American people are going to tolerate a condition sanctioned by our Government such as is revealed by this manifestation here to-day? They come here and ask for protection, when even under the Underwood bill this stupendous amount must have been accumulated; because, while God knows they got enough, it is not reasonable to suppose they have made 3,333 per cent in anticipation of the operation of the present tariff law. This was made under the operation of the Underwood bill; but if, under the so-called slight protection of the Underwood bill, they made this much, what in the name of heaven can they make under the present wall around this country?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The highest woolen schedule that has ever been enacted into law.

Mr. SMITH. The highest that has ever been known since Schedule K became a stench in the nostrils of the American people.

The light will filter in after a bit. I said a moment ago that curse causeless did not come; and the American people will know that the curse that is on them is the control of our commercial and banking interests for the specially favored few. How in the name of heaven was it possible for a tool-manufacturing concern to make 16,000 per cent if the conditions under which they worked were fair and normal and open to competition? How could a woolen manufacturer make 3,333 per cent, how could he accumulate it if the conditions under which he worked and distributed his wares were open to competition, and it was the natural result of the law of supply and demand? This monstrous condition has arisen from the machinations of men who knew exactly what they were doing.

The existence of twenty-five billions of American bonds, bearing the stupendous interest of 4½ per cent, constituted a temptation too great for them to withstand of bringing about a condition where these bonds would have to be sacrificed and go into the hands of those who for generations to come could on every million dollars invested clip interest to the amount of $40,000 from the taxpayers of this country; and who pays these taxes? The very distressed crowd that is appearing before our committees, because under the decisions of the courts the organizations and the corporations can escape taxation by taking refuge behind stock dividends, and robbing the Government, as the collector of internal revenue has intimated, of $1,400,000,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. May I ask the Senator from South Carolina what class of people is opposing this relief that the farmers are asking?

Mr. SMITH. So far as we have had any intimation of opposition—and it has come to me not officially, because they have not appeared before our committee in rebuttal of the plea of the agriculturists—it is made up of the very class of men who are declaring these dividends.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to ask the Senator another question. I heard it conceded in the Banking and Currency Committee this morning by a witness of great intelligence, the owner, as I was told, of some forty-odd agricultural publications, that the farmers, even at this time, while other classes of people in this country are making such enormous profits, are not netting enough to pay the actual cost of production. Is not that conceded?

Mr. SMITH. Why, Mr. President, that is known to every man, not only to the man who is engaged in agriculture but to the local country banker who is financing him and to the merchants who are selling him his supplies. They all know that he is not even now making the cost of production, while he has a load of debt, incurred by the crime of deflation during 1920 and 1921, that he will not wipe out in a natural lifetime. I say to the Senator from North Carolina, a practical farmer as he is, that the debts that he and I were forced to incur by virtue of that will wipe out any reasonable profit that we may make for the next five or six years if we make a normal crop and get a normal price for it.

Mr. SIMMONS. A longer time than that.

Mr. SMITH. That is the condition that confronts us. If we were to make average crops now, and were to get a reasonable profit, it would take five or six years, or maybe longer, to accumulate profits enough to wipe out the indebtedness of 1920 and 1921; and yet here in 1922 the favored children of finance and government come out and declare a dividend of from 3,000 per cent to 16,000 per cent, and when we make an effort to get a financial system that will in some degree adapt itself to the peculiar conditions of agriculture we are met with the cry, "Class legislation!"

Mr. President, it amazes me to hear men of intelligence, to hear those, some of whom are the dispensers and purveyors of our news, declaring that any legislation in favor of the farmer is class legislation. Agriculture is not a class. It is fundamental. It is basic. With whom does the farmer enter into competition? When we speak of class, the ordinary acceptation of that is one class in a business pitted against another class in like business. Agriculture is fundamental. It is basic. It is as essential as fuel and water to an engine. The necessity for getting the fuel and the necessity for getting the water are prerequisites to the running of the engine. The necessity for agriculture is a prerequisite to every business, the Government included; and yet when we come and make the showing that agriculture has been so discriminated against that it is impossible for those engaged in it to live except under the conditions of peons and slaves, we are met with the sneer that "You are attempting class legislation," when 55 per cent of all the current wealth of this Nation, over twelve billions, is produced annually by agriculture, and according to statistics something like 35 to 40 per cent of the deposits in our banks are deposited there from the proceeds of agriculture; and yet the amount that the farmer gets to carry on his business as compared with other businesses is less than 2 per cent.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SMITH. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I suggest to the Senator, then, that in order to revive business in the general sense in which that term is used, the way to do it is first to revive agriculture?

Mr. SMITH. It is absolutely essential.

Mr. President, I am happy on account of one condition. Thank God, we are not dealing to-day with the same class of agriculturists that the world dealt with in the generations that have gone. The facilities for education, the distribution of knowledge in the form of current events in the newspapers, the telephone, the telegraph, and easy transportation, have made the man in "the sticks" as cosmopolitan as the man that walks your streets. He knows the laws and rules that govern economics, and he is going to have his proportionate share of the wealth that he produces. If we are wise we will begin now, in this Congress, to deal with him in precisely the same manner that we deal with what we are pleased to call commerce. We have established a banking system that is at the beck and call of what we call commerce—liquid assets; 30, 60, and 90 day paper—to meet all the requirements, and we have provided in the law that is on the statute books now that in case there should be a dearth of circulating medium based upon a certain gold reserve and commodity value there might be issued clearing-house certificates, known as Federal reserve notes, against the deposited wealth of this country.

We hailed it with delight, because for the first time in the history of this country commodities were recognized by the Government as the basis of the issuance of a temporary form of quickly diffusible currency. From May, 1920, up until a few months ago, that source of relief to the people was practically arbitrarily shut. Where it was not arbitrarily shut, the fear of a repetition of what had occurred kept men from embarking in the business once again under conditions which ruined them. They are afraid to attempt any extensive line for the fear that the like calamity might befall them.

Now we have come to the point where the country says, "You must show us. You promised us we could not have a panic." You can name it what you please, but in what condition is agriculture to-day? If it were not for such revelations as this I might suppose we were all practically in the same condition, but when you know the condition in which the producers of this country are, and then boldly have the declaration of a 16,000 per cent dividend the contrast is amazing.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. OWEN. What the Senator from South Carolina is describing as a panic has all the effect of a panic, because it is an industrial depression of the most serious character. When the reserve act was presented to the Senate as a bill I pointed out that while it would prevent financial panic in the ordinary sense, it would not prevent an industrial depression. What has taken place is an industrial depression, infinitely emphasized by the action of the Federal Reserve Board in directing, first, the contraction of credits by the large New York banks on their call loans on stocks and bonds, following that up by having the Federal reserve banks withdraw the lines of credit which they had extended to the banks of the country and using their influence with the banks of the country to restrict credits. When they did, it had the effect of bringing the market prices down below the cost of production, and brought on a ruinous condition which has all the effect of a panic, although it might not be described as an actual financial panic.

Mr. SMITH. When one contemplates the result of this condition, he may not fully know the minutiæ or the means instituted to bring it about, but he does know that there seemed to be, and, according to the Comptroller of the Currency, there was, a greater volume of redemption funds than ever before, a greater volume of gold in this country than we had ever had. Some estimate that our 12 regional banks hold up to almost one-half of the gold available in the world for monetary purposes. I do not know just what percentage of the world's available gold supply we do hold, but I know that it is far and away in excess of any legal requirements for reserve purposes. I do know that there was the possibility of issuing enough currency to relieve any situation, because we went through the acid test during the war, when there was a call upon us for billions of dollars to carry on that war. But let the condition be what it may, agriculture is dying, while manufacturers are declaring from 3,000 to 16,000 per cent dividends.

I have no quarrel with the manufacturing interests of the country. I come to the place where it is made possible to enter my protest against any system which would allow the universal death, ruin, and stagnation of agriculture and stock raising, while such incalculable profits as these are made. Congress should see to it that a financial system is inaugurated or the present one so amended, that agriculture will have the same opportunity to finance itself as other business has to finance itself.

I understand that one of our cooperative concerns, just started with bright hopes, has been confronted with the fact that the condition upon which it got money from the War Finance Corporation was that under the contract they must sell one-eighth of their yearly production each month. What man sitting before me could imagine a more suicidal condition than that, a cooperative company, dependent upon the product it holds as the basis of its loan, making a contract that it will dispose of one-eighth of its holdings each month? All a man who desires to get it has to do, if he has control of the market, is to fix the price at the time, because one-eighth has to come on the market.

In passing the War Finance Corporation act we provided that agricultural products might have a rediscount for 12 months through their cooperative market, and if by some mistake or other they did sign a contract which would call upon them to dispose of one-eighth of their holdings each month, we of the Senate ought to rise up and give them relief now by saying that in spite of the contract, what they hold should not be disposed of until the price shows a reasonable profit upon the cost of production.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, in connection with the statement the Senator makes about the requirement of the sale of one-eighth of the cotton each month, I assert that they have nullified the law by their order, and are providing that the loan shall be for only 30 days for a part of the crop. Is not that true?

Mr. SMITH. That is the effect of it. I have called attention to this condition for the reason that, even with the hope we had in rehabilitating the War Finance Corporation, and writing the act as carefully as some of us thought it could be written under the circumstances, amending it as we thought necessary to relieve the situation, we are met with an arbitrary demand that the articles shall be put upon the market, contract or no contract, which is just as bad on the producers as the old system.

What we anticipated, and what the farmers of this country have a right to demand, is that when a farmer borrows on his product and pays the interest, and the commodity he puts up is worth the loan at the expiration of the loan, he should have an opportunity to rediscount it until such time as he gets a profit.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, can the Senator recall any provision in the War Finance Corporation act, as revised and enlarged, which confers power upon the board controlling that system to fix the time when the farmer shall sell his product?

Mr. SMITH. I do not recall any such provision. Of course, the whole idea was that as we had limited it, against the protest of some Senators, to banks, trust companies, and farm organizations, eliminating the individual, we had made it possible, if conditions did not warrant the settling of the account at that time, for a renewal of the loan and an extension of the time, if the collateral was all right and the interest paid, despite any contract which you might make or I might make that we would dispose of one-eighth of our holdings each month.

Under the terms of the bill itself, relief could be given if there were a waiver of even that contract by mutual agreement, because the object was to give relief, and if these cooperating societies say, "We need an extension of the time to give relief, and an extension of the contract," they are entitled to have it.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to his colleague?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. I was called out of the Chamber and did not hear all of my colleague's speech. I understand that he spoke in reference to the cooperative market associations disposing of some of their cotton.

Mr. SMITH. I mentioned that incidentally.

Mr. DIAL. While it may be true that the cooperative associations have not sold very much, is it not also true that a great many of the producers have sold their entire crops?

Mr. SMITH. It is.

Mr. DIAL. A great deal more than one-twelfth of the production has been sold each month. All we desire is that the crop should be marketed in an orderly way, and that means that if it takes 12 months to produce it and 12 months to manufacture it, the grower should be allowed 12 months in which to market it.

Mr. SMITH. That is neither here nor there, for the reason that the man outside of the corporation took his chances. These cooperative societies were organized to try to protect the industry, and we put the cooperative societies in the act, and therefore it seems to me that they are entitled, despite any specific contract, to have whatever relief the act can give them.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, does not the Senator from South Carolina think that the intent of Congress, in establishing this corporation and conferring upon it the power to loan to farmers and to farm cooperative associations, was to enable the farmer and these associations to market their crops in an orderly way, and, if necessary, to hold their products until they could at least get something approximating the cost of production; and that, having that general line of policy in view, when we, in order to carry it out, provided that they might advance money to farmers and cooperative institutions upon 12 months' maturity, with the privilege of extension, it was the clear intent and purpose of Congress that that board should not attempt to exercise an authority which would defeat that purpose by forcing the farmer to sell before conditions justified him in selling?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, if this is to be the policy, the last case is as bad as the first, or worse. I have said what I have presented this morning in order to call the attention of the public to the refutation of the plea that this drastic contraction of credit was unavoidable, and that it affected all alike.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] has defined the situation. We had a commodity panic, and a money inflation. The money was here, necessarily here, and if credits were denied, it was hoarded somewhere; it was here in volume.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, when commerce is paralyzed by the contraction of credits the currency is no longer required in such volume and it automatically flows back into the Federal reserve agents' hands, because it is costing money to hold idle currency. It therefore goes back for the purpose of saving the interest on that idle currency. A great harm was done in contracting credit, which was deliberately done as a fixed policy and persisted in over the protest of many men, including myself. I made 10 different efforts, I remind the Senator, between January 1, 1920, and July 1, 1920, to prevent that policy from being carried out, but unavailingly.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, in concluding what I have to say showing the startling condition of affairs, between the extremes of poverty and distress on the one side and a 16,000 per cent stock dividend on the other, we in the Senate should not be satisfied and some of us are not going to be satisfied with any temporary makeshift legislation for the relief of agriculture in the country, with the limitation of the amount of capital that can be diverted to agriculture. Some of us will insist that the financial system available for agriculture shall be as extensive and limitless as the system for commerce and that the availablity of credits in behalf of the farmer shall be coextensive with the credits for commerce and adapted to the peculiar conditions of the production of agricultural products. We will have none of this temporary handing out of a crumb from a master's table, and I do not use even a figure of speech when I say that the farmer sets the table, furnishes the table, clothes and shoes the master, and yet he, perforce, must go hungry and naked while others in the country are cutting melons running up to hundreds and thousands of per cent.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I hesitate to take the time of the Senate to discuss a subject not before the Senate, but I ask indulgence for a moment or two in connection with the statement just made by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

I represent in part a State which is one of the greatest in agriculture of any of the States in the Union. In that State the farmers have suffered. They are to-day in great difficulty. They are coming to us asking for aid. But, Mr. President, it seems to me that even more important than the question of credits for the farmer is that of trying to do something for him to afford him better market facilities. The other day my attention was called to the fact that in New York, which is a great dairy State and furnishes most of the milk for the great city of New York, the farmer is getting something like 3¾ cents a quart for his milk, while in the city, 100 or 150 miles away, the people who consume the milk are compelled to pay 16 and 18 and at times even 20 cents a quart for the milk. I am wondering, while we are discussing the question of credits for the farmer, if perhaps we are not encouraging him to reach out and borrow beyond his means, when, after all, his real problem is to obtain enough for the things he produces so as to secure even a small return for his labor and his investment.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CALDER. I yield.

Mr. MCKELLAR. The matter of transportation comes in right there. Does not the Senator think that he made a mistake some few years ago when he voted for increasing the transportation charges of the country to such an enormous extent when what is known as the Esch-Cummins law was enacted? The Senator voted for it, as I recall, and the rates on milk from New York State points to New York City and to all the large cities were increased, as I recall, something like 200 per cent.

Mr. CALDER. Of course, the Senator has examined the freight rates on milk coming into New York City, and if he has he might tell the Senate the fact that the increased charge for carrying milk does not exceed one-eighth of 1 cent per quart, and that, of course, has not contributed very much to the increased price. I voted for the Esch-Cummins Act, but I do not recall any provision in that law which increased the freight rates.

Mr. MCKELLAR. The Senator did not read the bill evidently, if he does not recall where the rates mere raised from 100 to 200 per cent.

Mr. CALDER. We gave the Interstate Commerce Commission added authority in the matter and, of course, they increased the rates. But the Senator has not explained, in his interruption, that under the domination of his party during the war billions of dollars were added to the expense of operation of the railroads, and that in those days the rates were increased through the instrumentality of his own commission acting under the authority of his own party. Nor does he tell us that his own President urged that the rates be increased because of the added cost of operation.

Now, Mr. President, just a word on the subject of the so-called stock dividends. I have no defense to make for any corporation in the country that makes abnormal profits. I am not going into that phase of the subject to-day. I do not know the facts about any of the companies which have issued these large stock dividends and to which the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has referred; but it is a simple thing and we ought to have just a word or two of explanation as to how some of these things might happen.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CALDER. Not just now. I have in my hand a copy of this morning's New York Herald. I notice that its leading editorial is entitled "A 3,333 per cent dividend." The editorial goes into an explanation of just how this corporation, with $15,000 capital stock, increased its capital to $500,000. I shall later ask unanimous consent that the editorial in the Herald on the subject to which I have referred may be printed in the RECORD. The story of the development of this corporation is common with thousands of others. It tells in detail how a few men may organize a small business and through hard work, with little profit to themselves over a period of years, develop it into a great organization. During all of the time of its growth it paid taxes on its profits. It simply preferred to extend its business, rather than eat up its gains, and now it turns its undivided profits into stock without increasing its holdings to the extent of one dollar.

I have in mind a corporation, which I know of myself, in the city of New York, which began business 12 years ago, for the convenience of the men who owned the business, with a capital stock of $25,000 all paid in. The corporation was engaged in building houses. It did an annual business of something like $300,000. It borrowed on its mortgages from the banks sufficient money to carry on a business of that magnitude. This particular corporation, like many others, has never declared a dividend. From its business of $300,000 in the first year, as I recall, because I know a great deal about it, it made a profit of something like $18,000. That was put into surplus. With a capital stock of $25,000 and a surplus of $18,000 this company really had a capital of $43,000 the second year. The profits of the corporation were being taxed in proportion to its earnings, of course. Now that corporation, after a period of 12 years, without having declared any dividends, but earning profits upon its surplus in the meantime, has a value to-day with a capital of $25,000 and a surplus of something like $300,000. Of course, that company could issue a stock dividend of $300,000, which would not affect the value of the property to the stockholders to the extent of one cent. It would not create any more property. It would not change the condition at all. It would simply turn an earned surplus into capital stock.

It seems to me this may be the condition with many other corporations in the country of like character. I know of some that have issued very large stock dividends which have in the main very small capital stock.

I now request that the editorial in the New York Herald to which I have referred may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The editorial is as follows:

[From the New York Herald, Saturday, December 16, 1922.]

A 3,333 PER CENT DIVIDEND.

A woolen mill company in Uxbridge, Mass., has declared a stock dividend of 3,333 per cent. But if that fact baldly stated takes anybody's breath away, let him catch it again while listening to a few of the details.

The capital stock of the company before the increase was only $15,000. It is now $500,000. The stockholders had long been plowing in earnings on top of that diminutive capitalization of $15,000 instead of paying them all out as dividends and spending them. A little at a time the earnings went into more machinery, more tools, and more wage-paying equipment until the company was able to do a bigger business than ever had been possible with its original microscopic capital.

Then came bigger earnings from the increased machinery and from the enlarged business, so there was more of those earnings to plow in. There were enough now to add, perhaps, a small wing to the old building, with more equipment, and still more business became possible. Finally there were earnings enough to put up a whole new mill, with a still greater producing capacity.

And so it went until there was a fair-sized business—a business that represented some $500,000 of capital value in place of the $15,000 of years before. And it had been put in by the stockholders with their plowed-in earnings just as much as if the earnings had been paid out to the stockholders and then they had subscribed the same amount as new capital to expand the business.

But, at that, the owners of the woolen mill—the stockholders—had not a dollar more of value in it the hour after the 3,333 per cent stock dividend was declared to themselves than they had the hour before it was declared. Under the $15,000 capitalization of the hour before they had the mill, the machinery, the other equipment, the good will, and the business they were doing. Under the $500,000 capitalization they now have the same mill, the same machinery, the same equipment, the same good will, and the same business as they had before.

They have more certificates of stock but no more woolen mill. It is the same as when a woman slices an apple pie for the family's dinner. There are more pieces of the one pie. But no more pie.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, while the Payne-Aldrich bill was under consideration we had similar charges made on the floor of the Senate by pointing out at that time three cases, I think, of excessive profits alleged to have been made by cotton manufacturers of the East. At the time we knew nothing about the details of the matter, but a very few days later the so-called profits were explained in detail, and the charges fell flat as no doubt these will.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] knows enough about machinery to know what $15,000 would purchase. Fifteen thousand dollars would purchase two and one-half modern looms, that is all, nothing more. Fifteen thousand dollars would about purchase one set of cards. The statement of the Senator is ridiculous on its face. I do not know the history of the case which the Senator calls attention to. There may be some truth in it, but I have no doubt that there is an explanation for the whole thing. I have no doubt, either, that some of the woolen mills and cotton mills as well as almost every other kind of business as well as the industries generally in the United States made large and in some cases extortionate profits during the war. There is no doubt about that. I do not think it bolstered up the Senator's argument for assistance for the farmer, because everybody recognizes the fact that whatever Congress can do to assist him ought to be done and no doubt will be done.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator what he referred to when he used the figures "$15,000"?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator stated the capital was $15,000. I do not know anything about the matter to which he refers, other than what you stated.

Mr. SMITH. I was just looking to see if there was any company with $15,000 capital stock mentioned in the article.

Mr. SMOOT. That was the woolen mill declaring a dividend of 3,333 per cent about which the Senator spoke.

Mr. SMITH. That was referred to in the clipping which was handed me. I did not see in the item relating the incident about the 16,000 per cent stock dividend any company with any such capitalization as $15,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know anything about it except what the Senator said. The Senator said there was a woolen mill with a capitalization of $15,000 which made a profit of 3,333 per cent.

Mr. SMITH. I do not want the Senator to get away from this fact. The argument of the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] and the argument of the Senator from Utah is on the assumption that with a small capital stock, with a comparatively large earning, over a period of years of accumulating surplus, they can at the end of that time declare that surplus in the form of stock dividends. That in no way lessens the terrific comparison between the individual industry for which I am speaking and the one I am seeking to illustrate with, for this reason: After a lifetime of working on the farms of this country, the mother and children working as well as the father, we have arrived at a point when not only they can not declare a stock dividend and buy another place, but they have to mortgage their cattle and their lands and the crops which they are growing in order to meet their necessary living expenses.

Mr. SMOOT. Some time or other the Senate and the House of Representatives will begin to study the situation to ascertain where one of the faults of the high cost of goods lies. I know that the cost of distribution of goods in the United States, which the ultimate consumer has to pay, in many cases is outrageous, and the present system has got to be abolished at some time or other. I admit the demands for delivery of each little item and other unnecessary demands made by the consumer add greatly to the cost. I think I stated in the Senate on a previous occasion that I went to a retail store in Washington and bought a bill of goods and secured an invoice for that bill of goods at retail prices. I took that invoice and purchased from a little wholesale house in Washington the smallest quantity of the same identical goods that I could, and I found there was a difference of 87 per cent between the wholesale price and the retail price which I had paid. I do not know what the wholesaler's profit was; I do not know what was paid to the manufacturer of the goods; but all that profit had to be added to the 87 per cent. When we get backbone enough to investigate and consider the question of the distribution of goods, I think we shall help the ultimate consumer in the purchase of his goods.

Mr. SMITH. Does not the Senator from Utah think that pari passu, right along with that, in determining where the fault lies in distribution to the ultimate consumer we have got to provide an adequate and impartial system of credits in order to meet the peculiar conditions under which the industry of agriculture labors?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator had confined his statement to that one aspect of the matter, I should not have said a word, because in the main I agree with him; but some day or other, Mr. President, the question of excessive prices which are charged for the goods which are sold in this country will have to be considered. Now, let me call the Senators' attention——

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Just one moment. Let me call the Senator's attention to an instance that came under my observation. Two years ago, just before Mrs. Smoot and I returned to Utah, Mrs. Smoot bought a pair of shoes for which she was charged $17. One day as I came out of the elevator at the Hotel Utah to go to my room, I met an old friend of whom I used to purchase shoes when I was in the merchandising business. I said to him, "Hello, Jack, what are you doing here?" "Oh," he said, "I am still selling shoes." I said, "For the same firm?" He said, "For the same firm." He further stated, "I have a line here now, in my room." His room was immediately to the left of the elevator; and he said, "Come in and look at my line of shoes." I went in and, Mr. President, I saw there a pair of shoes which I was positive were exactly the same make of shoes which Mrs. Smoot had purchased for $17. To be absolutely sure, however, that the shoes were exactly similar, I took the stock number of the shoe and later found it was the identical kind of shoe. I said to my friend, "Jack, at what price are you selling these shoes?" He replied, "I am selling them for $5.75." I asked, "Is that the price at which those shoes are sold in all parts of the United States?" He replied, "Yes, that is the wholesale price for which they are sold everywhere." Some time or other such exorbitant profits are not going to continue to be charged in the United States.

Mr. SMITH. Does not the Senator from Utah think that he could have helped the situation materially if he had desisted from his advocacy of the tariff iniquity which we have just passed, which makes that kind of thing possible?

Mr. SMOOT. That was before we began the consideration of the tariff bill; it was before the election of 1920. As the Senator from South Carolina refers to that matter, let me call attention to the "tariff iniquity," as he characterizes it. I thought the Senator from South Carolina or some other Senator would make such a statement as he has made, and I brought here to the Senate on yesterday a number of reports not only from France and other foreign countries but from England particularly, including clippings of items from foreign and New York papers. I will only mention one, although I have in my office the letter which contains the complete information. In one cablegram, however, it was stated that the pottery industry of England is again active because of the fact that the Americans have begun the purchasing of pottery of all kinds from England. Then the cablegram went on to say that the increased duty upon pottery in the tariff law had been met by the English manufacturers of pottery by taking the amount of the increased duty off their profits and selling their goods in America for the same price as they had done under the Underwood tariff law.

Not only that, but as to the firm of Gimbel & Co., of Philadelphia and New York, there is a statement—and I shall later put it into the RECORD—relative to the importation of dresses from Paris and from cities in other foreign countries that at first prices were increased, but it was found that the American people would not buy the goods at an increased price, and therefore the foreigner reduced the price by the amount of the increase in the duty, and was selling the goods at the same old price. That statement came from Gimbel & Co.'s purchaser of the goods.

Every dollar, Mr. President, of the tariff increase, so far as pottery in England and dresses which are imported from France and from other foreign countries are concerned, if those statements are correct, is being paid by the foreigner and goes into the Treasury of the United States. However, I had not intended going into the question of the operation of the tariff law and did not do so until the Senator from South Carolina brought the matter up.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. This is quite an interesting discussion, but we have got away from what we were talking about. I think we were discussing the price of shoes, and the Senator from Utah gave a very clear illustration by citing a case where shoes cost $17, I think it was, and shortly after some salesman stated that his firm was selling exactly similar shoes at wholesale for $5 per pair.

Mr. SMOOT. For $5.75 per pair.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know whether the Senator from Utah bought the shoes after or before he saw the traveling man, but it may be that they were bought after the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives had reported in favor of placing a tariff on hides, but the House, I believe through Democratic votes, took it off, or it may have been after the Finance Committee of the Senate had reported a high tariff on hides and when by Democratic vote in the Senate it was taken off. I am wondering whether that action had any influence on the prices which were being paid for shoes.

Mr. SMOOT. It was before the 1920 election under a Democratic administration. Of course, as to the pair of shoes of which I spoke, if the tariff had been in force it would not have amounted to 2 cents a pair.

Mr. HARRISON. But a tariff sometimes affords an excuse for increasing prices.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be an excuse so far as the seller of the shoes is concerned, but it is afforded no justification by the tariff law.

Mr. HARRISON. I may be mistaken as to my facts, and I do not want the RECORD to show a mistake; but if I recall the matter aright the Ways and Means Committee of the other House in drafting what was afterwards known as the Fordney-McCumber bill did put a tariff on hides.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; they did put a tariff on hides.

Mr. HARRISON. But the House, by a very close vote, removed the duty. Then the Finance Committee of the Senate, of which the Senator from Utah is the most influential member, restored the duty on hides, as I recall, in the bill which that committee reported to the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. They did.

Mr. HARRISON. But the Senate, through Democratic votes, took that duty off. I merely wanted to get the facts.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Mississippi should have said that was done through Republican votes.

Mr. HARRISON. Through Republican votes?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator will remember as to those who voted for that duty, with the exception of 2 or 3 or 4 or 5, it was Democratic votes which took the duty off.

Mr. SMOOT. So far as that is concerned, there were Democrats who voted for the duty, and only 16 Democrats voted against a duty on hides.

Mr. HARRISON. I said with the exception of 4 or 5 votes.

Mr. SMOOT. But it was Republican votes that took the duty off.

Mr. HARRISON. There were 1 or 2 Republican votes in favor of eliminating the duty.

Mr. SMOOT. There were more than 1 or 2, and the Senator knows it.

Mr. HARRISON. How did the Senator vote?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Utah voted for a tariff on hides.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Just the same as the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] voted for a tariff on hides. I need not mention the other Senators on the Democratic side who voted for it?

Mr. MCKELLAR. How many were there?

Mr. SMOOT. There were quite a number, I will say to the Senator; but, Mr. President, if the duty had been imposed and collected it would not have amounted to 2 cents on each pair of shoes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to enter into this filibuster and keep this discussion up. I want to go on with the shipping bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no wish to filibuster.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want to be charged with assisting in any filibuster at all.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to discuss——

Mr. SMOOT. I am discussing something else besides the tariff bill, which is not now before the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not desire to discuss the tariff at this time, but I wish to ask the Senator a question with reference to the illustration he gave as to the prices charged by wholesalers as compared with the prices charged by retailers. Of course if the Senator does not desire me to interrupt him for that purpose I will desist.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course the Senator can ask me a question now, but I should like to finish what I have to say on another matter. The suggestion in regard to the tariff was brought into the discussion by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I repeat I am not going to discuss the tariff. I will say to the Senator that we have discussed that heretofore, very greatly to the information and edification of the public, and we have had some results from it since, in the last election. We need not discuss the tariff now.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I think we had better not.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not wish to discuss it, but I do wish to make an observation with respect to the statement made by the Senator a little while ago with reference to the enormous spread between the prices charged by the wholesaler and the prices charged by the retailer, in connection with which he used shoes as an illustration. The Senator showed that there is a spread of, I think, something over 300 per cent between those prices. I was very much gratified that the Senator developed that fact because we had a long discussion here during the last session from which it appeared that the Senators on the other side of the Chamber wished to have the country believe that the big spread between the wholesale and retail prices was due to the extortionate profits charged by importers and department stores who were themselves large importers.

Mr. SMOOT. The department stores are retailers.

Mr. SIMMONS. I only wish in this connection to say I am glad to have this confirmation from the Senator from Utah of the contention we then made in the illustration he now gives of a spread of 300 or more per cent between the wholesale and retail price of a domestic product of universal use. The Senator's statement confirms the contention we on this side of the Chamber then made.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I rose simply to call attention to the fact that the Senator from South Carolina had in view making the people of the country believe that there were certain manufacturers making 16,000 per cent. He did not qualify it and say whether it was made during one year or not, but he said this was the amount of a dividend that was declared. Then he referred to one particular case where there was a woolen mill with $15,000 capital that made 3,333 per cent.

I rose simply to say that in 1909, when the Payne-Aldrich bill was under discussion, the same thing was brought before the Senate in relation to some cotton mills—some three of them, as I remember—and when the facts in the case were presented to the Senate it was found that there was nothing to the charge. Then I continued by saying that I had no doubt in the world but that during the war not only the woolen mills and the cotton mills but the retailers and the wholesalers in all kinds of business made large profits. There is no doubt about it at all.

All I can say about the $15,000 capital stock is this: If that is all the capital stock they had, that would purchase about 2½ looms. It would not purchase one set of cards. So there is something radically wrong with the statement, and I think if time were allowed, if it were worth while, we could write to this concern and find out just what the facts in the case were; but it is quite certain that there could not be a woolen mill with only $15,000 capital.

I agree in part with what the Senator from South Carolina said in relation to the necessity of assisting the farmer by advancing him the money necessary to carry on his business. Of course, I was always taught when I was young to keep out of debt; that debt was the greatest bondage a man could be under. If times were normal, and it were possible for the farmer of the country to carry on his business without assistance, my advice to him now would be to keep out of debt; but I recognize the conditions that exist, and I have not any doubt but that the Congress is ready, and not only ready but willing, to pass the legislation necessary to assist him in every way possible.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, for just an hour and a half I have been waiting to talk about the bill under consideration, the ship subsidy bill. I call attention to the fact that Senators on both sides of the Chamber have taken up this time in talking about other matters not connected with the bill. I hope that that time, at least, will not be charged up to those of us who oppose the measure and that no claim of filibustering will be made against those of us who oppose the pending bill because of this use of time.

Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] has for some time been an advocate, and an ardent advocate, of building up our merchant marine. It will be recalled that two years ago he, as chairman of the committee, brought into the Senate a bill for the purpose of permitting or directing the sale of our ships to private individuals or corporations, and for otherwise building up and maintaining the shipping interests of America. That bill, apparently, has been an utter failure. I voted for the bill, largely upon the strength of the conclusions reached by the Senator from Washington, for whom I entertain the highest esteem and in whom I have very great confidence; but the bill that he then reported has been a failure, as I have stated. At all events, according to the testimony in the hearings, our merchant marine has steadily gone down and down during the past two years, until now the President of the United States, upon the advice of the Shipping Board, has asked Congress to pass additional legislation to effect the very purposes that were proposed and advocated two years ago in the bill that was passed at that time.

Mr. President, the newspapers of the country, those of them that are in favor of this subsidy—and it seems that a very large proportion of them are in favor of subsidizing the American merchant marine—are trying to make it appear that those of us who do not believe in paying a cash subsidy to American shipping are opposed to building up a great merchant marine or opposed to maintaining a great merchant marine. Nothing can be further from the fact. Most of the very strongest advocates of the merchant marine, those who have done more to build it up than perhaps any others, are opposed to the granting of this subsidy. To show you how it works, in 1916, when a merchant marine bill was first passed under which the great merchant marine that we now have was built, my distinguished friend from Washington was opposed to it and voted against it. He now says he is sorry for it, and that is just like the manly, splendid man that he is.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I did not say I was sorry for it.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator said that he had changed his mind.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. I misunderstood the Senator if he did not, and I would not misrepresent him in any way in the world——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know the Senator would not.

Mr. McKELLAR. Because I have the highest esteem for him and the greatest confidence in any statement that he may make; but I misunderstood him, unless he said a day or two ago, in answer to a question that was put, that he had opposed the merchant marine bill when it was passed—and the RECORD shows that he opposed it—and that he had since changed his mind.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; the matter of a filibuster came up, and some one, I think the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], asked if I had not talked all night with reference to the bill. I said I had, of course, and he asked me if I thought now that I was mistaken then. I said that I did not think I was mistaken then, but that after the first bill had been disposed of and the second bill came up, and many of the objectionable features were eliminated, my impression is that I voted for that bill. That is the present law, the act of 1916.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think if the Senator will look at the RECORD, as I have done, he will find that he is mistaken about that; but I want to say this about it——

Mr. JONES of Washington. That may be true. I say, I have not looked it up; but I did say, I think to the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], that there are many things in the act of 1916 that I think are good, and I joined with him in a protest against the abolishment of the Shipping Board. I have always contended, for the last few years anyhow, that that board is a very important administrative body, and I should like to see it made a board to correspond to the British Board of Trade. I should like to see it have much more power than it has now, so as to promote the development of our merchant marine and meet the practices and policies that are carried out by the British Board of Trade with reference to their merchant marine to the disadvantage of all other merchant marines of the world.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I accept, of course, everything that the Senator says on that subject. I know that whatever may have been his views in 1916 or prior to that time about building up a merchant marine, since that time he has become an earnest, sincere, and able advocate of the building up in this country of a merchant marine commensurate with the interests of our country. I believe he feels that way now. I know his intentions are the best. I know that what he seeks to do is to build up and maintain a great merchant marine in this country. I differ with him about his conclusions. I have no criticism to make of him personally in any way in the world; but I do believe, however honestly mistaken he may be, that he is mistaken in the conclusion that it is necessary or advisable to give a cash subsidy to our shipping interests in order either to build up or to maintain those interests.

The conditions that exist now and those that existed prior to 1916 in reference to our merchant marine are very different. It might have been argued with some plausibility before we built a great merchant marine that a cash subsidy was necessary in order to build up a merchant marine and maintain it; but now we have over 10,000,000 tons of shipping in this country. We have one of the best merchant marines of any nation in the world, second only to that of Great Britain. We have some fourteen or fifteen hundred great steel ships that are as good as the ships of any nation on earth, just as good as those of Great Britain. They are already built. It is not a question of building up a merchant marine. As I said, it might have been argued with some plausibility before this great merchant marine was built by this Nation that it was necessary to subsidize it, but now that it has been built, now that we have it, manifestly it is not necessary to tax the American people, already enormously taxed, already taxed almost beyond their ability to pay, it is not necessary to tax them further in the enormous sum of at least some $75,000,000 a year in direct and indirect taxes for the purpose of paying a subsidy to these companies.

Mr. President, it is contended that we ought to give this subsidy in order to build up and maintain a merchant marine that we already have, and that unless we do it, unless we give the cash subsidy, we will not have the merchant marine. All such talk is idle. We are going to keep our merchant marine. We are going to maintain it. We are going to make it a success. We are going to make it one of the greatest ocean-carrying shippings in the world. We are going to make it a success all along the line. This nation is determined to do it; and I have no patience with these temporary officers of the Shipping Board who come here decrying our merchant marine, who come here saying that we are unable to compete with other nations, and that we ought not to compete with other nations for much of the trade. I have no sympathy with them. That is not a patriotic doctrine; that is not a patriotic statement to be made by these officers of the Shipping Board, and it ought not to have been made. We are going to get our part of the commerce of the world.

I want to say right here that in discussing the members of the Shipping Board, and in discussing its chairman, I have nothing personal to say about those gentlemen. I am going to discuss what they propose, and I am going to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this ship subsidy bill is the outcome of the recommendations of Mr. Lasker. I met Mr. Lasker once, and he is a very nice gentleman, a very kindly man. I do not criticize him personally in any way; but what is there in Mr. Lasker's history, what is there in his business life, what is there in his knowledge of shipping, which would justify a departure from the precedents of over a hundred years, and warrant us in embarking upon this course of taxing the American people in this enormous annual sum, fixing it upon them for a period of 10 years, to carry out his views about shipping?

As I understand, prior to two years ago Mr. Lasker never had anything to do with shipping in his life, and I expect that after about two years he will never have anything more to do with shipping in his future life. He has been engaged in other business. He has not been engaged in shipping. It has not been his life work, and why should we follow his views on a subject he certainly knows no more about than other people?

Mr. President, I am for a real merchant marine, a merchant marine that prospers because it has business to carry, not a weak, sickly, hothouse merchant marine, dependent upon the Government to keep its head above water.

There is little provision in this bill for getting business for our merchant marine. This bill is aimed at a cash subsidy from the Government, pure and simple. Its main purpose, apparently, is to get the Government to tax all the people for the benefit of a few shipowners.

My judgment is that we ought to pass a bill which would result in our getting business for our merchant marine, and after we get the business for it, then it will prosper, whether it is in the Government's hands or whether it is in private hands or whether it is in both.

I am perfectly willing to agree to a bill which will reduce the tariff on all goods brought in in American ships in every case where there is a discrimination against our ships and divide such reduction of duty with the owners of the American ships bringing in the goods. I would gladly support a bill to require all American mails to be transported in American vessels. I would gladly support a bill requiring all American officials—Army, Navy, or any other officials—traveling abroad to travel on American ships. I would gladly support a measure to require that all supplies shipped by our Government be shipped upon American ships. I would be glad to support a bill placing harbor regulations on the vessels of any foreign country which in any way discriminated against American shipping. But I am wholly opposed to the un-American, unfair, and unjust method of paying a cash subsidy to a favored shipping interest, taxing all the people for the benefit of one small fraction of our people.

I want to say this, Mr. President, that we have a number of treaties with foreign countries. As far back as 1913 or 1914 we passed a law looking to the annulment of those treaties. In a recent act we called upon the President of the United States to annul those trade treaties which interfere with and put restrictions on American ships. Both a Democratic President, Mr. Wilson, and a Republican President, Mr. Harding, declined to carry out the mandate of Congress, and those treaties are still in existence. I would willingly vote for a law annulling those treaties, which we have a right to do, and then we could take care of ourselves by passing such laws as we wanted to build up the American merchant marine, as against any nation which put restrictions upon our shipping. I shall later offer such an amendment to this bill.

Mr. President, this bill must succeed or fail under the testimony of Mr. Albert D. Lasker. He is the father of the proposition. He is the principal witness who has been brought before the Congress in advocacy of this bill. He has testified at length. If upon his testimony this bill ought to be passed, it might be contended by Senators here that we should pass it; but I say that no fair-minded man, unblinded by prejudice of any kind, can read Mr. Lasker's testimony and come to any other conclusion than that this bill ought not to be passed, and I am going very briefly to refer to Mr. Lasker's testimony in chief, as shown in the first volume of the hearings.

Mind you, he talks about subsidy. He has little if anything to say about acquiring business for our merchant marine. Acquiring business is not in his mind. He wants to get rid of the ships. He wants the Government to dispose of them to private parties, and then pay those private parties a cash subsidy for running them. That is the burden and gist of his testimony. He does say in one place that there are some new markets to the south of us and to the east of us from which we might get some trade, but otherwise he pays no attention to the question of getting business. Substantially he concedes that the Atlantic business, which is the cream of the business, we are not entitled to.

In no part of this long explanation of our country's shipping business does he dwell upon the necessity of our doing business and getting business from foreign countries. He talks about the necessity of our merchant marine being used in time of war as an auxiliary to our Navy. This is a matter that he has nothing to do with except indirectly. He was put at the head of the Shipping Board for the purpose of building up our merchant marine, not for the purpose of building up our Navy. Our Navy is in other hands. His entire evidence is a complaint against our merchant marine. First, it is not evenly balanced; second, it can not be economically run; third, we need faster ships. He talks about our needing 1,250,000 gross tons of faster passenger ships and about the same amount of faster cargo ships, and then he blandly tells us that we have in operation only 421 ships, the remainder, more than a thousand, being laid up in our harbors.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from Tennessee will proceed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, when I was interrupted I was discussing the testimony of Mr. Lasker, the chairman of the Shipping Board. He next makes the astounding statement that 3,000,000 tons of our 6,000,000 tons of cargo shipping is all that is necessary or needed by our country. He makes the further astounding statement that 3,000,000 tons of this steel cargo shipping ought to be dismantled. Here is the chairman of the Shipping Board coming before the Congress asking to dispose of the steel tonnage that he has on hand. He said he believed that 3,000,000 tons of it could be disposed of, that only 3,000,000 tons is needed by America, and that the other 3,000,000 tons should be dismantled or scrapped. The 6,000,000 tons of shipping no doubt cost the taxpayers of this Republic something like $2,000,000,000. It must be worth somewhere in the neighborhood of $1,000,000,0000. Mr. Lasker comes before the Congress and testifies that 3,000,000 tons of ship steel cargo shipping should be dismantled and should be put out of competition with the first 3,000,000 tons which he desires to sell to private owners, and at the same time he blandly asked the Congress to create a revolving fund of $125,000,000 for the purpose of building new ships. In one section of the bill he wants authority to dismantle and junk one-half of all the steel cargo ships, and in another provision of the bill he asks to have a revolving fund of $125,000,000 arranged by the Government to enable him to built new ships for the shipping interests. How are we to follow these remarkable recommendations? What is the reason for these remarkable recommendations?

He declares that 3,000,000 tons of our cargo shipping is of no value. He declares that we ought not to have but 3,000,000 tons anyway; that the second 3,000,000 tons we now have must be disposed of so that American interests shall not be hurt. Under no circumstances, he declares, shall the second 3,000,000 tons that we now own be used in such a way as to come in competition or to hurt the 3,000,000 tons that is proposed by him to be turned over to the shipping interests. He says on this subject:

> Automatically the 3,000,000 poor tons must be done away with.

The remaining 3,000,000 tons must be junked or dismantled. He states that we do not need more than 3,000,000 tons; that we can only use 3,000,000 tons economically; that we own 1,242 steel ships and that only 421 are being used, 1,021 are tied up; that on these 421 the Shipping Board is losing $50,000,000 annually. He admits that in the year 1921 America carried under her own flag 51 per cent of her foreign trade; that by excluding the trade in the Great Lakes and the Caribbean he shows that American ships carried only 24 per cent and that 5 per cent of this was carried in privately owned ships and 19 per cent by the American merchant marine. He is opposed to the Government running the ships. He says that it is true we are carrying daily 87 per cent of our own trade to Mexico and 57 per cent of the Caribbean trade in our own ships, but he claims that neither the needs of trade with Mexico or the Caribbean call for that type of ship, which is the very backbone of the second line of our Navy, and besides, this kind of ship is not serviceable anyway.

The ridiculousness of this statement is manifest in view of the figures he gives, that in these ships we are carrying 87 per cent of the one trade and 57 of the other. He says it is appalling to think that only 19 per cent of the American trade is carried in Government-owned ships. He says that the Government admits its inability to operate its ships in competition with privately owned ships of the world; that the loss to the Government of $50,000,000 a year does not include interest on capital invested, insurance, or depreciation; that the Government ought not to have entered into governmental operation. He thinks the Shipping Board is fast approaching perfection, but that no governmental operation can compete with privately owned ships; that when the present board took over the management of the ships they were paying too much commission to those who ran them, but they were not to blame for it. Nobody was to blame for any of the failures of the Shipping Board, past or present. He believes that they have built up a splendid organization in the Emergency Fleet Corporation; that it would compare favorably with any private organization, but that such organization "is discouraged by the impossibility of creating any proper operation through Government ownership," and then, in a spirit of fine frenzy against the board which he was selected to preside over and make successful, he says:

> But let us not be deceived; conditions still are bad and will ever remain so under Government ownership because of the impossibility of competing with private operation. Both the sense of initiative and responsibility found in private operation are lacking. Initiative is lacking because neither those employed by the Fleet Corporation nor the managing agents nor their employees in turn have the slightest notion they are building up anything permanent for themselves. At any time Congress may see fit to so reduce salaries that men of ability can no longer afford to stay with the Fleet Corporation.

Mr. President, Mr. Lasker, the chairman of the Shipping Board, says the principal trouble or one of the troubles in the Shipping Board is that they do not pay salaries sufficiently high, and yet he knows that the salaries paid by the Shipping Board are a national scandal. There are three employees of the Shipping Board who are getting salaries of $35,000 a year. That is more than twice as much as the Chief Justice of the United States receives. It is more than four times as much as any Senator or Congressman receives. It is more than any other official of the Government at all receives, except the President of the United States. In so far as salaries are concerned, no organization within the Government is paying such salaries as members of the Shipping Board are receiving, and yet the chairman of the Shipping Board comes here and makes the statement that one of the reasons for the failure of the Shipping Board to do anything in the last few years is because the salaries of the employees of the Shipping Board are not large enough. A large portion of his speech before the committee was taken up with the complaint about small salaries, and yet when I mentioned salaries in the manuscript of the argument I am making, when I said $35,000 a year and said something about it being pitifully small, the printer put a question mark in the margin about it! No officials of the Government, other than those of the Shipping Board, receive anything like half the salaries paid to those officials of the board.

Evidently we see the trouble. Their salaries are not large enough in the Shipping Board. The pitifully small and indecent salaries of $35,000 a year to men some of whom never received any such salaries before is, of course, sufficient to make it impossible to succeed in the control of our merchant marine. Of course, initiative is lacking, because the head of the corporation is in doubt, does not believe in the system, is opposed to the system, wants to see it fail. I want to suggest to the chairman of the Shipping Board that the employees of the Government have no business looking out for themselves only. It is their duty to look out for the interests of the Government and the Shipping Board. If they are not satisfied with the salaries they are getting, they can go into other business and there are men who will take their places who do believe in making the Shipping Board a success and in making it permanent.

A large portion of the chairman's speech is taken up with the crying against the small salaries paid by the Shipping Board, and yet, as we all know, the salaries received by the high officers of the Shipping Board—not the members, of course—are greater than every officer in our Government except alone the President, and they are not far behind him; and yet the chairman of the board talks about the failure of the board because of the failure of the Government to pay higher salaries. He then says that the Government can not continue to run the ships because they will wear out, even with proper repair. He says that he believes within 20 years our fleet would be worn out and gone. This statement is ridiculous. I doubt if there is a man in this body who has ever crossed the ocean who has not crossed it in ships more than 20 years of age. No wonder the Shipping Board is not a success when its presiding officer talks in this way.

And then he goes on to say in substantiation of his claim:

> Our contact with this thing is closer than others, and I am sure the members of the Shipping Board will join with the trustees of the Emergency Fleet Corporation in attesting that I truly record our experience.

His experience is two years. He never was in the shipping business before, and after he retires from his office, with all due respect to him, he will never be in the shipping business again. He certainly ought not to be.

He then undertakes to give the only reason advanced by him why private ships under the American flag must be governmentally aided—namely, because of the higher standards of living of American labor in the shipyard and on the ship. We will discuss this matter presently. After going over the matter of aid, he says:

> There is no hope of the establishment of a merchant marine through insufficient aid.

And, by the way, all through his testimony Mr. Lasker testifies, not once but innumerable times, that there is no hope for the American merchant marine; that it can not compete with the merchant marine of other nations; that we can not get business; that we can not be successful. He is decrying against the American merchant marine from the beginning to the end of his testimony.

> Rather than insufficient aid, let us have no aid at all and leave the question open until such time as we will give sufficient aid to insure our purpose. The achievement of our purpose should be our aim, not to fool ourselves and others and achieve failure by doing too late when we seem to be doing enough. We should take advantage at this time to write upon our statute books every possible indirect aid that can be uncovered and which can be properly used. * * * We must do enough or nothing (p. 15).

He then tells how he proposes to sell the ships. It is asked that the Shipping Board fleet be sold at world prices, regardless of the cost of construction. He says:

> The cost of construction is a war cost and should be written down to zero.

If he sells the ships at "zero" prices, how does he propose to get $200,000,000 for them? He says he does not believe that he can sell more than 100,000 tons out of the 6,000,000 tons.

How can he get the $125,000,000 out of 100,000 tons? But there is a better demand for ships than he thinks; yet he proposes to sell the ships for $200,000,000. After taking care of the charges of the Shipping Board it will take every dollar of the remainder to provide a revolving fund of $125,000,000 which is authorized in this bill. So that the shipping interests, just as he started out by saying, will get the ships at zero prices or pay nothing for them. I suppose that he means that we should give away the ships, because if the cost of construction is down to zero we are not entitled to any profits on zero. Then he goes on to say:

Whatever we get out of salvage is a profit, and if this fleet, built for war, can be turned into peace-time purposes, we shall verily have performed the miracle of turning the sword into the plowshare. No other of our war-time expenditures shall have such noble salvage. The sale of the Shipping Board fleet at world prices means that those that buy will not have higher capital charges than others to the extent of the tonnage they thus acquire (p. 16).

And to show what is in the chairman's mind, we find on page 13:

At the present time there is by and large no markets—

Meaning world markets—

for our vast tonnage.

In other words, here we have about 10,000,000 tons of ships that we are forced to sell in world markets, when there are no purchasers and when we are told by the chairman that they are only worth zero. In other words, it is perfectly apparent that he means to give away these ships.

We next come to Mr. Lasker's discussion of indirect aid.

In connection with that subject as to some features of his suggestion I agree with him, while as to others I do not agree with him. As I have said, I think our mails ought to be carried in American ships. Until a short time ago more than half of them were carried on foreign ships; wherever our authorities could make contracts with British ships to carry American mails they did so; but Congress got busy several years ago and required a portion of American mails to be carried on American ships, and now the greater portion of them are carried on American ships. All of them ought to be carried on American ships. None of the vast mail of Great Britain to this country comes in American ships; with the two lone exceptions of Finland and Esthonia no other nation employs American ships to carry its mail. The Government not long ago made contracts with those two little countries for a few hundred dollars to carry what small amount of mail they have. It is perfectly manifest that trade and mail go along together, and, of course, it would be a very wise and proper thing for us, under proper regulations as to cost, to give to the American merchant marine our mail contracts.

I next come to another proposal of indirect aid, as set out by Mr. Lasker, which, I think, is proper, and that is the matter of bringing immigrants to this country. We admit now immigrants of various nationalities on a ratio of 3 per cent to those who are already resident in this country. In other words, our immigration has been cut down enormously in the last two or three years, but even under this decreased immigration the transportation charges for bringing immigrants to this country is about $17,000,000 a year. There is no reason in the world why the business of bringing immigrants to this country should be carried on in foreign bottoms. We restrict immigration; we have absolute control over immigration, and there is no reason in the world why we should not build up our merchant marine by requiring not 50 per cent of the immigrants to travel on American ships but by requiring all of them, if need be, to be transported on American ships.

I think such a policy would be very much better for our country, and I think we should get a very much better class of immigrants if we required all of them to be brought here in American vessels and under the control of American officials. With that provision of the bill I am in hearty sympathy.

I next come to the question of the ships on which our agents travel across the seas. Mr. President, when American officeholders go abroad they do not deign to go on American ships; they are not willing to travel on American ships, but they want to go on British ships for the most part. At all events they want to go on a foreign ship. Last year we paid out—and I think it will be a very astonishing statement to those who are not familiar with the situation—the enormous sum of $7,500,000 to the owners of foreign ships to carry Government passengers and freight across the Pacific Ocean. The amount paid for such travel across the Atlantic Ocean and in the other oceans of the world is doubtless more than that; so that the Government spends annually for carrying Government freight and Government officials across the ocean not less than $15,000,000. Of course, that is not good business.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator mean that we are spending that amount now, or that we were spending that amount during the war?

Mr. McKELLAR. We are spending that now. We spent that amount last year, if Mr. Lasker is giving us the facts. He states in his testimony that in the Pacific Ocean alone last year the Government paid to foreign ships for the transportation of Government passengers and freight the enormous sum of $7,500,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. Has the Senator from Tennessee the separate figures as to the amount which was paid by the Government for the transportation of passengers, and can he state that amount?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; Mr. Lasker does not give that.

Mr. SIMMONS. Can the Senator tell us what character of passengers they were? Were they Government employees?

Mr. McKELLAR. They were agents of the State Department, of the War Department, of the Navy Department, of the Department of Commerce, and of the Department of Labor and other departments.

If the Senator from North Carolina will recall, just a day or two ago in the consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill there was inserted an item of $30,000 for the purpose of carrying our consular and diplomatic agents across the waters during the next year. I secured the adoption of an amendment to the bill providing in effect that such employees should be carried in American ships, unless some urgent or proper reason for not doing so was certified by the Secretary of State.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is any part of the money paid by the Government for the transportation of its officers and agents and employees for travel between this country and foreign countries to which we have regular lines of steamboats operated by the Shipping Board?

Mr. McKELLAR. I judge so, from Mr. Lasker's testimony. He states that $7,500,000 was paid to foreign shipowners on the Pacific Ocean alone. I imagine our principal trade in the Pacific Ocean is between the Pacific coast and the Philippine Islands and China and Japan. As to that ocean alone we have the figures. In the other oceans of the world it is more than double that sum, I should imagine. I imagine that what the Government pays out for the transportation of passengers and freight in all the oceans of the world yearly to foreign shipowners amounts to some $15,000,000; and I think that we very properly ought, under proper safeguards as to cost, to require those passengers and that freight to be carried in American bottoms.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, what does the Senator estimate to be the amount of subsidy to be paid under this bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will permit me, I will reach that in a few moments; but if he is going to leave the Chamber, I will turn to it now.

Mr. SIMMONS. The only reason I asked the question was to ascertain what proportion of the total amount is represented by the $15,000,000 referred to by the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have the different items, and I will give them to the Senator right now, and perhaps refer to the same subject a little later on. I have stated the figures under the head of "The cost of the bill."

The cost of this bill in indirect and direct subsidies will be at the lowest calculation $77,000,000 a year. The items showing this cost, as found in the bill, are, first, 10 per cent of customs duties, which, as the Senator knows, are impressed with a prior lien for the purpose of paying the cash subsidy.

The customs revenues are estimated at $350,000,000 a year. That figure is based upon our present income derived from customs duties. The Senator will recall that from the Underwood-Simmons law we had been collecting at our ports something like $850,000,000 a year for several years past, and therefore 10 per cent of that amount, or $35,000,000, would be available for the purpose provided for in the bill.

Our Republican friends say that under the Fordney-McCumber tariff law there will be a larger amount of revenues collected than under the Underwood-Simmons law; they say the amount of customs revenue will reach $450,000,000, or possibly $500,000,000, a year. If that should be the case, then 10 per cent of $450,000,000 would be $45,000,000, which amount, or $50,000,000, as it may turn out, would be available for the purposes of the bill. In my remarks I have based the calculation in this instance on the revenues derived under the Underwood-Simmons law and have placed the amount therefor at $35,000,000.

Then, under this bill, income-tax exemptions are allowed amounting to $10,000,000. In addition to that there are provisions in regard to exemptions from tonnage duties which will amount to another $4,000,000 a year.

Furthermore, there are provisions for the transportation of Government employees and Government freight which will amount to $15,000,000; and, in addition, there should be considered the cost of the transportation of Government mail, which will amount to not less than $5,000,000. Lastly, there is the provision requiring the transportation in American ships of one-half of the immigrants coming to this country, the amount involved in that instance being $8,000,000 or a little more, making the total amount, as I have said, $77,000,000.

COST OF THE BILL.

The cost of this bill in direct and indirect subsidies will be at the lowest calculation $77,000,000, and the items showing this cost are found in the bill and are as follows:

10 per cent custom duties	$35,000,000
Income-tax exemptions	10,000,000
Tonnage duties	4,000,000
Transportation of Government passengers and freight	15,000,000
Transportation of Government mails	5,000,000
Transportation of immigrants	8,000,000
Total	77,000,000

This sum may be greatly increased. The Underwood tariff bill brought in the neighborhood of $350,000,000 a year, and if the Fordney-McCumber bill brings additional duties, as was claimed for it, the amount arising from this source will be more than $35,000,000. It has been estimated it may reach $45,000,000.

Various estimates of income-tax exemptions have been noted, some of them going up as high as $20,000,000.

Mr. Lasker himself estimates transportation of Government freight and passengers in the Pacific alone at $7,500,000, and, of course, in the Atlantic and all other seas of the world it will amount to more than $7,500,000 additional.

Again, of course, it is shown that the cost will be much more than $50,000,000 from the very fact that the Shipping Board has the right to double the direct compensation.

Senators, if you pass this bill, it will just be an entering wedge for future raids on the Treasury by the shipping interests. They will have a lobby here at all times, and there is no telling to what extent the American people may be taxed in the future if we permit this additional raid on the people's money to be successfully carried out. So that the President is entirely wrong in saying it will be cheaper for the taxpayers to pay these bounties rather than to pay the losses now taking place.

I will pause here long enough while I am on that subject—I intended to reach it later—to say that the President comes before Congress and says we are losing $50,000,000 a year under existing conditions. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] on yesterday showed how mistaken the President was in giving those figures. Of course, the President is not to blame; he secured his figures from Mr. Lasker as furnished him by the Shipping Board; but, as was demonstrated here yesterday by the Senator from Florida, $33,000,000, the loss for the present year, was the greatest loss which the Shipping Board has sustained. So, instead of the loss being $50,000,000 a year, it is less than $33,000,000. The President, however, says that if we pass this bill the drain on the taxpayers of the country will not be so great as it is now; and yet it is perfectly evident that those who will derive the benefit of the subsidy will receive not less than $77,000,000. Of course $33,000,000 is less than $77,000,000, the President and Mr. Lasker to the contrary notwithstanding, and, as the Senator from North Carolina knows, the Shipping Board has the power under this bill to increase the cash subsidies given under the bill to double what is proposed. So we know as a matter of fact that, instead of the President being correct, instead of Mr. Lasker being correct, instead of losing $33,000,000 a year, as we have done this year from the operations of the Shipping Board, we will tax the American people not less than $77,000,000, and I believe the amount will be a great deal more than $100,000,000 if we pass this bill. That is the difference between what is proposed and what will actually happen.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to thank the Senator for myself and, I am going to say, for the country for his explanation as to the actual amount which the Treasurer will have to pay out in the shape of a bonus if this proposed legislation shall pass. I myself have not thoroughly investigated, as the Senator has, the question of ultimate cost, but, judging from the statements which have been made by the proponents of the bill, I had not the remotest idea that the amount to be paid out by the Government would be anything like the staggering sum the Senator now demonstrates will have to be paid out annually by the Treasury.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in direct and indirect subsidies granted under this bill it will not be a dollar less than $77,000,000, and in my judgment it will mean the taxation of the American people, directly or indirectly, to the extent of not less than $100,000,000 a year. Furthermore, the Senator knows, and we all know, that once this subsidy is granted to the shipping interests, from now on we will have a lobby here working with Members of the House and working with Members of the Senate to increase the gratuities that are given in this bill. It is the history of all gratuities. As soon as you give a gratuity there is an immediate demand for an additional gratuity from the parties who get it.

I want to say right here—and I will depart from the order in which I expected to make the proposals that I have here long enough to say it—that we not only have here the granting of a subsidy itself but we are establishing two principles, two policies, that ought not to be established in this country. One of them is to tax all the people for the benefit of this favored class of people and pay the money to them. The other one is that while every other citizen of this Republic is taxed under the income tax law—there are no exceptions; the President is not excepted; the Chief Justice of this Republic is not excepted; no person is excepted except alone the shipping interests that are so tenderly cared for in this bill—the income taxes alone that are remitted to this favored class of people will amount, according to Mr. Lasker, to not less than $10,000,000 a year, and according to other experts the amount may run as high as $20,000,000 a year. It is an indefensible proposition.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think I ought to suggest to the Senator there that the Commerce Committee has stricken out, by way of amendment, those provisions. Of course, the amendment has not been adopted, but that is the recommendation of the Commerce Committee—that those provisions be stricken out.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am delighted to hear that. They appear in the bill as reported by the committee, and there has been no formal notice here that such an amendment was going to be offered.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, yes; it is stricken out in the bill, beginning on page 10 of the printed bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Down to page 20?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I think about that far.

Mr. McKELLAR. All of Title II is stricken out?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I congratulate the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Well, that is hardly correct—not all of Title II, but all of Title II relating to the exemption. There is a depreciation provision that stays in.

Mr. McKELLAR. How much will that amount to?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is just a provision with reference to fixing a rule for determining the depreciation of vessels. Of course that does not amount to any particular sum. I do not know how much it would amount to. It is more particulary designed to determine a basis to put our people upon an equality with other people in the way of depreciation. The tax exemptions appear from page 9 down to line 19, page 18, of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. In the first place I want to congratulate the Senator from Washington and his committee on taking this un-American, unnecessary, improper special favor, special privilege, out of the bill. It ought to have been taken out, of course. It ought never to have been in the bill. I congratulate the Senator and his committee upon their fairness and sense of justice and sense of Americanism in not forcing all other American taxpayers to pay income taxes and permitting only the favored shipping trust, which is proposed to be built up by this bill, to have its income taxes remitted.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Do I understand that the bill as originally recommended by Mr. Lasker contained the provision about which the Senator complains?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, of course; he laid great stress upon it.

Mr. TRAMMELL. And that was indorsed by the President?

Mr. McKELLAR. It was indorsed by the President and indorsed by Mr. Lasker. Well, I will say this: The President's indorsement of it just referred to the whole project as submitted by Mr. Lasker. As I understand, President Harding has taken this position about the bill: Mr. Lasker caused a study, as he calls it, to be made by experts in his board as to what kind of a bill ought to be prepared and passed; and thereupon, after he had received the bill as prepared by those who made the study, he approved it and recommended it to the President, and the President has already recommended it twice, I believe, or maybe three times, to the Congress.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is the original form of the bill as it passed the House?

Mr. McKELLAR. It passed the House in that shape.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I think it is but fair to say that these two provisions are in the act of 1920, signed by a Democratic President, passed without any party division in the Senate and in the House, or at least in the Senate, and that the language of these two provisions is simply the expert language expressing the exemptions provided in the act of 1920.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, as I understand, if these provisions are stricken out as the committee has stricken them out it will leave the present law, which is a modified and a lesser proposition than is contained in this bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I doubt if it is a lesser proposition than contained in this bill in these respects, but——

Mr. McKELLAR. Then why was the amendment offered?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Here is the situation: The provisions in the act of 1920 have never really been put into effect, because the rules and regulations provided for therein have not yet been framed and adopted by the Treasury Department.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am very glad to hear that; and I want to say to the Senator that when we come to consider the bill I am going to offer an amendment repealing the provisions of the act of 1920 in so far as exemption from income taxes is concerned. It ought to be done. It is absolutely without merit of any kind, nature, or description. It is unfair and unjust to the other taxpayers of this country to have to pay income taxes and have the shipping interests of the country not required to pay them.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to say that, in my judgment, there were most excellent reasons for the incorporation of the provisions in the act of 1920. I do not believe we ought to bring any partisanship into these matters if we can keep it out, but——

Mr. McKELLAR. That view of it is entirely satisfactory to me, but I am afraid a good deal of partisanship has been brought in.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Not by me.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; not by the Senator from Washington. I acquit him and exonerate him.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do want to say, however, that this provision was proposed by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL]—I know he would not object to my saying so—in the act of 1920; but, as I say, it appealed very strongly to all the members of the committee. My recollection is that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], who was a member of the committee, did not oppose it at that time because, of course, the conditions were different then from what they are now, and the purpose of those amendments was to encourage the building of some new, up-to-date ships that everybody concedes that we need, and it was thought that the excess-profits taxes and different taxes then could be used to very great advantage. While it would relieve the individuals, of course, yet it would not relieve them from actual taxation. They would have to put that money into the fund used for the building of these ships.

Conditions are entirely different now from what they were then, but those are simply the facts—that the provisions are in the act of 1920, and this is simply putting them in expert language, they claim. We used what we thought was just plain, common-sense language in telling what it was desired to do, but apparently the experts of the Treasury and other departments could not tell what we wanted to do, and so they have never yet adopted the rules and regulations to carry them out; and our committee thought it was well then to strike these provisions out of this bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I believe this is one of the first occasions I have ever had in my life to compliment most cordially the expert. Long life to them, if they will keep the hands of private interests out of the Treasury!

Mr. JONES of Washington. They were not intending to do it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope they will not attempt to put new life into the old law, because we are not going to have a new law on the subject, according to the report of the committee, and I am going to recommend to the Senate very urgently that it adopt some amendment repealing the remission from taxation provisions of the old law.

While I am on that subject, I want to stop long enough to ask the Senator from Washington if, under the old law, what is known as the Standard Oil fleet and the United States Steel Corporation fleet and the United Fruit Co. fleet are exempted from their income taxes?

Mr. JONES of Washington. They would be covered by that provision in the act of 1920; that is, they would be permitted to take advantage of that provision.

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, there would be a remission of taxes to the Standard Oil Co., the United States Steel Corporation, and the United Fruit Co., each of which has a most successful and flourishing fleet of ships of its own?

Mr. JONES of Washington. They were not excepted at that time. The real object of those two exemptions, as I said, was to secure the building of fast combined passenger and freight ships that we do not have. That was the object of it, and that was the only justification that the committee had for recommending it to the Senate, and there was not any controversy on the floor of the Senate with reference to it.

Mr. McKELLAR. All I say is, in perfect good nature, that the Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from Louisiana were certainly wrong when they sat there and permitted that provision to go in two years ago—that is, if they could have kept it out—just as I believe the Senator from Washington was wrong in 1916 when he was not cordially for building up our merchant marine as then proposed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to suggest that those Senators did not sit here and let it go through. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], I know, was very earnestly in favor of it, and proposed it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Well, that just made him still more wrong.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is just a difference of opinion as to the correctness of their judgment or the Senator's.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, of course; but in my judgment they were very wrong in voting these special privileges to the great shipping interests that I have named and other shipping interests that are in a similar situation.

Now, Mr. President, I want to return to the program I have mapped out to say this:

Mr. Lasker's testimony on examination in chief and cross-examination makes it absolutely impossible for anyone to vote for this bill for the reasons that he gives; and why do I say that? I hope Senators will listen to me.

Mr. Lasker says that the reason for our taxing the American people and giving this special subsidy to the shipping interests is, first, that there is a difference now in original capital cost of building ships between our country and foreign countries, and that they can be built for less in foreign countries than they can here in our country, and that this subsidy will equalize the costs.

The next proposition is that the interest rates are less in foreign countries.

The third proposition is that the insurance rates are less in foreign countries.

The fourth proposition is that the labor cost is less in foreign countries.

The fifth proposition is that subsistence costs on our ships are greater than they are in foreign countries.

Those are the five propositions.

I maintain that Mr. Lasker himself has disproved every one of those propositions, and I propose to show it by the record. I first call attention to the original capital cost. It is proposed by Mr. Lasker to sell these ships at $30 a ton to the shipowners. He says that is the world's price. By the way, there is no world's price. How can he talk about a world's price for shipping a year like this? It is absurd and ridiculous. Probably nearly half of the world's shipping is hung up in the harbors. Sixty-five per cent of Italy's ships are laid up. Twenty-five per cent of Great Britain's enormous merchant marine is laid up, without business. We have some 10,000,000 tons laid up without business, without cargoes. Who is going to buy those ships? He talks about selling them at world prices. He talks about giving subsidies in order to sell them. Who is going to buy them? Mr. Lasker himself does not claim in his testimony that even if this bill passes he can sell over 100,000 tons out of 10,000,000 tons. Why are we talking about selling them?

While I am on that subject, let me say this, it seems to me that a 10-year-old child ought to know better than to suggest the selling of ships at such a time. America, with the greatest merchant marine in the world, second to that of Great Britain, over 6,000,000 tons of great steel cargo vessels and a very large amount of passenger tonnage, the greater part of it laid up, doing nothing. It can not be sold at any price. I doubt if it could be given away. He should have said also that that condition obtains throughout the world. It obtains in England, in Norway and Sweden, in Denmark, in France, in Italy, Japan, and everywhere. There never was such a depression in shipping in the world as there is to-day. It is the worst year the shipping interests have ever had. They have not the cargoes; they have not the business.

Why should we take these splendid ships this year and undertake to sell them? They cost us $3,000,000,000. Of course, I do not charge any wrongdoing. I do not know of any wrongdoing anywhere in regard to the matter, but if it were desired to defraud the Government, you could not find a better time to do it than now, nor a better way than by putting these ships on the market at the present time. They can not sell them. There is no way to sell them. They could not sell them if you passed this bill. The Shipping Board have had the authority to sell them, under the present law, for two years, but they have sold practically none, because there is no market for them; and when Mr. Lasker talks about a world market and selling these ships at world-market prices, he is talking about something he knows is misleading.

But I go on about the capital cost. Representative HARDY cross-examined Mr. Lasker. Mr. HARDY had made a study of the needs of the shipping business, as his cross-examination showed. Mind you, Mr. Lasker proposes to sell but 3,000,000 tons of cargo shipping. He wants to scrap the other 3,000,000 tons. He is fixing to organize a trust. He is fixing to give away the 3,000,000 best tons of shipping, as he calls them, to private interests, and pay a subsidy, in these hard times, to run them, and then he proposes to sink or dismantle the other 3,000,000 of what he calls poor tons, so that they may not come in competition with the 3,000,000 good tons in private hands in the future. Was there ever a scheme better calculated to build up a trust in this country? I say there never has been. This is what Mr. Lasker said about the capital cost:

(Hearings, page 25.)

Mr. HARDY. Then, as to that 3,000,000 tons, is there any advantage to the Britisher on the question of original cost—that is, your first element?

Mr. LASKER. Taking it by and large; no.

And again:

(Hearings, page 26.)

Mr. HARDY. Now, then, to get get back to the question, with this little bit that is owned and with the vast quantity that may be sold by the Shipping Board to enterprising merchants in America at the cheapest price in the world, have they not got an equal opportunity, so far as original cost is concerned, with the British?

Mr. LASKER. Over a term of years, the answer is unequivocally "Yes."

And again:

(Hearings, page 28.)

Mr. HARDY. All right. What I wanted to get at is this: That according to your statement, the American shipowner now can get his ships as cheaply as they can be gotten in the world, of the same kind?

Mr. LASKER. Yes, sir.

This enormous shipping, which he wants to sell at zero prices, is already built, and if he is allowed by this bill to sell it at zero prices, that will be cheaper than any other nation in the world can build ships. Even Mr. Lasker knows that. He has learned that much about shipping. It did not dawn on him at first, but at last it has dawned on him that that is cheaper than they could be gotten for in other countries.

INTEREST.

The next item of difference mentioned by Mr. Lasker is interest, and a complete answer to this is the act of 1920. The Shipping Board is authorized under that act to lend money to shipowners at any rate of interest. They can lend it at 1 per cent or 2 per cent or any other per cent. They can lend it cheaper than England lends it to her shipowners. The present bill increases the rate of interest and Mr. Lasker says he is satisfied with the present bill. Besides this, he admits in his testimony that the interest rates authorized by us are less than those of Great Britain. He says:

(Hearings, page 32.)

Mr. HARDY. Do you anticipate the Britisher can get any better terms of interest?

Mr. LASKER. No, sir. If I thought he would be able to do it I would have proposed less than I have.

He proposes 2 per cent. I stop here long enough to say that it took those of us who felt an interest in agriculture in this country some 10 years to get a bill passed by which the farmers could go to the Government and borrow money on a 50 per cent valuation of their farms at 5½ per cent interest. Yet by this bill, recommended by Mr. Lasker and recommended by the President of the United States, they come forward and say, "We sell you the ship at zero, then lend you two-thrids of its value," instead of one-half, as they lend the farmers, "at 2 per cent," instead of 5½ per cent. Who is going to stand for that discrimination against the American farmer? We will lend to the American farmer 50 per cent of the value of his farm, the best security in the world, at 5½ per cent, but we will take the shipping trust and let them appraise their ships, not half as good security as the farm, and we will lend them the money on two-thirds of the appraised value, according to Mr. Lasker, at 2 per cent. I thank the House for having put it up to 4½. What the conferees will make it, I do not know, but I imagine Mr. Lasker will have his way about it, so that he can lend money to these favored interests of his at rates cheaper than British rates.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator that as the Senate committee has approved the House rate that matter will not be in conference.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is a long time before it will get to conference. If it is agreed to it will be 4½ per cent.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The committee recommended it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know it has been recommended, but it may be changed before it gets to conference.

Now, I read further from the testimony:

Mr. HARDY. Do you anticipate the British shipper can get any better terms of interest?

Mr. LASKER. No, sir. If I thought he would be able to do it I would have proposed less than I have.

Mr. HARDY. Then, the interest charge here will be no greater than there?

Mr. LASKER. I want to make the interest less here than it is there.

Mr. HARDY. Let us suppose you have it equal.

Mr. LASKER. No; let us suppose we have it less. I won't stand for it being equal.

Mr. HARDY. Then if it is less there won't be any disadvantage to the American shipowner?

Mr. LASKER. Sure there won't.

Under the present law Mr. Lasker can lend money to the Shipping Trust at 2 per cent, or less than 2 per cent, if he desires, and yet he comes before the Congress, thinking that probably Members of the House and Senate would not look into the question, and says that one of the reasons why the American merchant marine should be subsidized is because of the difference between the interest British shipowners have to pay and what Americans have to pay.

INSURANCE.

On the question of insurance, Mr. Lasker testified:

(Page 36.)

Mr. HARDY. I have been with the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries in the House, doing all I can to try to get up a system of marine insurance that would give us equal rates with any other country. I think we ought to have them. I believe we can have them. So far as the Shipping Board is concerned, they own so many ships that probably they can carry their own insurance.

Mr. LASKER. I think they ought to. I think that is our first point of agreement, and I am exploring that now. My mind is running in your direction.

Mr. HARDY. There is no question about that.

Mr. LASKER. The only thing is the setting up of the machinery for making prompt settlement.

Now, since that time an insurance bill in accord with Mr. Lasker's views has been passed and no complaint is made that there is any difference in the matter of insurance, according to Mr. Lasker's own testimony.

LABOR.

Mr. Lasker very shortly disposed of his contention of the difference on labor. He says:

But I do know this, that to-day the labor cost between Britain and the United States is closer together than it ever was before in the history of shipping.

His testimony absolutely refutes the idea that there is any difference in favor of foreign shipowners, in so far as the cost of labor is concerned, and all the tables that are presented and the studies referred to, and the witnesses examined, show that there is essentially no difference in cost. The Americans pay their seamen slightly more, but they have fewer in number, and their efficiency is greater, so that labor costs are substantially the same, and Mr. Lasker destroys by his testimony the very contention he makes on the subject of labor. The labor situation is thus summed up by Mr. Lasker:

Mr. HARDY. If that is left out of this, then I do not want to go into that, except I have a statement here showing the difference in cost of crews amounts to nothing.

Mr. LASKER. I don't know at the present moment that it does amount to anything. (Hearings, p. 36.)

SUBSISTENCE.

The last element of difference claimed by Mr. Lasker was the difference in the cost of subsistence. In his own testimony on cross-examination he just as effectively disposes of this contention:

(Hearings, page 36.)

Mr. HARDY. You pay more for coal and oil in the United States?

Mr. SMULL. We pay the same for them here as there.

Mr. HARDY. Then there is no difference in the fuel cost on coal?

Mr. LASKER. It never has been claimed.

THE LA FOLLETTE SEAMAN'S ACT.

To the credit of Mr. Lasker, he did not claim that the so-called La Follette Seaman's Act, so commonly alleged to be a reason why American shipping could not succeed, was hurtful to the American merchant marine. This contention he very effectively disposed of on cross-examination:

(Hearings, page 43.)

Mr. BANKHEAD I understand from the President's address to Congress, and also from the statement that you have made, that you do not undertake to recommend or urge any material change in the seaman's act that now exists.

Mr. LASKER. You are right. I want to take occasion to say here that I think the seaman's act has been one of the most misrepresented acts of which I have ever heard. I came down to Washington believing, as most people in my part of the country do, if you repeal the seaman's act you would have a merchant marine. That is pure bunk.

CONCLUSIONS FROM MR. LASKER'S TESTIMONY.

So that, Mr. President, if we are to consider this bill from Mr. Lasker's testimony there is no reason for its passage. He himself disproves his own cause. The object of the bill, of couse, is to get a direct subsidy from the Government. He bases this demand for a direct subsidy upon five different contentions, and then proceeds by his testimony to disprove his claim in each case. Mr. Lasker makes out a stronger case than any other witness. The remainder of the Shipping Board's testimony is in line with his, and so, upon the facts in the record, the reasons for a direct subsidy are not only not made manifest but they are actually disproved by the principal proponent of the bill.

Yet with this testimony and the other testimony, with these studies which have been made in the Shipping Board, all upholding these contentions, the President and Mr. Lasker come before Congress and ask Congress to give this favored trust a cash subsidy of from $35,000,000 to $50,000,000 a year, with power in the Shipping Board to double it, and on the ground that there is a difference between the original cost of construction and the present cost, that there is a difference in the rates of interest, that there is a difference in the cost of labor, that there is a difference in the cost of construction, a difference in insurance, and in subsistence. Mr. Lasker disproves everything that was so claimed, and I challenge Senators favoring the bill to dispute the facts brought out on the cross-examination of Mr. Lasker.

SUBSIDY, NOT A MERCHANT MARINE.

The fact is, Mr. President, that our Republican friends are after a subsidy for special interests and not after building up a merchant marine. They have never cared to build up a merchant marine unless it could be used as a vehicle of transferring Government funds to special interests. They were in control of the Government for nearly 50 years following the Civil War. They never took any steps to build up a merchant marine except on one occasion when they undertook to pass a subsidy bill, and therefore it must be apparent to everyone that their main purpose has been throughout their history not to build up a merchant marine save as a method of transferring public funds to the shipping interests. Take Mr. Lasker's testimony. He is not concerned about a merchant marine. He decries the merchant marine. He runs it down as much as possible. He sneers at it. He throws cold water on the entire proposition, but he is strong for the subsidy to the special interests. The whole of his testimony is aimed at subsidy for the special interests. Apparently he has no thought of building up our shipping. He says nothing about getting business for the merchant marine. It is only to get a subsidy for the owners.

ATTITUDE OF SHIPPING BOARD AGAINST AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. President, as I have stated before, the whole attitude of the Shipping Board is unfavorable to the building up of an American merchant marine. They do not try to get business. They do not try to hold on to business. Their actions sometimes indicate they are not loyal to the American merchant marine. I am going to read a correspondence that took place between Mr. J. B. Smull and myself in August, 1921, Mr. Smull being one of the $35,000 a year men employed by the Shipping Board. This correspondence shows that the Shipping Board's policy was even then a policy of tying up as many ships as possible. They did not want business. They not only did not try to get business, but they tried to keep from taking business. I do not charge that Mr. Smull or Mr. Robinson were in the employ of British shipping interests. I assume, of course, they were not, but if they had been in the employ of the British shipping interests they could not have any better served the British shipping interests than they did in their actions in this matter. Mr. Humphreys afterwards chartered an English vessel and carried his cakes to an English port in an English vessel, when, of course, if the American Shipping Board had wanted to take the business they had the first call on it. This is an isolated case, but it shows the policy of the Shipping Board; it shows the thought of the Shipping Board; it shows that as far back as 1921 the Shipping Board was trying to force itself out of the shipping business.

I come to that phase of the question, which I examined very closely a number of years ago. The present Shipping Board is composed of men against whom I have nothing to say personally. Two of them are as warm friends as I have in the world, one of them a lifelong friend, and another one served in this Chamber with me, and I am devoted to both. I have nothing but the highest respect and esteem for them. I have nothing personal against them. But the truth is that the Shipping Board does not want the American merchant marine to succeed as it is going on. They do not want it to prosper. They do not want it built up. They have other fish to fry. They are not attempting to get business. I say they have never attempted to get business. What they have been trying to do is to lay up ships in the harbors of the country and not to put them to work. I have the indisputable evidence of that, and I now submit it to the Senate and to the country. It came about in August, 1921, in a peculiar way, just after the present board went in. I read the first telegram that brought it about:

[Telegram.]

AUGUST 25, 1921.

Senator K. MCKELLAR,
Washington, D. C.:

Kindly make diligent inquiries of Shipping Board to ascertain how we may proceed to obtain by charter the services of an American steamer to handle full cargo about 8,000 tons cottonseed cakes late October, loading Houston, Tex., to two United Kingdom ports. We naturally desire secure rates somewhat lower than prevails for lesser quantities. Is there any just reason why we can not charter direct with Shipping Board?

HUGH HUMPHREYS.

Mr. Humphreys is a large cottonseed product dealer in Memphis, one of the best merchants we have there, one of the most influential men we have there, one of the best men I ever knew, able financially, and in every other sense a splendid man, good for any contract he might make. I immediately called the Shipping Board—this Shipping Board to some of whose members is being paid the enormous salary of $35,000 a year to look after American shipping interests—and here is what I was compelled to telegraph my constituent that afternoon:

[Telegram.]

AUGUST 25, 1921.

Mr. HUGH HUMPHREYS,
Memphis, Tenn.:

Telegram received. Called Shipping Board at once. Mr. Smull, in charge of allocation, out of city. Be here to-morrow. Mr. Robinson advises that you can get cakes hauled cheaper by British ships. Will see Mr. Smull when he returns and urge him to let you have ship and at less cost than the British ship.

KENNETH MCKELLAR.

Here is the letter I wrote Mr. Smull that very afternoon:

AUGUST 25, 1921.

Mr. J. B. SMULL,
Shipping Board, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SMULL: Inclosed please find telegram from Mr. Hugh Humphreys, of Memphis, Tenn., one of the best and most reliable merchants and brokers there, which telegram explains itself.

I have talked to your Mr. Robinson about the matter, and he did not give me much encouragement, saying that the British could haul the freight cheaper than the American ship could be chartered for. If everybody is told this, we might as well sink our ships. It seems to me that every effort should be made to have Mr. Humphreys charter this ship and haul his cottonseed cakes in it. Mr. Robinson told me that you would be back to-morrow, and I will be greatly obliged if you will advise me over the telephone as soon as you come to a conclusion about it.

I am wiring Mr. Humphreys, and inclose you a copy of my telegram.

Very sincerely yours,

KENNETH MCKELLAR.

It will be seen that this letter and the two telegrams all occurred on the same afternoon. The next day Mr. Smull returned—Mr. Smull, the gentleman to whom we are paying the enormous salary of $35,000 a year to look after the American ships and to look after American business on those ships. Here is the letter which I received from Mr. Smull and which I now read:

AUGUST 26, 1922.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have just returned from New York in connection with the United States mail matters, and find your letter of yesterday awaiting my attention.

I regret I was not here to talk to you in person when you called on the phone yesterday. I have taken this matter up with Mr. Robinson, and while he may have explained himself very bluntly, facts are stranger than fiction, and the fact remains that all full-cargo tramp steamers under foreign flags can operate more cheaply than Shipping Board steamers.

I might add that the conference rate for cottonseed cakes from the Gulf to the United Kingdom ports has been fixed by the American and British interests at $10 per 2,240 pounds. The present market rate for a full-cargo tramp steamer in the same trade is approximately $6.50 to $7 per ton, and your constituent can probably obtain a foreign steamer at this figure. The Shipping Board would lose money on any steamer they put into this trade at this rate.

Incidentally this explains to you why the Shipping Board is laying up its steamers as fast as they can be laid up, in order to stop losses, and this situation will only adjust itself with an improved condition in the general export situation.

Very truly yours,

J. B. SMULL, Vice President.

Thirty-five thousand dollars a year are we paying to this vice president of the Shipping Board to advise American citizens to ship their goods and wares upon British ships and not upon American ships! He is the man who, when business is presented to him and no question raised about price, gives that sort of advice. Mr. Humphreys wanted an American ship; he wanted to move his cargo. He did not demand that the Shipping Board lose money. He did not demand that the Shipping Board even operate the ship. He asked only that he be allowed to charter a ship to carry his goods from Texas to two United Kingdom ports, and this $35,000-a-year man, without whom the Government apparently can not get along, without whom the Shipping Board would go into even worse bankruptcy than it now is, this man, with nearly a thousand steamers laid up doing nothing, recommended to my constituent that he charter a British ship!

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. MCKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The statement by the Senator from Tennessee and the letter he just concluded may throw some light on why the Shipping Board has not made money and why it has lost so much money.

Mr. MCKELLAR. That is just the reason why I read it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Any business concern conducted upon the principle that the manager rejects business and notifies those offering business to transact it with rivals or competitors would more than likely find the business increasingly unprofitable.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Yes; what the Senator from Arkansas has said is absolutely correct. What effect is this going to have? Mr. Humphreys is a leader in the business of cottonseed products in my State and in my city. Does anyone suppose any other cottonseed products man or any other merchant of Memphis at all attempted after that time to get an American ship when thus treated by Mr. Smull? And yet he is in charge of allocation; he allots the ships to Americans who want to buy ships, and he is paid $35,000 a year.

I do not charge Mr. Smull with being an agent of the British Admiralty. Oh, no! I am sure he is not. But let us assume for the moment that he was a different kind of man from what he is, and that he was an agent of the British Admiralty in disguise as an officer of the American Shipping Board; could he have done any more to build up the British shipping and could he have done any more to break down American shipping? I say, Mr. President, that Mr. Smull, if he entertains the views that he expressed in that letter, ought not to be an officer of the American Shipping Board. I am surprised that he remains an officer after writing such a letter.

Now, I want to read the completion of that matter. I have it here. I have another letter dated a few days afterwards, August 28, 1921, from Mr. Humphreys, and I want to read that. I want Senators to bear particularly in mind that he is talking about a man who is so important to the Government that we have to pay him more than twice as much as we pay the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, that we pay him more than twice as much as Cabinet officers, and more than four times as much as Senators and Representatives. Here is Mr. Humphreys's criticism:

Memphis, Tenn., August 29, 1921.—Senator K. D. MCKELLAR, Washington, D. C.—

He calls me by an affectionate name; we are very intimate friends—

DEAR K. D.: Thank you for your usual promptness in handling the matter of the Shipping Board, and which is in line with the attention that you always give any request.

I agree with you that the letter you sent is a remarkable one and is a complete admission of the inability of the Shipping Board to handle the ships of the country. In my own opinion, the trouble is that they have never handled themselves in a businesslike way and have never entered the shipping business as other shipping companies conduct their affairs. I simply can not understand why the boats are not leased or chartered to various shipping interests of the world, but instead are endeavoring to handle them in a most unbusinesslike way.

The pre-war rate from Gulf ports to Europe was about 10 shillings. To-day the Shipping Board, with everything at about normal prices, confess they can not operate at more than four times that rate.

Don't wake up the Washington office of the Shipping Board—

It has been so long ago—a year and a half having passed—that I feel it is time they should be awakened when they are trying to tax the American people for the cash subsidy which they proposed—

Don't wake up the Washington office of the Shipping Board, but the conference rate, instead of being $10 per ton, as stated in their wire, is $8 per ton, and is being so quoted by all of their agents.

Mr. Smull missed it only 20 per cent! That is pretty good for a $35,000-a-year man. He is surely a great expert, without whom the Shipping Board could not run, according to the statement of Senators of a year ago when they were apppropriating the $35,000 for his salary, that he could not have come any closer than 20 per cent, so I think we ought to congratulate him for not making a greater mistake. Mr. Smull telegraphed that the conference rate was $10 per ton, when his own agent telegraphed him that it was $8 a ton—

We do not wish this mentioned, because it might result in their tying up still more steamers and allowing the American produce to rot or be sold at perfectly ridiculous prices because of their inability to properly operate the steamers.

I wish you would send the original of the Shipping Board letter and my original telegram over to Senator MCKINLEY, who is president of the Mississippi Valley Association, as I would like for him to see the total impossibility of Americans trying to do business in their own ships. The idea of admitting to other countries that we can not compete, and tying up our ships, is simply beyond my process of reasoning.

With kind regards,

Yours very truly, HUGH HUMPHREYS.

We remember the condition then prevailing. American produce was rotting on our own shores because of lack of vessels to transport it, and the member of the Shipping Board to whom we are paying $35,000 a year was tying up our ships in various harbors. I presume the Shipping Board must take some pride in being able to tell the world that we have a harbor at Jamaica Bay, near New York, completely filled with steel vessels belonging to the Shipping Board; that we have vessels tied up in Delaware Bay; that we have them tied up in the James River; that we have them tied up all along the Atlantic seaboard. They wished to tie them up; they did not want the business.

In his testimony that was given to us Mr. Lasker talks about subsidy and about small salaries the greater part of the time, but rarely mentions the fact that the Shipping Board needs business in order to do well and to prosper.

I read another letter:

Memphis, Tenn., September 10, 1921—

That was about 15 days after the $35,000-a-year agent of the Government turned down Mr. Humphreys's request to charter a ship—

Senator K. D. MCKELLAR,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR K. D.: I inclose a copy of the telegram sent you as requested:

"I do not believe that the Shipping Board is trying to further any other interest; they simply are admitting their own incompetency and the further fact that the whole arrangement they have of handling the steamers is wrong. I would suggest that a committee composed of some American exporters and American shipping agents be appointed by the President or some one else to study this Shipping Board problem, not with the view of its expense, etc., but with the view of making it serviceable and available to the public and be operated upon the same principles as other shipping interests are operated in other countries, and not with the view of certain governmental iron-clad regulations of trying to force business to meet those regulations rather than providing something that is efficient."

Yours very truly, HUGH HUMPHREYS.

With a record like this, with a record of inefficiency, with a record of failure to attempt to get business, with a record of refusing business when it is tendered to them on a silver platter, are these gentlemen in any position now to come forward and demand that the American people be taxed in the sum of perhaps $100,000,000 a year for the next 10 years? They wish to make the contract obligatory upon Congress to appropriate the money for the next 10 years, with probably a billion dollars to go to the Shipping Trust in that time, and to put it beyond the power of Congress to abrogate the contracts. Are they in any position to come to us and ask for such a favor for these special interests? I say they are not in that position; their record is not such that they can come to us as they do and make that request.

Mr. President, I have already discussed President Harding's statement. I do not condemn President Harding. It is perfectly natural that he should take the view of the chief of the Shipping Board. Surely he does and we know he does; but, Mr. President, the only thing that I would criticize in the President's message is that he ought to have examined into the matter; he ought to have looked into these figures; he ought to have investigated the reasons before he came here and recommended that the American people be taxed $100,000,000 a year for 10 years; and it may be twice that much in the next 10 years; for we all know that once the camel gets its nose into the tent it is very difficult ever to get him out and that he usually gets his whole body in. The President of the United States, it seems to me, owed it to the American people to examine into the facts and figures presented to him by the Shipping Board before he recommended this proposed legislation to Congress.

Mr. President, I referred a moment ago to the fact that this was not a time to sell ships in any event. Of course it is not a time to sell them. We could not sell any ships if we should pass this law. By the way, Mr. Lasker does not think that we could sell more than 100,000 tons out of 10,000,000 tons. How he fixes the amount at 100,000 tons nobody knows, and he does not himself say. However, why should we select this year of all years to sell ships when the whole world has ships tied up and doing nothing; when ships can be had virtually for nothing everywhere? Why should we require the Shipping Board to sell the ships at such a time as this? It is not good business; it is not prudent; and if we permit it we shall commit a grievous wrong upon the American people.

Now, I come to just one other statement. On page 7 of the hearings, here is what Mr. Lasker had to say:

> Of the 6,000,000 tons of freighters the Government possesses, it is the hope of the Shipping Board that ultimately a great measure of the 3,000,000 good tons will find itself in the hands of American owners, should the legislation here proposed be adopted. It is doubtful if under the happiest conditions the American flag will need the 3,000,000 good tons in its entirety—

I interrupt my reading of Mr. Lasker's testimony long enough to say at this point, Mr. President, that that statement alone is proof positive that Mr. Lasker ought not to be at the head of the Shipping Board. The idea of any American citizen saying that America will never need as much as 3,000,000 tons of cargo shipping! Mr. Lasker establishes a limit, and then proceeds in this statement further to say that the other 3,000,000 tons of cargo shipping ought to be dismantled and put out of business, because it might come into competition with the ships that are embraced in the 3,000,000 tons of good shipping. Such a statement from the chairman of the Shipping Board is unpatriotic. We all know that in the years to come America will have as many tons of shipping as will any other nation in the world, because America has cargoes to carry in her ships. We do a greater business and the products of America which are carried in ships are greater than those of any other nation in the world, and the time is coming, notwithstanding what these advocates of a hothouse merchant marine may say, when we are going to build a merchant marine in this country which will carry our products of every kind, nature, and description to the markets of the world.

Mr. Lasker proceeds—> and ways and means must be found to dispose of such of the good tonnage as remains, so that American interests will not be hurt.

He wants to sell a portion of these ships and keep the remainder so that those who buy the good ships may not be hurt in the future. I do not charge Mr. Lasker with wrongdoing, but suppose a man wanted to do wrong; suppose he wanted to dispose of our merchant marine to certain favored individuals and fix matters so that they could always make large profits out of the ships thus disposed of, what better arrangement could be suggested than the arrangement which Mr. Lasker suggests, namely, that we shall sell such of the ships as are good; that we shall sell the best cargo tonnage to these favored interests and then destroy the remainder so that they will never have any competition in the future?

Mr. Lasker goes on to say—

> Under no circumstances must the surplus good tonnage that America can not absorb be disposed of so as to bankrupt those who buy from the Government at current prices.
>
> Automatically the 3,000,000 poor tons must be done away with. Part of it can be used by selling to Americans the hulls at low figures for conversion to types of freighters of which we are not possessed. The balance may either be sold in small quantities in local trades abroad, if any, where because of shorter runs and cheaper labor local operation may be possible, or it must largely be dismantled. For if we permit a potential surplus to remain, with the possibility of its use in only abnormally prosperous times when any tonnage can be profitably operated, the burden of loss will fall on the good tonnage in times of adversity without full enjoyment of profit in time of prosperity, and thus we depress the price of all of our tonnage, and so it will come to pass that we shall liquidate the whole for less than we could liquidate the good part.

ONE WAY TO BUILD UP A MERCHANT MARINE—BUSINESS.

Mr. President, there is but one way to build up an American merchant marine, and that is to get business for it, to get cargoes for it. Our merchant marine does not need a subsidy. It needs cargoes. Our ships are not lying idle because of the failure of Congress to grant subsidies to them. They are lying idle because they have not cargoes to carry. And the condition in America is not different from what it is elsewhere. Ships in every country are tied up. They are tied up for the want of business, not because they do not get subsidies or can not get subsidies. It is because they can not get business. If business is obtained for our ships they will not be laid up. They will not be idle. They will be busy. And so, Mr. President, it is a puerile thing to do for the Government to attempt to run our ships, unless they have got business, and to pay for the running of them out of the Public Treasury; and that is what this bill means, and it is easily demonstrated. Take the fleet of the Standard Oil Co. ships. They get no subsidy, and yet they are making enormous profits. Why? Because they have got the business. They have the cargoes, and so with the ships of the United Fruit Co. and the ships of the Steel Corporation. These concerns give them the business, and when they have business they are prosperous. They do not need subsidies. They do not need bounties. They do not need legislation. They are making money right along, even in these, the hardest times ships ever had.

So that I say, Mr. President, that our remedy is not in giving bounties, but our remedy is securing business for our ships. Mr. Lasker says build up our merchant marine by giving subsidies. I answer, build up our merchant marine by obtaining business for our ships. Get them cargoes and they will need no subsidies.

AN ALTERNATIVE PLAN.

It is next claimed by the proponents of this bill that those of us who oppose it have submitted no better plan. The distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. JONES], for whom I have the greatest respect and the highest esteem, says:

> If this plan is not the best plan, he will be for the best plan.

I am not an expert on our merchant marine. I am not an expert on shipping, but it does seem to me that this great Nation of ours has all those things at her command by which and through which a great and successful merchant marine can be built up and maintained, and I want to suggest what seems to me to be a sensible plan, a business plan, of getting business, of getting cargoes for our ships.

Mr. President, I present a skeleton program concerning this matter as follows:

First. I would abolish the Shipping Board and put the affairs of the Shipping Board in the hands of one man and make him responsible for its success. The longer I live and serve in the Congress the more convinced I am that the policy of establishing boards as executives is an unwise policy. It is a dividing of responsibility which makes for divided purpose, which makes for inefficiency, and I believe that executive action should be individual. I believe the best results would come from turning the affairs of this bureau of the Government into the hands of one man and making him responsible.

Second. I have long thought that the American merchant marine should be a part of the Department of Commerce. The agencies of the Department of Commerce—foreign and domestic agencies—should all be used for the purpose of building up our merchant marine and making it successful. Our commerce agents abroad should also be agents of the American merchant marine. I have not thought this out as carefully as it deserves to be considered, but our merchant marine is, or ought to be, simply a carrier for our foreign and domestic commerce, and the agents of our Commerce Department should work in entire harmony with and work for our merchant marine. This Shipping Board admits it has made a failure of operating our ships. Abolish the board and put our shipping in the hands of one man and hold him responsible and it will be more successful.

Third. Our mail should be carried entirely in American ships. In round numbers, last year we paid American vessels about $4,000,000 for carrying our mails and foreign vessels about $2,000,000. All of our mail should be carried in American vessels. This would add $2,000,000 a year of business to our Shipping Board. It would aid in furnishing cargoes for our merchant marine. It would aid in furnishing business for our merchant marine, and this we ought to do.

Fourth. We should pass laws providing that immigrants to this country should be brought in American vessels. Why do we permit this enormous business to go principally to foreign vessels? We restrict immigration. We lay down rules and regulations upon which immigrants shall come to this country. We have an essentially idle merchant marine. These immigrants are very very desirous to come over here. They would be delighted to come in our vessels. Then why should we not take charge of this very lucrative trade for our own ships? If we did not want to take all of it, surely we should take a very large portion of it. It is a business we can absolutely control. It is a business we should control. It would be a most effective aid in, not furnishing a gratuity to our shipping, but in furnishing business for our shipping by which it could grow in a healthy endeavor.

Fifth. Mr. Lasker informs us—and we assume he is correct—that our Government pays to the ships of other nations on trans-Pacific passengers and cargoes alone the enormous sum of $7,500,000 annually. (Hearings, p. 18.) It is fair to say there seems to be some doubt about what Mr. Lasker means as to this matter.

Why, not a pound of this freight and not a passenger should be allowed to be transported on foreign vessels. It should all be done on American ships. It is unpatriotic in these officers of the Government to travel on foreign ships when they can get American ships that are just as good, and it is unfair in the agents of the Government to ship their cargoes for Government use on foreign vessels. The law should require that they ship these cargoes and passengers on American vessels. This item of business alone would probably amount to $15,000,000 a year, if Mr. Lasker's statement is correct. This will give our merchant marine business. It will not give it a gratuity.

Sixth. Section 34 of the shipping act reads as follows:

SEC. 34. That in the judgment of Congress, articles or provisions in treaties or conventions to which the United States is a party, which restrict the right of the United States to impose discriminating customs duties on imports entering the United States in foreign vessels and in vessels of the United States, and which also restrict the right of the United States to impose discriminatory tonnage dues on foreign vessels and on vessels of the United States entering the United States should be terminated, and the President is hereby authorized and directed within 90 days after this act becomes law to give notice to the several Governments, respectively, parties to such treaties or conventions, that so much thereof as imposes any such restriction on the United States will terminate on the expiration of such periods as may be required for the giving of such notice by the provisions of such treaties or conventions.

But President Wilson and afterwards President Harding both have seen fit to disregard this mandate of Congress on the ground, I am told, that it interferes with the power of the President and the Senate to make and execute treaties. On the other hand, there is nothing better settled than that Congress has the power to abrogate by law treaties already made. The treaties referred to in this section should be abrogated and Congress should if other nations discriminate against us impose discriminating duties on imports entering the United States in foreign vessels and in vessels of the United States. Such a law would create an enormous business for our merchant marine. It would alone be enough, in my judgment, to make our American shipping blossom like a rose if our commercial adversaries continue to discriminate against us.

Seventh. The high tariff wall that has been placed around our country by a recent act of Congress should be removed. We should trade with the rest of the world, and the only way we can trade with it is by buying their goods while we sell them our surplus products.

Eighth. We should repeal that provision of the merchant marine act of 1920 which provides for the remission of income taxes of those engaged in shipping. Such a law is un-American and indefensible.

Ninth. Abolish all tax exemptions.

Tenth. Prohibit anyone connected with the Shipping Board becoming interested in the purchase of any ships for a period of 10 years.

Mr. President, if these suggestions were put into law, in my judgment, they would do more to build up and successfully maintain our shipping than all the direct subsidies in the world.

Eleventh. Prohibit any further sale of steel vessels, passenger or cargo, until there is a better market. No vessels should be sold on the present low market. The shipping tied up idle all over the world makes it a futile thing to talk about, this being an opportune time now for selling ships.

NEED OF A REAL MAN.

Mr. President, there never was such an opportunity for a real shipping man as there is now for one at the head of our merchant marine. It we had our merchant marine in the hands of a man who wanted really to achieve something splendidly great for his country, the opportunity is here and now for such a man. But he must be a man with no other interest, no other views, no other purposes, no other desires, except to build up our merchant marine. He must go into it with his whole heart and soul and mind. Think of what an opportunity it would be! He would already have the richest Government in the world behind him. Congress would delight to uphold him in making our merchant marine a success. But he can not win if he is afraid. He can not win unless he is willing to fight. Of course, he has to fight Great Britain on every sea. He will be obliged to come into competition with British ships everywhere, with Japanese ships and French ships and Italian ships, and the ships of all the other nations of the world, but with this Government behind him there is no reason why he should not soon build up for the United States the greatest merchant marine that there is or ever has been on the seas. It will take a man of nerve; it will take a man of ability; it will take a man of the most scrupulous honesty; it will take a man who is capable of doing great things. If we can find such a man, the opportunity is here for him to make the greatest name for himself of any man in our country, because the building up and maintenance of a merchant marine is the one great American governmental project of the future. No man afraid, no mollycoddle, can do it. It will take a real man.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. MCKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator if he will yield to me for the purpose of permitting me to make a motion to take up another bill in lieu of the bill now pending? I do not desire to take the Senator off the floor, but he can proceed afterwards with his remarks, for my motion will be debatable.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I would rather yield now and proceed later. I yield to the Senator to make such a motion. I hope, then, that an adjournment may be taken until Monday, if it meets with the approval of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no desire to take the Senator off the floor.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I understand that.

Mr. NORRIS. But the motion I intend to make will be debatable and the Senator can resume his remarks on that motion.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I would be very glad, indeed, to be relieved at this time, and I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

PURCHASE AND SALE OF FARM PRODUCTS.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4050, to provide for the purchase and sale of farm products.

I should like to say, if the Senator will permit me, that I have no disposition to crowd that motion to a vote this evening, because I understand that many Senators have gone away. The motion, of course, is itself debatable, so that it need not interfere with the debate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I do not understand that the Senator from Tennessee yielded the floor or intended to yield the floor; but I am not going to make any point against entertaining the motion of the Senator from Nebraska, because he could make it, of course, when the Senator did yield the floor, and he does not intend to press it to a vote this afternoon. So I will make no point under the rules as to the presentation of the motion while the Senator from Tennessee holds the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Would the Senator from Tennessee like to conclude his address this afternoon?

Mr. MCKELLAR. I should prefer to conclude on Monday, unless it is imposing a hardship on the Senator from Washington, which I do not want to impose. I think it will take me only a few minutes to conclude; and, as I said, I would rather conclude on Monday. I will say to the Senator that I am substantially through.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I had hoped that we could remain in session until 4 o'clock.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest to the Senator from Washington that he yield to the request of the Senator from Tennessee. There is not a quorum here, and in all probability it would be impossible to get a quorum.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We shall want a short executive session.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator says he would like to conclude Monday, I am not disposed, under the arrangement that has been made, to press him to conclude to-day; so, with the motion of the Senator from Nebraska pending, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will please suspend until the Chair states the motion. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4050, to provide for the purchase and sale of farm products.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I simply desire to renew the statement I made yesterday, that next week I want to press the shipping bill much more than I have during the present week, and I hope that we may run probably from 11 o'clock until half past 5 or 6 o'clock each day during the week.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry, if the Senator will withhold his motion for a moment. A motion having been made to take up the so-called Norris bill, when we adjourn this afternoon, will that be the pending matter after 2 o'clock on Monday?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has heretofore agreed to recess from to-day until Monday; and the pending question on the reconvening of the Senate on Monday will be the motion made by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. McKELLAR. Regardless of the morning hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There will be no morning hour.

Mr. McKELLAR. If we recess there will be no morning hour, of course.

LLOYD-GEORGE'S WAR MEMOIRS.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, as reflecting an interesting side light on the apparent effort of great European statesmen to influence public opinion in the United States on international political questions, I ask that there be printed in the RECORD an article published in the New York Times of this date relating to the cancellation of a contract by the New York Times and the Chicago Tribune for the publication of the memoirs of Mr. Lloyd-George because of his subsequent arrangement with other publishers to give publicity to political articles by the former British Premier.

I ask unanimous consent that the article may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows.

[From the New York Times of Saturday, December 16, 1922.]

NEW YORK TIMES-CHICAGO TRIBUNE CONTRACT FOR LLOYD-GEORGE'S WAR MEMOIRS CANCELED.

The New York Times and the Chicago Tribune announced on September 15 last that they had jointly purchased for the United States and certain other countries in the Western Hemisphere the serial rights to the war memoirs of Mr. David Lloyd-George, then Prime Minister of England. The price to be paid was £40,000, of which £4,000 was paid in advance. For reasons that will be set forth below, the contract for this purchase has now been canceled, at the instance of the New York Times and the Chicago Tribune, and after legal proceedings had been begun by them against Mr. Lloyd-George.

The contract was signed after representations had been made by the agent that the work had been begun and was then in progress, and that, although Mr. Lloyd-George might soon retire from office and thus gain more time to devote to the work, yet, even if he remained in office, half of it, he hoped, would be delivered to the purchasers by January 1, 1923, and the remainder as rapidly as possible. However, to meet the contingency of Mr. Lloyd-George's long continuance in office and arduous occupation with government labors, a period of two years was allowed for the completion of the work.

With great surprise, therefore, the New York Times and the Chicago Tribune learned on November 23 that Mr. Lloyd-George, who had just retired from the office of Prime Minister, was about to enter into a contract with an American "syndicate" to write weekly and fortnightly articles on current topics for a period that, under a proposed option, might be extended to 108 weeks, overlap the two-year period within which the memoirs were to be completed, and, in the opinion of the purchasers, endangering their delivery and impairing their value.

The two newspapers at once made energetic protest, but on the following day, November 24, Mr. Lloyd-George entered into the new contract, whereupon they urged that the proper course was the cancellation of their contract for the purchase of the memoirs. Mr. Lloyd-George replied that he had not violated his contract with the New York Times and the Chicago Tribune either in letter or in spirit, and that the memoirs would not be delayed. A subsequent communication addressed to the managing editor of the New York Times follows:

18 ABINGDON STREET, WESTMINSTER, S. W. 1,
December 1, 1922.

DEAR SIR: It is with great surprise that I learn that you take exception to the contract I have signed with the United Press for a series of articles on current politics, on the ground that the value of my book on the war will be interfered with by the appearance of these articles before the book is published. I can not take your view that a series of short articles not encroaching in the least upon the material of the book can possibly influence the arrangements you have made for publication of the serial rights.

Moreover, I can assure you that the date of publication of my war memoirs will not be delayed by reason of my contract with the United Press. I am already engaged, and am employing the assistance of others, in accumulating material for these volumes. As the only minister who held high office right through the war I imagine my book will be a contribution which no other person is in a position to make to the story of that tremendous event. Such a work is bound to take time, for all the facts must be carefully considered and verified, and the utmost care will be required in their compilation. It is not desirable, therefore, that the preparation should be hurried, and I intend to take ample time over it, at the same time avoiding any unnecessary delay.

On the other hand, I never supposed for one moment that the contract which I signed with you would preclude me from the publication of political articles. Had there been such a clause in the contract I would never have signed it. Apart from my memoirs, I always intended to write as soon as I left office. I have my living to earn. After 17 years in office I have retired a poor man, and it is absolutely imperative that I should turn to writing as a means of livelihood. The proceeds of the book for which you hold the serial rights are, as you know, to be given to charity.

The terms of my contract are explicit, and I have not deviated from them. But I hate the idea of standing on the legal interpretation. I therefore set forth the above reasons for your judgment lest you should imagine that I am standing merely on the letter of my bond whilst making illegitimate profit for myself by infringing its spirit.

Yours truly,

D. LLOYD-GEORGE.

It was on August 3 that the New York Times and the Chicago Tribune first committed themselves to the purchase of the memoirs, and it was three weeks later when Mr. Lloyd-George, whose prospective profits had in the meantime been criticized in the English press, announced that he would give those profits to charity. The New York Times and the Chicago Tribune were therefore not aware at the time of this commitment of the later announced purpose of Mr. Lloyd-George.

A considerable correspondence by cable ensued upon Mr. Lloyd-George's contracting, on November 24, for the series of articles to be published before the memoirs, but without immediate result. Meanwhile his new articles were being offered to newspapers in America in such phrases as "they will be released long before the memoirs"; "our contract covers everything George will write during the coming year and carries with it option on another year's series," and "new series much more valuable than the memoirs"; "articles being current interest and injuring the value of the memoirs." The originals of some of these messages, as delivered to the persons addressed, are in the possession of the New York Times. Mr. Lloyd-George has expressed strong disapproval of the phrases used in them in offering his new articles to American newspapers, and states that they were issued without his knowledge or authority.

The long cable correspondence failing to produce the desired result, the New York Times and the Chicago Tribune, through their London counsel, the Hon. Sir Charles Russell, began on Wednesday last an action in the High Court of Justice in London against Mr. Lloyd-George, asking for an injunction restraining advertisements disparaging or prejudging or affecting the value of the memoirs, restraining the publication of Mr. Lloyd-George's articles written under the agreement made on November 24 with an American "syndicate," and alternatively asking for the rescission of the contract made by Mr. Lloyd-George with the New York Times and the Chicago Tribune. Leave was granted for a motion to be heard on Friday. On Thursday Messrs. Lewis & Lewis, solicitors for Mr. Lloyd-George, arranged with Sir Charles Russell for the cancellation of the contract of the New York Times and the Chicago Tribune with Mr. Lloyd-George and the return to the two newspapers of the advance payment less a part of the commission that had been paid by Mr. Lloyd-George to his agent.

The settlement was concluded by the two subjoined letters, the first from a member of the firm of Lewis & Lewis, representing Mr. Lloyd-George, to Sir Charles Russell, representing the New York Times and the Chicago Tribune, the second Sir Charles Russell's reply thereto:

ELY PLACE, HOLBORN, December 14, 1922.

DEAR SIR: I have seen Mr. Lloyd-George with reference to my interview with you about his contract with regard to the serial rights of his book on the war with your clients. He wishes to state most emphatically that every shilling he has received has been paid to a separate banking account, and he has not used it in any way for his personal expenditure. He also wishes to add that at the time the contract was signed he had written several chapters, and this I can personally vouch for, as I read them.

The advertisement which you tell me was issued in America was issued without his knowledge or authority, and he disapproves of and expressly repudiates it. He has no wish to continue to remain a party to this contract if your clients wish it dissolved, and he has instructed me to so inform you, but he thinks it due to his honor that any misunderstanding as to the use of the money paid as a deposit should be at once removed.

Please let me hear from you.

Yours sincerely,

REG. WARD POLE.

The Hon. SIR CHARLES RUSSELL, Bart., K. C. V. O.

LONDON, December 14, 1922.

DEAR SIR: I of course accept on behalf of my clients the assurance which you have given me that the amounts paid on account of the price of your client's book have been placed by him to a separate account and have not been touched by him or used for his personal expenditure, and that he always intended to give the whole of the proceeds received by him to charity. I should like to take this opportunity of assuring you that neither I nor they intended to convey any suggestion to the contrary.

I appreciate your offer to cancel the contract, and I am instructed to accept it in the spirit in which it is made. May I conclude by saying that I think your client has met a difficult position in a fair and honorable manner, a view with which I am confident my clients agree.

Yours sincerely,

CHARLES RUSSELL.

The New York Times and the Chicago Tribune desire to say that at no time have they suggested that any improper disposition has been made of any part of the money by Mr. Lloyd-George.

How the New York Times first learned of Mr. Lloyd-George's new plans, and how, through the kindly intervention of a friend in London, opportunity was made, but necessarily rejected, to take the new series of articles away from the "syndicate" that had projected it, is shown in the dispatches assembled in the following cable message sent by the managing editor of the New York Times to its correspondent in London:

NEW YORK, November 23, 1922.

NYETIM, London.

Received to-night following from a London newspaper:

"LONDON, November 23.—Learned to-day Keen, United Press, been negotiating for series 30 articles by Lloyd-George, each article about 2,000 words. Keen guaranteed £7,500, syndicating proceeds beyond that amount to be divided between contributor and United Press. Immediately saw George, begged him not to close with offer until I informed you. He agreed not to close until Saturday, on which day Keen returns to America. Articles will be for publication weekly the first 12 weeks, subsequently at fortnightly intervals. They would be of undoubted world-wide import and interest, the subjects including American relations, reparations, the Irish treaty, the Turkish treaty, the Socialist menace, international trade, our new Parliament. George is strongly impressed by Keen's stating the articles would be published in 150 papers. George values such wide publicity. Reply whether you want his articles. Think could get them for you for definite sum of £8,500, this to include South American newspaper rights. Only knew at last moment of these negotiations, and only my strongest personal entreaties got the matter held up. If you are interested better allow me to go up to £9,000 if necessary to clinch the matter, relying upon me getting you best bargain possible."

To this I sent the following reply:

"NEW YORK, November 23.—We will have absolutely nothing to do with Mr. Lloyd-George's proposal to sell 30 syndicated articles. On his agent's representation that if he retired from office he would at once set to work to finish his war memoirs, a start on which had already been made the New York Times and the Chicago Tribune purchased the American rights to these memoirs for £40,000. We would, therefore, regard an intervening series of articles as the grossest breach of faith toward us. The memoirs are not yet fully marketed in this country, and not only would the announcement of this new series close our market entirely but we should feel obliged to release those who have already contracted with us, if they so desired. We feel that if we took this new series and offered it to the newspapers that have bought the memoirs we might be justly regarded as having in effect defrauded them, and how much more would we be so regarded if we offered the new series to a new clientele? While we have not yet had time to consult the Chicago Tribune, we can say that we shall not quietly submit to any deprivation of our rights."

While it is difficult to believe such a course is contemplated by Mr. Lloyd-George, the representations made are such that we feel we must act immediately. Will you therefore at once deliver copies of this message to Mr. Lloyd-George, Mr. Curtis Brown (Lloyd-George's agent in the sale of the memoirs), and Sir William Berry (owner of the London Sunday Times and head of Cassell & Co., book publishers, purchasers of the English rights), and make energetic protest against execution of any such plan, which would destroy serial value of memoirs and greatly impair book value. The new series outlined would inevitably draw upon material properly belonging in memoirs; and, in any case, Brown's assurances justify us in expecting prompt work on memoirs. Since reply was sent to London newspaper have received strong protest from Chicago Tribune, which will doubtless instruct its London correspondent to join in your efforts. We desire immediate assurance that other literary work will not be permitted to delay the memoirs. Answer earliest moment Friday.

VAN ANDA.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, December 16, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Lord and our God, we believe that Thou art the Judge of all the earth and can not but do right. May our offering unto Thee be an earnest and a contrite heart. We thank Thee for the hope, the joy, and the love that make life rich. To-day be the inspiration of duty and the restraining power when the way is not clear. Emancipate the hearts of all men from prejudice and intolerance and lead them into the breadth and blessing of true Christian freedom. May the customs, the laws, and the institutions of our land express charity for all. Give us the courage of a great faith that declares in the midst of sufferings and defeat the earth will yet come to its glory. Gladden all our homes this evening and to-morrow and may they symbolize the peace and rest of the Father's house on high. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 13316) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13180) making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, and had insisted upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. OVERMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution (S. J. Res. 248) to provide for the payment of salaries of Senators appointed to fill vacancies, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 13232) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, had agreed to the conference asked for by the House, and had appointed Mr. CURTIS, Mr. WARREN, Mr. LODGE, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. HITCHCOCK as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

COMMERCE AND LABOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the appropriation bill for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill mentioned, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13316) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman a question? If I understand the action of the Senate in adopting the conference report——

Mr. MADDEN. On the Treasury bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, the Treasury bill; on the action of the gentleman from Illinois, for the first time in about 30 years it permits the Government of the United States to use improved machinery in one of its departments?

Mr. MADDEN. In the Bureau of Printing and Engraving; yes, sir; and makes it mandatory.

Mr. BLANTON. Then it is quite important in that for the first time in 30 years the Government of the United States is not hamstrung.

Mr. MADDEN. Thirty-six years.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will announce the conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SHREVE, Mr. MADDEN, and Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on strictly Indian affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I have to-day introduced a bill entitled "A bill to ascertain and settle the title to lands and waters in New Mexico belonging to the Pueblo Indians, to preserve their ancient customs, rites, and tribal ceremonies, providing an exclusive forum wherein all controversies as to the rights of the Pueblo Indians may be adjudicated." This bill expresses my thought as to the legislation that should be enacted in order to solve the problems which confront us in the matter of the Pueblo Indian land holdings in the State of New Mexico.

As I stated on the floor on Thursday, I visited some two years ago, as chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, with a select committee, the city of Santa Fe, N. Mex., and made an investigation and obtained much information relative to Pueblo affairs. This information can be found in volume 3 of the hearings held at Santa Fe, N. Mex., on the evening of May 16, 1920, beginning on page 646, hearings, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session. There having been, as I stated, much misinformation disseminated since the introduction of Senate bill No. 3855, and that there might be information and a better understanding of the question, I incorporated in my remarks a letter written by an attorney of Santa Fe, N. Mex., which appears in the RECORD of the date named.

The bill which I have this day introduced, as I have stated, represents the substance of what seems to me would in a proper way provide for a satisfactory settlement of the questions at issue. I do not mean to say that it can not be improved, and have no doubt that after full hearings it may be amended in some particulars, and I therefore want it understood that I am not assuming that it is perfect.

I have been making some inquiry for the purpose of informing myself more fully on the legal questions that are involved, and, not being a lawyer, I have consulted Mr. R. E. Twitchell, of Santa Fe, N. Mex., special assistant attorney general in charge of litigation pertaining to this subject. Mr. Twitchell was appointed to do this work because of the fact that he is a thorough Spanish scholar, has given many years to the examination of the Spanish archives of New Mexico, has made translations of the original documents, has written a history of New Mexico, and has published other volumes subjecting, indexing, and analyzing these old Spanish and New Mexican archives. He has resided in New Mexico for approximately 40 years, has been actively engaged in the practice of the law, and is one of the prominent lawyers of the State, and it would certainly seem that he is eminently qualified to handle this particular subject. I learned from Mr. Twitchell that he has prepared a memorandum brief for the Commissioner of Indian Affairs which contains a brief résumé of the points involved and the reasons for the necessity for legislation, and for the information of the House I am submitting same to be incorporated as a part of my remarks:

POINTS IN RE MATTER OF PUEBLO LAND TITLES.

For the COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS:

1. The vast majority of the claims have their origin prior to the date of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, 1848, during Spanish and Mexican sovereignty.

2. There are upward of 3,000 of these claims in areas from town lots to farms and ranches varying in size.

3. The total value of all claims as estimated by attorneys for claimants is from $10,000,000 to $12,000,000.

4. The claims are found in nearly all of the so-called pueblo grants.

5. In a vast majority of the claims the owners declare their title was obtained by purchase or contract with the governing authorities of the pueblo where the lands are situate. In many instances claimants have title from individual Indians and not from the authorities of the pueblo. In some cases these individual deeds were approved by the pueblo authorities, as is claimed by those now occupying the areas so conveyed.

6. Under Spanish law, subsequent to 1571, Pueblo Indians were authorized to alienate their lands under certain restrictions, all of which are set forth in several royal decrees, which are set out in full in my report to the Secretary of the Interior. The Pueblo Indians, under royal decree, were subjects of the Spanish monarchy.

7. Under the plan of Iguala and Mexican law the Pueblo Indians became citizens of the Republic of Mexico.

8. Claimants contend that under Mexican law, being citizens, the Pueblo Indians had the right of property alienation, not only as an entity or community but as individuals.

9. Attorney for the Government does not admit this contention but insists that, even though citizens, still the restrictions of the Spanish law were carried into Mexican law, and were not removed by Mexico until 10 years after the United States succeeded Mexico in territorial sovereignty, and have never been removed by the United States Government.

10. The several pueblo villages in New Mexico were made corporations with the right to sue and be sued by territorial statute which was approved by the Congress of the United States.

11. Since the enactment of the law making them corporations the courts of New Mexico and of the United States have passed upon their political status, although the Supreme Court of the United States has never passed directly as to the claim of citizenship set up for these Indians. (See my report to the Secretary of the Interior.)

12. The question to me is not one of citizenship. It is as to the character and quality of such citizenship.

13. Replying upon local court decisions (U. S. v. Lucero, U. S. v. Joseph, 94 U. S. 614) representatives and leading members of the bar have invariably sustained the claim of right to alienate real property by the pueblo governing authorities.

14. This opinion of the courts and the bar continued until the decision in United States v. Felipe Sandoval (231 U. S. 28), when, in effect, at least, the Joseph case was reversed and a doctrine of tutelage established.

The controversies now existing had their inception in a vast majority of these claims when the decision in United States v. Sandoval was announced.

15. When New Mexico was admitted to the Union and its constitution framed and adopted, a compact was entered into between the people of the State and the United States whereby all control of these Indians was surrendered to the United States and all lands owned and occupied by the Indians was declared to be "Indian country."

16. The Indians and the people of New Mexico therefore are entitled to know what lands are owned and occupied by the Indians, and it is for this reason that decrees of segregation are imperatively necessary.

17. There existed in New Mexico, prior to 1852, no system or provision for the recording of deeds or instruments transferring the title to real property.

18. In Spanish and Mexican times in a majority of cases such as are here under consideration transfers of real property were made solely by delivery of possession, no deeds or other written instruments conveying title being in use.

19. Indians when baptized were given Spanish names and without the baptismal entry in the church records, which in most cases disclosed the racial origin, there is no way, after the great lapse of time and the passing of several generations owning by descent, to prove the racial origin, whether Spanish or Indian, or mixed.

20. There is no competent method whereby, owing to lapse of time, a present owner may identify his source of title as being from the pueblo authorities, nor may he prove any chain of title, owing to the fact that mere change of possession in Spanish and Mexican times served to change ownership.

21. Indians and non-Indians upon pueblo lands have irrigated their lands, at many pueblos, by means of community ditches, in which both classes had ownership and upon which both classes worked jointly in their maintenance. These ditches, in many cases in the Rio Grande drainage area, were built in the first decades of the seventeenth century, and with the exception of the intermission, A. D. 1680 to 1693, during which period the Spaniards were driven out of New Mexico by the Indians, have been used and maintained by both classes.

22. There are a very large number of community ditches in the Rio Grande and tributaries drainage areas in which the Indians have no interest whatever and which do not serve any Indian lands.

23. The priorities in appropriation and beneficial users of all waters in these drainage areas have never been adjudicated.

24. The United States Reclamation Service, for the supplying of the Elephant Butte Reservoir, which lies far to the south of the southernmost pueblo villages, appropriated all the flood waters and natural flow of the Rio Grande and its tributaries, recognising and excepting all waters which had been appropriated and used at the time of the filing by the Reclamation Service.

25. The rights of Indians and non-Indians in and to these waters is a matter of law and any adjudication of rights must necessarily be had pursuant to the laws of the State of New Mexico, having regard to any rights which may legally obtain to citizens in the State of Colorado.

26. On this account (secs. 22, 23, 24) the proper forum for the determination of all water rights, Indian or otherwise, should be the district court of the United States, and all controversies in relation to irrigation of Indian lands, whether between Indians or between Indians and non-Indians, should be finally determined in the courts of the United States and not in the local courts of New Mexico.

With all these facts before us and many others which might be enumerated, the necessity for legislation of some sort should be enacted at the earliest possible date for the following reasons:

"1. Congress had the power in admitting New Mexico into the Union of States to impose conditions relative to the Pueblo Indians within its borders."

Conditions imposed by Congress upon new States through their enabling acts are valid when they result from the exercise of powers conferred upon the Federal Government. The Federal power over Indians is of this character. (Coyle v. Oklahoma, 221 U. S. 559; ex parte Webb, 225 U. S. 663; United States v. Sandoval, 231 U. S. 29 and cases cited.)

"2. The Pueblo Indians of New Mexico are Indians, and, therefore, subject to the constitutional power of Congress over Indians." (United States v. Dick, 208 U. S. 340; United States v. Rickert, 188 U. S. 432; United States v. Sandoval, supra.)

"3. Congressional jurisdiction arises also because of the necessity for Government protection of an inferior race of people."

In United States v. Beebe, 127 U. S. 358, the Supreme Court of the United States says:

"Not only does the Constitution expressly authorize Congress to regulate commerce with the Indian tribes, but long-continued legislative and executive usage and the unbroken current of judicial decisions have attributed to the United States as a superior and civilized Nation the power and the duty of exercising a fostering care and protection over all dependent Indian communities within its borders, whether within its original territory or territory subsequently acquired, and whether within or without the limits of a State. The power must exist in the Federal Government, because it never has existed anywhere else; because the theater of its exercise is within the geographical limits of the United States; because it has never been denied; and because it alone can enforce its laws on all the tribes. Accordingly, plenary authority has been exercised by Congress from the beginning, and the power has always been deemed a political one, not subject to be controlled by the judicial department of the Government." (United States v. Kagama, 118 U. S. 375; United States v. Celestine, 215 U. S. 278; United States v. Heckman, 224 U. S. 413; United States v. Sandoval, supra.)

In the Sandoval case the court declares:

"Long-continued legislative and executive usage and the unbroken current of judicial decisions have attributed to the United States, a superior and civilized Nation, the power and the duty of exercising a fostering care and protection over all dependent Indian communities within its borders."

And in the case of Heckman v. United States (224 U. S. 413) it is declared:

"There can be no more complete representation than that on the part of the United States in acting on behalf of these dependents whom Congress, with respect to the restricted lands, has not yet released from tutelage. Its efficacy does not depend upon the Indians' acquiescence. It does not rest upon convention, nor is it circumscribed by rules which govern private relations. It is a representation which traces its source to the plenary control of Congress in legislating for the protection of the Indians under its care, and it recognizes no limitations that are inconsistent with the discharge of the national duty."

The Pueblo Indians require protection. They were wards of both the Spanish and Mexican Governments, and as such the United States received them under its treaty obligations. Pueblo Indians, while under Spanish and under Mexican rule, under certain circumstances and conditions received this protection, and the transfer of sovereignty to the United States of America neither increased nor diminished the power of the Indians or the duty of the United States to continue the guardian and ward relationship which had existed under Spain and Mexico.

The main question is not whether an Indian could under Spain or Mexico sell his real estate but under what circumstances and conditions, and did those circumstances and conditions continue after the United States acquired the country in which these Pueblo Indian lands are situate? I am convinced that such conditions did continue and that in the performance of its sovereign duty as guardian the United States is in duty bound to require occupants of Indian lands to show a compliance with all such conditions.

To make such compliance under the strict rules of law governing the making of competent proof, in my judgment, in a very large number of meritorious cases will be impossible and in all cases will work a tremendous financial hardship upon individual claimants to lands which were undoubtedly regularly alienated but of which fact proof is entirely lacking when subjected to the strict rules of competency which must be adhered to in our courts. (U. S. v. Ritchie, 17 How. 525; U. S. v. Sandoval, supra.)

"5. That the omnibus actions now pending will be sustained by the courts, if prosecuted to final judgment, against a large majority of the individual defendants cited therein, as well as against other defendants which may be proceeded against in actions yet to be filed."

This result will follow not through any fault of the defendants who perforce must be finally evicted. It will arise in most cases for failure of competent proof, and this failure is directly chargeable to the lack of laws requiring records of instruments during Spanish and Mexican times, to customs of the people whereby transfers were made merely by delivery of possession, through lack of proof in probate and other court proceedings, and also owing to the great expense necessary even if such proofs were available, as in some cases they may be. A further cogent reason lies in the fact that in many of the cases during six or seven generations of open, notorious adverse possession and occupancy there has likewise been no adverse claim advanced or made by the Indians themselves. That at enforcement of the law and the granting of the prayers of the United States in its capacity as guardian under these actions now pending under all the circumstances in each case is beyond the requirements of justice, not demanded by sound governmental policy, unwarranted by the exigencies of the situation and not in the interest of the Indians themselves.

PLEAS OF STATUTES OF LIMITATION AND LACHES CAN NOT BE SUCCESSFULLY URGED.

"6. The ordinary defenses to actions of this sort afforded American citizens are lacking and unavailable for the reason that the supervision of Indian affairs and the protection of the Indians incumbent upon the United States Government owing to its status as guardian creates a public interest as well as a public duty, and for that reason the ordinary defense usually urged and pleaded in cases where the lapse of time has destroyed or removed competent proof of facts of statutes of limitation can not be successfully urged or pleaded by defendants."

The Government is not bound by any statute of limitations where a public interest or a public duty is involved, nor is it guilty of laches through acts of omission or commission of its officers, no matter how gross, in a suit brought in its sovereign capacity to enforce such public right or to assert a public interest.

Mr. Justice Gray, delivering the opinion of the court, in United States v. Nashville, etc., Ry. Co., upon the question of statutes of limitation in such cases says:

"It is settled beyond doubt or controversy upon the foundation of the great principle of public policy, applicable to all governments alike, which forbids that the public interests should be prejudiced by the negligence of the officers or agents to whose care they are confided, that the United States, asserting rights vested in them as a sovereign Government, are not bound by any statute of limitations unless Congress has clearly manifested its intention that they should be so bound." (United States v. Nashville, etc., Ry. Co., 118 U. S., p. 125, citing Lindsay v. Miller, 6 Pet. 666; United States v. Knight, 14 Pet. 301, 315; Gibson v. Chouteau, 13 Wall. 92; United States v. Thompson, 98 U. S. 486; Fink v. O'Neil, 106 U. S. 272, 281.)

"7. Because the prayer for discovery as to defendant's title incorporated in the bills filed by the Government acting as guardian for and on behalf of the pueblos in each instance must be granted, and failing in this regard owing to circumstances and conditions existing in New Mexico from time immemorial, and through no fault or neglect on his part, judgment must be for the plaintiff and defendant eventually ousted from possession. In this manner it is quite possible for the Government to avoid the defect in the criticism of bills heretofore filed for the purpose of determining the title to Indians' lands, that there was an adequate remedy at law, ejectment, to which course, if relegated, the Government would be compelled to bring a very large number of suits the issues of which would be tried before a jury. In this manner the equity jurisdiction of the court will be maintained and any attempt to invoke the right to or procure a trial by jury frustrated.

"8. Many claims to land within the areas admitted to be pueblo lands rest upon ancient transfers from individual Indians. These claims, unless supported by proof of governmental approval, Spanish, Mexican, or American, respectively, must fail, for the reason that the Indian interest is communal and not a separate interest subject to conveyance by any individual or group of Indians, and therefore any deed from an individual Indian or group of Indians is absolutely null and void unless such deed shows governmental participation and approval." (United States v. Joseph, 94 U. S. 618.)

Any such deed is a nullity on its face and no one can derive title under it. Such a transfer was contrary to Spanish or Mexican policy as well as American law, and is strictly forbidden; and where a deed of conveyance is void upon its face, as being in violation of law, the party claiming under it is chargeable with knowledge of the law and of the invalidity of the deed; and this is the rule in Mexican as well as in American law. In such case the party does not even derive a color of title which will give him constructive possession of a tract of land beyond his actual occupation. (Sunol v. Hepburn, 1 Calif. 254.)

"9. Because the decisions of the courts, since the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, have universally recognized the rights of the Pueblos to alienate their lands." (United States v. Lucero, supra; United States v. Joseph, supra.)

On this account, and believing the law settled upon that point, in recent years many purchases of lands within the limits of the grants to the Pueblos have been made after the ordinary safeguards of securing the advice of competent attorneys have been obtained; and in all equity and good conscience if such purchasers of lands have no sufficient title, then they should be reimbursed if the lands are to be restored to the Pueblos, who in truth have never made objection, believing that many years previous the Pueblo had rightfully acted in the disposition of tracts of this character.

The injustice of such a state of affairs is self-evident. The predecessors in interest of many of the purchasers of these lands, during six and seven generations, have passed on to judgment before a court where race, previous condition of servitude, citizenship, or other classification are not material. Their testimony is not available. The records of their acts in securing title from the Pueblos have been lost or destroyed and present owners are unable, except in rare cases, to furnish the necessary proof to support a title, which has always been recognized as sufficient, in Spanish, Mexican, and American times, if the strict rules of law are followed and enforced.

"9. The fact that the United States may, under its authority hereinbefore considered, at any time in the future take steps to oust persons in possession of lands within these pueblo grants, and the continuing uncertainty as to title, has cast a cloud on all lands held by white people within the pueblo areas."

This situation is intolerable and should not continue. It is unsatisfactory to the Indians, and it has created a constant, continuing hardship upon the settlers. The mortgage value of the lands is almost nothing; sales, leases, and transfers have been discontinued, and the feeling between the Indians and their white neighbors is constantly approaching a climax which may result in serious conflict, an avoidance of which is earnestly hoped for by settler and Indian alike; and any clash of parties which may arise suddenly would bring about results deplorable in the extreme and in every possible way imaginable would be detrimental to the interest of the Indian. That any such events may be prevented is a reason of paramount importance why a solution of the problems, which in many instances have arisen through no connivance or inducement of either of the parties in interest, is urgent, insistent, and demanding the earliest possible consideration by the Congress of the United States in the passage of some act whereby justice to all parties may be immediately promised and secured.

"10. The Indians desire that these matters be finally determined upon lines of equity and justice."

Advised by their attorneys, employed at various times and for differing purposes, and by attorneys appointed by the Government of the United States, prior to the decision in the Sandoval case, that the pueblo, acting through its executive officers and its council, had the authority to alienate its communal lands, such officers have made deeds of transfer in good faith and have received fair compensation therefor.

In addition to this source of title, the pueblos have, in some instances, in controversies pending in the local Territorial courts, been subjected to decrees and judgments quieting title against them. As to these, as a most urgent reason why some action should be taken in the premises, it may be added that in my judgment, in a proper case, the United States, as guardian of the Indians, could secure decrees or judgments which would nullify and destroy any and all titles which originate with any such judgment of the Territorial courts, and the fact that such a course is possible casts a cloud upon that class of title, and the Indian, always ready to respect the laws and the judgments of the courts provided by the United States for his government and for the government of his white neighbors, is unable to differentiate as between courts, nor can he understand the reasons for the differing opinions of lawyers or of courts. As a result he is all at sea and is dependent wholly upon the Government and its representatives. This is a situation which should be clarified through congressional action at the very earliest moment.

11. Aggressions, encroachments, and other discriminating practices by settlers upon Indian lands, claiming title of one sort and another, have been in vogue for many years, principally since the advent of American sovereignty. To enumerate instances and methods of accomplishment is not necessary here. It is sufficient to say that such practices have been in evidence and the Indian has always been the losing party. This should be stopped at once and for all time.

Trespasses have been the rule rather than the exception in the use and occupancy of their pasturage lands, and the local courts and juries have yet, in my judgment, to show where the Indian has ever received justice. Assaults have been committed by settlers upon these Indians, where they have sought relief in the courts, and all sorts of charges trumped up for the occasion have been urged in justice of the peace courts, invariably resulting to the discomfiture and disadvantage of the Indian.

"11. Irrigation and the use of water in the cultivation of the lands in this semiarid section is a necessity for the successful raising of crops of almost every kind."

There are instances where white settlers and Indians are joint owners in irrigation canals which serve Indian lands within the pueblo areas and settlers' lands within and without the pueblo areas. In one instance, at least, the irrigating ditch has its source or intake or diversion point upon lands confessedly not Indian. Controversies of a most serious character have arisen over the costs and methods of administering this ditch and the use and content of the water.

As the law now stands, I see no one forum having jurisdiction to settle these controversies, and the judgment of the State court and that of the United States court might be in conflict to that extent that difficulties of the most serious nature might ensue.

"12. The title of the Indians to the lands occupied by them from time immemorial, while confirmed by act of Congress, which act was followed by the issuance of a patent, did not constitute an original grant; it was simply a quitclaim or confirmation of an already existing title."

These patents each contain the following language:

Now, know ye that the United States of America, in consideration of the premises and in conformity with the act of Congress aforesaid, have given and granted, and by these presents do give and grant, unto the said pueblo of ————, in the county of ———— aforesaid, and to the successors and assigns of the said pueblo of ————, the tract of land above described as embraced in said survey, but with the stipulation as expressed in the said act of Congress "that this confirmation shall only be construed as a relinquishment of all title and claim of the United States to any of said lands, and shall not affect any adverse valid rights should such exist."

Owing to the lack of information as to a proper description of the lands actually belonging to these pueblos and based upon alleged descriptions contained in a so-called archive, which is beyond doubt spurious, these patents and the surveys have quitclaimed to the Indians in some cases lands the title to which was later decreed to other parties by the court of private land claims, and these decrees and resulting conflicts as to boundaries also cast a cloud on the title of both classes of holdings, and this situation demands remedial legislation.

It has come to my notice that certain interests, voiced through organizations perfected for the purpose, are of opinion that a commission appointed by the President would best be able to solve all of the problems presented in the matters under consideration. Personally, I can not entertain a view favorable to this suggestion. The proper forum, as all will admit, under American institutions in which all judicial questions should be settled, is the court, and in handling these matters the United States District Court for New Mexico is, beyond all question, the logical forum for the determination and solution of the many problems which confront us. Now that New Mexico has an additional United States district judge, it is my opinion, which is also the opinion of nearly all of the members of the bar in our State, that within three years at the utmost all of these claims could be passed upon by the district court.

The cost of a commission, whose personnel was made up of men of capabilities equal to those of our United States judges, would command and deserve a salary commensurate with the duties imposed upon them, and a very conservative estimate of the cost of the commission would be not less than $500,000. All of this would be saved by the use of the forum which we now have, and if even a small part of this money so saved should be expended in the betterment of conditions for the various Pueblo tribes it would certainly be a consummation most earnestly hoped for by those who have the real interest and welfare of the Indian at heart.

The reasons before mentioned, in my judgment, are all-sufficient in urging remedial legislation at the earliest possible day.

R. E. TWITCHELL.

I also have a copy of a letter addressed to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs under date of December 11, 1922, which I am informed was written to the commissioner voluntarily and without any solicitation on the part of anyone by a gentleman of high character and a man who has lived for many years in New Mexico. His name is Mr. A. J. Abbott. I think every Member of the House would be enlightened if they could know the contents of this letter, and, that they may have the benefit of knowing its contents, I wish to read it.

SANTA FE, N. MEX., December 11, 1922.

Hon. CHARLES H. BURKE,
Commissioner Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: You do not know me personally or in any official or business way, but, feeling assured of a common interest in the welfare of the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, I presume to address this letter to you personally.

During the greater part of the incumbency of Commissioner Jones and all of the incumbency of Commissioner Leupp, I was the special attorney for the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico and naturally became very much interested in them.

I have noted with surprise and pain the seemingly concerted attack upon the measure known as the Bursum bill and upon the policy of the Indian Department.

The frame of mind which you have so happily denominated "hysteria," which, like a contagion, seems to have taken hold of a class of people, is inexplicable by any ordinary process of reasoning. I feel sure, however, that if those in charge of the measure persevere discreetly and firmly the fallacy of the so-called objections to the bill will shortly appear. The propaganda which has so industriously, by misrepresenting the purpose of the measure and, I am persuaded, purposely misconstruing its terms and language, has impressed upon the Indian mind that a great intentional wrong against them is contemplated. How easily such a state of mind may be produced among these people is well known by all who have had extensive experience with them. The furor which the newspaper publicity has created is without foundation, and very unfortunate. I have studied the bill with great care and am convinced that its provisions are wholesome and salutary and that amendments are not desirable.

The legal phraseology, such as "without color of title" and other phrases which, as used in this bill, have a purely legal significance, have been made use of ingeniously to cloud the minds of those who do not understand, and to read into the bill a seemingly pernicious and dishonest purpose. It is painful to me, as I know it must be to others who have at heart the welfare of the Indians, to observe the poisoning of the public mind by taking advantage of an excusable ignorance on the part of laymen of the true legal significance of such words and phrases. I am convinced that there is behind it all a deep-laid political scheme to defeat some of our public men when they come up for reelection or public indorsement. I believe, however, that the better-informed element among our people have confidence in the ability and integrity of the gentlemen who framed the bill, and in yourself and your able associates in the Indian Department who have examined and understood its provisions; and may we not hope that the light which may be let in by honest discussion, and the soberness born of careful investigation, will prevail in the end. I already observe a quieting effect, produced, as I believe, by your well-considered, able, and persuasive letter to Mr. George Vaux, chairman of the Board of Indian Commissioners, which was recently published in one of our local papers. Permit me to congratulate you upon your calm, sober, and convincing words, and your forceful appeal for credit, for honesty of purpose and action, on the part of the Indian Office.

There is no more occasion for this attack upon the Bursum bill than there has been for the last 50 years for a like attack upon the legislation by Congress and by the Territory and State of New Mexico, as the same has affected these Indians. It is a flamboyant, misleading, and deceptive campaign; an orgy of lurid words, unsupported statements, and alarming assertions; and we may confidently predict that it will die of its own frenzied paroxysms.

With the sincere hope that the storm of unreason will shortly subside, and the desired legislation may be accomplished without further unnecessary delay, I am, with great respect,

Yours truly,

A. J. ABBOTT,
325 Federal Place, Santa Fe, N. Mex.

THE LATE HON. THOMAS E. WATSON.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 471.

Ordered, That Sunday, the 11th day of February, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon, be set apart for addresses on the life, character, and public services of Hon. THOMAS E. WATSON, late a Senator from the State of Georgia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken and the resolution was agreed to.

THE LATE HON. J. KUHIO KALANIANAOLE.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Sunday, the 7th day of January, be set aside for paying tribute to the memory of the late Delegate from Hawaii, J. KUHIO KALANIANAOLE.

The SPEAKER. The Delegate from Hawaii asks unanimous consent that Sunday, the 7th day of January, be set aside for memorial exercises to the late Delegate from Hawaii, J. KUHIO KALANIANAOLE. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

AIRCRAFT FOR NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas submits a privileged report, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 466 (Rept. No. 1280).

Resolved, That during the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13374) making appropriations for the Navy Department for the fiscal year 1924, it shall be in order to consider, without the intervention of a point of order, provisions of the bill or amendments thereto relating to appropriations to procure, purchase, manufacture, or construct additional aircraft for the Naval Establishment, including the necessary spare parts and equipment therefor, at a total cost not exceeding $5,795,950.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to strike out the period at the end of line 9, insert a comma, and add also the language between lines 12 and 17 on page 55, inclusive.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to amend the resolution as follows. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas: Amend the resolution on page 1, line 9, after the figures, the following: Strike out the period, insert a comma, and insert: "and also the President is requested to enter into negotiations with the Governments of Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan with a view of reaching an understanding or agreement relative to limiting the construction of all types and sizes of subsurface and surface craft of 10,000 tons standard displacement or less, and of aircraft."

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LINEBERGER. I object.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the resolution by inserting the language just read.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following as a substitute.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have not yielded the floor. I offer as an amendment the language just read, and upon that I move the previous question.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following as a substitute.

The SPEAKER. If the previous question is voted down the substitute can be offered.

Mr. STAFFORD. May we have the amendment again reported?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas moves to amend the resolution by adding at the end thereof, line 9, the following language:

"And also the President is requested to enter into negotiations with the Governments of Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan with the view of reaching an understanding or agreement relative to limiting the construction of all types and sizes of subsurface and surface craft of 10,000 tons standard displacement or less, and of aircraft."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand what the motion was.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I move the previous question on the amendment and the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves the previous question on the amendment and the resolution.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I rise, Mr. Speaker, to a point of parliamentary procedure.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I think the gentleman's original motion was that that matter was to be in order. This motion is that "the President is requested;" and so forth.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That can be adjusted when we reach the item in the bill. The resolution makes in order the consideration——

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do not so understand it——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Or germane amendments thereto.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. This amendment makes that matter carried instead of making it subject to consideration.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, may we have the resolution again read?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the whole resolution will again be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 406, as amended:

"Resolved, That during the consideration of the bill H. R. 13374, making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year 1924, it shall be in order to consider, without the intervention of a point of order, provisions of the bill or amendments thereto relating to appropriations to procure, purchase, manufacture, or construct additional aircraft for the Naval Establishment, including the necessary spare parts and equipment therefor, at a total cost not exceeding $5,798,950, and also that part of the appropriation bill on page 55, lines 12 to 17, inclusive."

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the resolution is very clear as to its purpose. I move the previous question.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield for a question.

Mr. DOWELL. The statement, "without the intervention of a point of order" is not important in this, and only loses the question. It seems to me that should have been left out of the resolution, because if it is made in order by virtue of this resolution it is not then subject to a point of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is just a question of phraseology. The resolution covers the intent.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONDON. It is this: Whether it is possible to separate the resolution and vote on each part of it, or has it to be voted for as an entirety?

The SPEAKER. No. The vote would be taken on the resolution as a whole.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Under the rules of the House ought not a resolution like the one that has just been offered by the gentleman from Kansas go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs?

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair thinks not. The gentleman from Kansas offers a resolution making in order certain provisions of the naval appropriation bill. The Chair thinks the Committee on Rules has the right to make such a report. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays on the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is too late. The Chair had declared that carried and had already put the question.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Will the gentleman from California withhold his point?

Mr. LINEBERGER. Yes; I withhold it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In the event that the count should develop the fact that there is no quorum present, the question would then be on the amendment?

The SPEAKER. The vote now will simply be a call of the House, because there has been no division.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is it too late, if the gentleman will withhold his point of no quorum, to demand a division?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from California will withhold it, it is not.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman withhold it?

Mr. LINEBERGER. I do.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I ask for a division on the question.

The SPEAKER. Those in favor of the amendment will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] One hundred and seven gentlemen have risen in the affirmative. Those opposed will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Two gentlemen have risen in the negative. Does the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER] withdraw his point of no quorum?

Mr. LINEBERGER. Yes.

The SPEAKER. On this vote the ayes are 107 and the noes are 2.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the resolution. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 251, nays 0, not voting 170, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 13316) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. SPENCER, and Mr. OVERMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE ON MONDAY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair expects to be detained on Monday at an important meeting of the Arlington Memorial Bridge Commission after 12 o'clock, and designates the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] to preside until his arrival in case the Chair is not here at 12 o'clock.

CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON MILEAGE.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask consideration of the following privileged resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois sends up a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 468 (Rept. No. 1281).

Resolved, That the Committee on Mileage be, and is hereby, authorized to hire a clerk for the said committee for the period of one month during the third and fourth sessions of the Sixty-seventh Congress. Compensation of said clerk to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives at the rate of $125.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, this is the customary resolution, to grant one month's salary to the clerk of the Committee on Mileage. I move the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

FREDERIC H. BLACKFORD AND ELIZABETH F. MULLEN.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask consideration of the following privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 447 (Rept No. 1282).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Frederic H. Blackford the sum of $228.33 and to Elizabeth F. Mullen the sum of $78.33, being the amount received by them per month as clerks to the late Hon. Charles R. Connell at the time of his death, September 26, 1922.

Mr. IRELAND. This is the usual resolution for the employees of a deceased Member.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ANTIONETTE LOUISE FREEMAN.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask consideration for a similar resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 452 (Rept. No. 1283).

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Antionette Louise Freeman, widow of Granville C. Freeman, late a clerk to Representative ARTHUR M. FREE, a sum equal to six months of the compensation of said Granville C. Freeman and an additional sum not exceeding $250 to defray his funeral expenses.

Mr. IRELAND. This is the usual resolution in such cases.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

HARRY NORMAN FLEMING.

Mr. IRELAND. I ask consideration of the following privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 423 (Rept. No. 1284).

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the House $1,200 to Harry Norman Fleming for extra and expert services to the Committee on Pensions from December 4, 1921, to the end of the second session of the Sixty-seventh Congress, as assistant clerk to said committee by detail from the Bureau of Pensions, pursuant to law.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. This is an additional salary. This does not constitute the entire salary of this employee.

Mr. IRELAND. No.

Mr. BLANTON. How much does he draw besides this additional $100 a month that is to be now given him for the past year?

Mr. IRELAND. I think in the neighborhood of $2,000. I will not be positive about that.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not nearer $2,500 a year?

Mr. IRELAND. It might be. I can not recall from memory now, although I knew at the time the committee passed upon it. It has been customary in the past to grant this additional compensation to these special examiners assigned from the Bureau of Pensions to the different pension committees of the House. The number has been increased at times in the past and, although unauthorized by law, due possibly to the voluminous work of the committee, two appointees have sometimes served one of the Committees on Pensions. This is the usual resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the work before the committee as an advisor any more difficult or any harder than his usual work in the Pension Bureau?

Mr. IRELAND. I am not qualified to answer that, but I should not think so.

Mr. BLANTON. Then why should we increase this salary $1,200?

Mr. IRELAND. It is an appointment always sought by employees of the Pension Bureau. The Members of the House and of the Committee on Pensions and Invalid Pensions have always very strongly advocated this time-honored custom.

Mr. BLANTON. Just before Christmas.

Mr. IRELAND. I can not defend it as a practice in itself, and confess that I personally am not in favor of it.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not think the gentleman, as chairman of the committee, could defend it.

Mr. KNUTSON. In justice to the Committee on Accounts may I say that the Committee on Pensions has lost two examiners by death in this Congress, and the doctors in both instances stated that death was due to overwork. Our examiner comes to work at 7.30 or 8 o'clock in the morning and works until late. He is one of the hardest-worked men in the House Office Building. There is no question about that. He passes upon every pension bill that is considered by our committee. The Committee on Invalid Pensions have two or three examiners, and the Committee on Pensions has only one, notwithstanding we have fully as many cases to consider.

Mr. BLANTON. I understood from the chairman of the committee, who himself is not personally in line with this proposition, that this position is sought after by several of the employees of the Pension Bureau. If it is such an arduous position I would not imagine they would so zealously seek it.

Mr. KNUTSON. Somebody has got to do the work.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but this is increasing a salary of approximately $2,500 a year to $3,700.

Mr. KNUTSON. Oh, no, these examiners do not receive any such sum. They are clerks in the Pension Bureau loaned to the Pension Committees of the House, and this is extra compensation in consideration of the extra work which they perform here.

Mr. BLANTON. How much do they receive?

Mr. KNUTSON. Our examiner receives $1,800 and bonus.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman sure of that?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman admits that he already receives $1,800 plus the $240 bonus, or $2,040 per year, and to allow him this proposed increase of $1,200 would aggregate a salary of $3,240, which is not far from my first statement.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

JANITOR TO COMMITTEE ON REFORM IN THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer another privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 50 (Rept. No. 1285).

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, until otherwise provided by law, compensation at the rate of $720 per annum for the services of a janitor to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, payment to commence from the date such janitor entered upon the discharge of his duties, which shall be ascertained and evidenced by the certification of the chairman of said committee.

Mr. IRELAND. The Committee on Reform in the Civil Service is one of three active committees of the House that have not been given messengers or janitors. The chairman of the committee has indisputably proven to the Committee on Accounts that his committee requires the services of this employee.

Mr. KING. Can the gentleman state what that proof is? Why are the services of a janitor necessary?

Mr. IRELAND. I will let the chairman of the committee state that if he is here.

Mr. SEARS. What committee is this?

Mr. IRELAND. The Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

Mr. SEARS. I would like to ask the gentleman if this committee has any meetings?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. SEARS. Do they make any reforms in the civil service? I have been assured by the association in New York that they were making some reforms. How often does this committee meet?

Mr. IRELAND. I can not tell the gentleman; the Committee on Accounts refuses to be responsible for the action of any other committee.

Mr. SEARS. Can the gentleman tell how often the committee meets?

Mr. IRELAND. I will allow the chairman of the committee to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. SEARS. The gentleman's committee has considered this or he would not have introduced this resolution.

Mr. IRELAND. I can not tell the gentleman how often the committee meets. The chairman will give him that information.

Mr. SEARS. I know comparisons are odious when a Democrat undertakes to sustain his position by quoting a prominent Republican.

Mr. IRELAND. Comparisons are odious and I do not want to indulge in them. If the gentleman wants to refer to the Sixty-fifth Congress I want to say that every inactive committee in the House was given all the employees and clerks that they desired. In the Sixty-sixth Congress that was almost eliminated, and in the Sixty-seventh Congress almost no employees whatever were granted to any committee with very few exceptions.

Mr. SEARS. I happen to know that the chairmen of committees were called before the Committee on Accounts and made to state how often they met and what help they were entitled to, and in nearly all cases no help was given to the inactive committees.

Mr. IRELAND. The gentleman is getting the Sixty-fifth Congress and the Sixty-sixth Congress confused.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. For the information of the gentleman from Florida, I want to suggest that the present distinguished chairman of the Committee on Accounts has brought in many resolutions which did not have his personal indorsement.

Mr. IRELAND. Well, I will try and live that compliment down. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

FLORENCE A. DONNELLY—EDNA RADCLIFFE.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following House resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 456 (Rept. No. 1286).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Florence A. Donnelly the sum of $186.66 and to Edna Radcliffe the sum of $120, being the amount received by them per month as clerks to the late Hon. James R. Mann at the time of his death.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is the usual resolution which provides for one month's salary to the clerks of the late lamented James R. Mann, our late colleague of the House. As must be apparent to every Member, it is physically impossible for these clerks to close up his business within the period of one month. We all know that outside of his own work Mr. Mann served a number vastly in excess of any other Member. His work was voluminous. It is impossible for the employees to close up the business within the required time, and the committee did not desire to take the responsibility of breaking precedent even in such an unusual case, but later on in the session I feel sure that it will be necessary to offer an additional resolution to be handled as the House may direct. This, Mr. Speaker, is the usual resolution.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Can not the gentleman suggest an amendment to the resolution and let us dispose of it at this time? I think we are all familiar with the situation.

Mr. IRELAND. Well, that would take some time and there may be some development in the future which may affect it. I wanted to give the House this information.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13374, the naval appropriation bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LINEBERGER) there were 162 ayes and 2 noes.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The doorkeepers will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 238, nays 5, answered "present" 1, not voting 186, as follows:

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13374, the Navy appropriation bill, with Mr. LONGWORTH in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVAL WAR COLLEGE, RHODE ISLAND.

For maintenance of the Naval War College on Coasters Harbor Island, including the maintenance, repair, and operation of one horse-drawn, passenger-carrying vehicle to be used only for official purposes; and care of ground for same, $81,250; services of a professor of international law, $2,000; services of civilian lecturers, rendered at the War College, $1,200; care and preservation of the library, including the purchase, binding, and repair of books of reference and periodicals, $5,000; in all, $89,450: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for clerical, inspection, drafting, and messenger service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, shall not exceed $50,000.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, in the colloquy day before yesterday on the appropriation of $250,000 for the maintenance of the Great Lakes Naval Training Station it was suggested that our late colleague, the greatly lamented the Hon. James R. Mann, had made an observation to the effect that naval authorities had held the Great Lakes Naval Training Station to be an unsuitable location for the training of recruits. I then stated that when this proposition was before the House and the committee a year ago, "Mr. Mann expressed his regret that, in his opinion, the proper activities were not maintained at Great Lakes," and I added that I was "sorry that Mr. Mann is not here to know to-day that the great Committee on Appropriations has made an ample appropriation for the performance of the activities at the Great Lakes for which that institution was established and on which the Government has spent $10,000,000."

By reference to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for April 14, 1922, page 6044, during the consideration of the appropriation for maintenance at Great Lakes for the fiscal year 1923, it will be found that Mr. Mann then made the following statement:

A few years ago the experts in the Navy Department insisted that Congress should provide for a training station on the Great Lakes at tremendous expense and, guided by the experts in the Navy Department, Congress made provision for a training station to be located on the Lakes, in the judgment of a commission to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, which commission promptly located the station in the district represented by the chairman of the Naval Committee.

And having appropriated great sums of money for the expense of the Great Lakes Training Station, located north of Chicago, and having largely depended upon the men who went through the Great Lakes Training Station during the war, the experts in the Navy Department now conclude that it is not necessary to have a training station on the Great Lakes at all, and under their advice this bill practically abolishes the training station, constructed not as a war measure but provided for long before the war on the advice of the experts.

After making some observations on the subject, I then offered an amendment to increase the appropriation for Great Lakes from $160,000 to $260,000. This amendment was lost in the Committee of the Whole House, but the appropriation was subsequently increased in the Senate to $200,000, and that amount remained in the bill as finally passed. In the hearings before the Senate committee last spring the representatives of the Navy Department agreed that the additional $40,000 would be required to maintain the station during the fiscal year 1923 for the purposes then planned, which included the maintenance of the so-called trade schools but no training of apprentice seamen. At that time it was intended to concentrate the training of recruits at the naval operating base at Hampton Roads, where some temporary buildings were erected during the war and were used for training purposes. For this reason the Navy Department recommended a reduction of the appropriation for Great Lakes of $240,000, namely, from $400,000 to $160,000, and a reduction of the appropriation for Hampton Roads of $15,000, namely, from $375,000 to $360,000.

I proposed to equalize the appropriation for Great Lakes and Hampton Roads by making each of them $260,000, but this effort failed. When the bill went to the Senate, however, the appropriation for Hampton Roads was reduced by $100,000 and this amount was added to the training station at Newport, R. I. It is to be noted that all of these preliminary estimates were based upon a Navy of 67,000 men and were recommended both by the Navy Department and the House committee before the House itself increased the Navy personnel to 86,000 men, its present number. This year the House Committee on Appropriations, as I stated on Thursday, "has made an ample appropriation for the performance of activities at Great Lakes," and the people of the great West, I am sure, will highly appreciate the attitude and action of the committee in this regard. During the last few months a "Committee to Save Great Lakes Naval Training Station," organized in Chicago, has sounded the sentiment throughout the Middle West and found not only a pronounced and aggressive interest in behalf of Great Lakes but as well enthusiastic support for an adequate Navy.

The distinguished chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. KELLEY of Michigan], as well as the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], a member of the subcommittee, on last Thursday presented strong arguments and compelling viewpoints with reference to the continued maintenance of the Great Lakes station for training purposes and showed great sympathy for the policy adopted by the Government when the Great Lakes station was established. It is fair to add, also, that in the recent hearings before the subcommittee Admiral Washington, speaking for the Navy Department, stated that while—the Navy Department has not formally advocated the training of recruits there, * * * we would very much like to keep a modicum of them at that place even though it cost a little more.

Admiral Washington added that the training of recruits, as recommended by the commandant at Great Lakes, would "meet the public demand and, at the same time, be a great service to the Navy," and that "the general effect of it would be very beneficial to the people." Admiral Washington also conceded that there was a "good deal" of virtue in the argument favoring the location of a training station in a locality where the fathers and mothers and general public may visit the boys who are in training and see the institution where the training occurs.

The appropriation of $250,000 will make possible the training of 1,200 to 1,500 recruits in constant attendance, or about 7,000 to 8,000 during the entire year, in addition to the constant enrollment of approximately 500 men in the trade schools for training radio operators and aviation mechanics. The normal capacity of the station is from 1,800 to 2,400 naval recruits. During the World War this capacity was expanded to 42,500 men. Up to the end of this war a total of 191,552 enlisted men were trained at Great Lakes, not only as ordinary seamen for service in the Navy, but for all kinds of special services needed during the war. The total contribution of this station to our Navy force up to the present time has been over 200,000 men.

The Great Lakes station was originally selected upon the recommendation of a board of naval officers in response to a widespread sentiment and movement for the location of a naval establishment in the interior of the country. It now represents an investment of approximately $10,000,000 in land, permanent buildings, and equipment and has been in successful operation since July 1, 1911. The land was donated by public-spirited citizens in and about Chicago and the population of the surrounding territory has always given the institution its hearty and helpful support. It was desired then, and is desirable now, to maintain some bond of union between our great naval defenses and the constantly increasing population of the great inland States. Obviously, a training station is the only naval establishment that can be located in the interior of the country. Our naval recruits must have some training before being assigned to sea duty, and this training can as well be given on one of our great inland seas as upon our ocean coast lines.

Such an institution must not be permitted to deteriorate and lose its efficiency by inaction or nonuse. It is an integral part of our national defense and serves a necessary purpose, not only by reason of the results obtained through its activities but as well on account of its particular location and especial influence among the people. There should be no suggestion of the curtailment or abandonment of this important establishment so long as a Navy is needed for our national defense.

The Clerk read as follows:

Maintenance: For water rent, heating, and lighting; cemetery, burial expenses, and headstones; general care and improvements of grounds, buildings, walls, and fences; repairs to power-plant equipment, implements, tools, and furniture, and purchase of the same; music in chapel and entertainments for beneficiaries; stationery, books, and periodicals; transportation of indigent and destitute beneficiaries to the Naval Home, and of sick and insane beneficiaries, their attendants and necessary subsistence for both, to and from other Government hospitals; employment of such beneficiaries in and about the Naval Home as may be authorized by the Secretary of the Navy, on the recommendation of the governor; support of beneficiaries and all other contingent expenses, including the maintenance, repair, and operation of one horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicle, two motor-propelled vehicles, and one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle, to be used only for official purposes, $104,690.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This bill carries $293,806,538. The first appropriation bill that we passed in the House the other day, the Treasury appropriation bill, carried $115,112,810.37. In its consideration by the Senate there were numerous amendments added to the bill, and it was passed in less than three hours' time. When the Senate passed it with less than three hours' consideration it had added $425,880 in amendments to the bill. The next appropriation bill we passed was that of the Departments of State and Justice. That carried $33,185,051.50. The Senate passed the bill in exactly an hour and 30 minutes, yet added numerous amendments to it, and when it got through with it in this hour and 30 minutes' consideration the Senate had added $303,656.50. The next appropriation bill that we passed was that for the Departments of Commerce and Labor. That carried $26,079,101, and when it went to the Senate it was taken up yesterday and in exactly 30 minutes' consideration was passed. Numerous amendments were added during this 30 minutes' consideration in the Senate, which increased the amount over what had been allowed by the House to the extent of $267,000. Now the conference reports are being rushed through.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. If they could add to the appropriations with that rapidity, is not the gentleman thankful that they did not take any more time? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I am just calling attention to such working Members as our new friend from California [Mr. MACLAFFERTY], who sits here on the floor, watchful to see if he can take care of the interests of the people. We must watch these conference reports when they come back. We must watch the action taken after the bills leave the House. It is not enough that we shall sit here and watch these various provisions as they come up in the Committee of the Whole, taking out of the people's Treasury hundreds of millions of dollars, but we must watch them when they leave here and when they come back, and must be prepared when these various matters are added without argument or consideration, to strike them out here in the House.

When a bill carrying appropriations of $26,000,000 is passed in 30 minutes it behooves us to watch them and be prepared to oppose them successfully. We can not merely accept the bill when it comes back and is sent to conference, but we must watch the conference report and scan that thoroughly. It is more important that they should be passed properly than that they should be passed hurriedly to get through the business of the Congress by January 15.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. Mr. Chairman, I just desire to have a few words about this four-power pact proposition and this proposition to ask for a further conference with the nations of the earth, and I desire to ask unanimous consent now to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an editorial in the Boston Evening Transcript of December 11 headed "No more four-power pacts," together with a brief comment on it by The State, Columbia, S. C.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, this is an exceedingly interesting discussion by an exceedingly able paper coming from the precincts of HENRY CABOT LODGE. I want to call attention to a few statements made in it before we come to a vote on this proposition.

They start out with the heading, "No more four-power pacts":

President Harding resorts to regrettable exaggeration when he alludes in his address to "the four-power pact" as an engagement "that abolishes every probability of war on the Pacific." If any probability of war on the Pacific existed it arose from the aggressive intentions of Japan. Certainly the United States was not itching for a conflict in that region. Certainly it was not the United States that refused to end the competition in capital-ship construction which the conference of Washington was called to consider. On the contrary, the proposal to end that competition and to limit naval armament by international agreement was proposed by Secretary Hughes at the first plenary session and was pressed upon Japan by the United States and the British delegates for the next 30 days. But without result. Why? Because the Japanese Government refused to consider the proposal seriously until the United States had agreed to surrender all of its naval bases in the Pacific except Honolulu. By the terms of this surrender we agreed to do what no other self-respecting first-class power had ever before been willing to do, namely, to surrender the right to fortify even the islands adjacent to its own home coast.

I call the attention of the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. MACLAFFERTY], who was so concerned the other day about the protection of the Pacific coast, to the language there used.

Then this editorial goes on to say that it has not been lived up to and that the proposition to negotiate a similar treaty with reference to the Atlantic would be turned down and find a ready-made grave in the United States Senate, as this treaty should have found. I will print the whole editorial in the RECORD. It says as a parting shot:

This surrender was agreed to secretly. It was agreed to without the advice or consent either of the General Board of the Navy or the General Staff of the Army. The Committees on Naval Affairs of the two Houses of Congress were not consulted. The Senate was kept in almost complete ignorance of the negotiations until the surrender was finally made public in the form of article 19 of the five-power naval treaty.

The administration is not living up to the five-power treaty. The proof of its delinquency in this respect appears in the annual report of the Secretary of the Navy. As for the "four-power pact," it could not have been ratified, and it ought not to have been ratified if it had been known that the obligations that this Government undertook in the five-power treaty were not to be discharged in the best of good faith. To add to this deplorable record of delinquency by negotiating a "four-power pact" for the Atlantic would be adding insult to injury. Such an addition, as we believe, would exhaust the patience of the American people.

Now you will note that it does not come from any rock-ribbed Democratic minority journal, but from the Boston Transcript, which comes from the home of Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE, who is chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee in the Senate, and if there is anything in the statement of this editorial, anything true in it, certainly we had better look out before we seek for any more of these conferences and any more of such treaties as that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The article from the State, Columbia, S. C., is as follows:

UNPALATABLE FACTS.

In all the riot of criticism and objurgation hurled at President Harding and his administration by members of his own political party, amid the "boring from within," while the progressives of the West bombarded and the heirs of the "Roosevelt tradition" of the East raised barbed wire entanglements, one had believed that at least "one achievement" of himself and "the best minds" was looked upon as altogether righteous and expedient—the disarmament conference and its "four-power pact." Alas, it is not so!

Hear this from the Transcript, of Boston, the voice most refined of orthodox republicanism:

"President Harding resorts to regrettable exaggeration when he alludes in his annual address to 'the four-power pact' as an engagement 'that abolishes every probability of war on the Pacific.' If any probability of war on the Pacific existed it arose from the aggressive intentions of Japan. Certainly the United States was not itching for a conflict in that region. Certainly it was not the United States that refused to end the competition in capital-ship construction which the conference of Washington was called to consider. On the contrary, the proposal to end that competition and to limit naval armament by international agreement was proposed by Secretary Hughes at the first plenary session and was pressed upon Japan by the United States and the British delegates for the next 30 days. But without result. Why? Because the Japanese Government refused to consider the proposal seriously until the United States had agreed to surrender all of its naval bases in the Pacific except Honolulu. By the terms of this surrender we agreed to do what no other self-respecting, first-class power had ever before been willing to do, namely, to surrender the right to fortify even the islands adjacent to its own home coast. This surrender was agreed to secretly. It was agreed to without the advice or consent either of the General Board of the Navy or the General Staff of the Army. The Committees on Naval Affairs of the two House of Congress were not consulted. The Senate was kept in almost complete ignorance of the negotiations until the surrender was finally made public in the form of article 19 of the five-power naval treaty."

So what the United States got in the "pact" was obtained by "surrender" which, if not base, was not far from pusillanimous: And it was engineered under a bushel, besides. This, mark, is not a Democratic accusation. It proceeds from one of the most reputable of the Republican newspapers, from the home of Senator LODGE, from a supporter of Senator LODGE, loyal to the point of enthusiastic adulation of him and of all his works.

The President in his latest message alludes, with a solemn air of mystery, to the four-power pact "as a model for like assurance wherever in the world any common interests are concerned" and Republicans, ashamed that their country has run away from its obligations to the distracted world, have been snatching at it as a hopeful path by which to return the Republic to respectable company without pronouncing the name of the League of Nations and the treaty of Versailles. But the Transcript says that the suggestion is "surprising." "If any such treaty (the four-power pact) is ever again negotiated by this or any subsequent administration with any group of European powers we hope and believe that it will only have to reach the Senate to find a diplomatic graveyard from which it will never be resurrected." Well, Colonel Watterson used to say:

"Things have come to a h—l of a pass,
When a man can't wallop his own jackass."

And the Transcript perhaps feels that it is indulging its family privileges. But where shall the punishment stop? Somewhere a point will be arrived at where the "best-mind administration" can not endure incessant enfilading, where, shot to pieces, it will lose heart as well as head. If the four-power pact was an "evil thing" accomplished clandestinely, "put over" on an unsuspecting Republican statesmanship, what assets will be left when the administration passes into the hands of a receiver? Have Mr. Harding and Secretary Hughes magnified the "yellow peril" by "surrendering" to it? It is in the face of what it calls "unpalatable facts" that the Transcript draws its bead and fires its conclusions.

The article from the Boston Transcript is as follows:

NO MORE "FOUR-POWER PACTS."

President Harding resorts to regrettable exaggeration when he alludes in his annual address to "the four-power pact" as an engagement "that abolishes every probability of war on the Pacific." If any probability of war on the Pacific existed, it arose from the aggressive intentions of Japan. Certainly the United States was not itching for a conflict in that region. Certainly it was not the United States that refused to end the competition in capital-ship construction which the conference at Washington was called to consider. On the contrary, the proposal to end that competition and to limit naval armament by international agreement was proposed by Secretary Hughes at the first plenary session and was pressed upon Japan by the United States and the British delegates for the next 30 days. But without result. Why? Because the Japanese Government refused to consider the proposal seriously until the United States had agreed to surrender all of its naval bases in the Pacific except Honolulu. By the terms of this surrender we agreed to do what no other self-respecting first-class power had ever before been willing to do, namely, to surrender the right to fortify even the islands adjacent to its own home coast. This surrender was agreed to secretly. It was agreed to without the advice or consent either of the General Board of the Navy or the General Staff of the Army. The Committees on Naval Affairs of the two Houses of Congress were not consulted. The Senate was kept in almost complete ignorance of the negotiations until the surrender was finally made public in the form of article 19 of the five-power naval treaty.

When the "four-power pact" was negotiated it was assumed that before the conference adjourned an agreement would be reached limiting naval armament in line with the United States' proposal. It was upon this understanding and without any knowledge of the terms of article 19 of the naval treaty that a favorable public opinion in this country was evoked by the publication of the terms of the four-power treaty. It is doubtful whether the four-power treaty would have ever been approved by any considerable body of public opinion, much less ratified by the Senate, if the American people had been thoroughly informed of the unprecedented political surrender of national interests involved in article 19 of the five-power treaty. The Senate was not told during the debate of the very serious opposition in the Navy to this surrender. Ever since the four-power treaty was ratified public opinion has been increasing against it. And to-day the failure of the United States to live up to the spirit of the five-power treaty has so discredited the treaties of Washington in the eyes of the people of the United States and in the eyes of the world that France and Italy have thus far refused to ratify them.

In the face of these unpalatable facts it is surprising that President Harding should refer to the "four-power pact" as a "model for like assurance wherever in the world any common interests are concerned." If any such treaty is ever again negotiated by this or any subsequent administration with any group of European powers, we hope and believe that it will only have to reach the Senate to find a diplomatic graveyard from which it will never be resurrected. Certainly the administration that clutters up the calendar of the Senate with any such treaty during the next two years will be riding for a fall.

Friendship with all nations of good will, safeguarded by treaties of amity and commerce, but entangling alliances with none, is America's traditional policy in foreign affairs. To live up to the spirit no less than to the letter of every treaty negotiated is also traditional American foreign policy. The administration is not living up to the five-power treaty. The proof of its delinquency in this respect appears in the annual report of the Secretary of the Navy. As for the "four-power pact" it could not have been ratified and it ought not to have been ratified if it had been known that the obligations that this Government undertook in the five-power treaty were not to be discharged in the best of good faith. To add to this deplorable record of delinquency by negotiating a "four-power pact" for the Atlantic would be adding insult to injury. Such an addition, as we believe, would exhaust the patience of the American people.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the proviso in the paragraph, and I am wondering if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations intends to tell the House something about this particular part of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. If the point of order is made on the paragraph and is sustained, it would take out the proviso.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am not so sure that under the phraseology of the proviso it might be held in order under the Holman rule.

Mr. BLANTON. Under the rules of the House if there is any part of this paragraph subject to a point of order upon the insistence by the one making the point of order the whole paragraph will go out. I am making the point of order against the whole paragraph for the present to get a ruling of the Chair, because of its containing matter unauthorized by law.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What is the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that this paragraph contains legislation on an appropriation bill that is unauthorized by law, in that it increases the amount of the appropriation allowed this Bureau of Supplies and Accounts beyond the maximum authorized by law. This is a matter that has been up here before for several years. This Bureau of Supplies and Accounts has been trying to increase this appropriation, but points of order made against it have been sustained by the Chair.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the amount carried in this paragraph is based entirely upon existing law. It is a matter entirely of mathematical calculation. There is no new legislation in it.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Of course the sums will vary from year to year, depending upon the number of men and officers in the various classes and ratings at a particular time. But the rate of pay is all prescribed by law, and we are only carrying the necessary sums of money to meet the pay roll.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is there any authorization of law which now permits a land Navy of 30,000 men?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes. The distribution of the personnel is entirely in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy. He has authority under the law to assign men to ships or shore as he sees fit.

Mr. BLANTON. I will ask the gentleman if the provision on line 10, of page 27, for $35,437,889 is not an increase over the maximum provision authorized by the present law?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No. The amount carried in the bill is based entirely upon the law fixing the pay and allowances of officers and men. It is purely a mathematical calculation.

Mr. MADDEN. I am sure the Chair remembers the matter. It has been up here before. I just merely suggest the question to the Chair.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The pay of the officers of the Navy, amounting to $35,000,000, is based upon the statute passed recently by Congress, the legislation having been brought in by a special committee, of which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] was the chairman, and all the other figures of the paragraph are based upon statutory provisions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to see any force in the argument of the gentleman from Texas. As long as there is no substantive legislation contained in the paragraph, the paragraph is in order.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the proviso beginning on line 24 of page 28 and extending over to line 12 on page 29. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to say just a word or two in connection with this proviso.

Mr. Chairman, this proviso brings forth another evidence of the autocratic powers of the Committee on Appropriations, usurped unto themselves, without warrant, and promoting that committee to be the sole appropriating and legislative committee of the House. It is just a matter of time before every other committee in the House might just as well be wiped out of existence entirely.

Here is a question of policy in the Navy Department as to the number of men to be appointed to the Naval Academy by Members of Congress. The act of July 11, 1919, provided that each Member of the House shall be entitled to appoint five midshipmen to the Naval Academy. This proviso, worded in an ingenious manner in order to come within the Holman rule and not be subject to a point of order, reduces that number to three and reduces the number of appointments for the District of Columbia from five to two.

Now, certainly, under the rules of the House, legislation of that character belongs to the Committee on Naval Affairs. I do not think there is any question about that. I have gone into the hearings very thoroughly, and I find that the Committee on Appropriations wasted as much as six or seven minutes on this important change of existing law. They heard Admiral Washington. The substance of Admiral Washington's opinion was that the Naval Academy should be maintained at its present status; in other words, five midshipmen should be appointed by each Member of Congress. A reduction to three appointments will easily maintain 4,500 line officers, according to the testimony, or, at least, according to the language of the chairman of the committee; it will more than care for the 4,500 commissioned personnel in the line, such as we have there now. But is it going to give us a proper flow of commissioned force in the Navy?

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. I understood the gentleman to say 4,500 per annum.

Mr. BRITTEN. No. I mean that there are approximately 4,500 commissioned men in the line to-day, or, speaking more exactly, 4,382. There are authorized by law 5,499, which figure no one contends should be made effective. But those of us who are interested in the Navy—and we all are, of course—feel that by graduating a surplusage over the actual requirements of the Navy we can get better men and we can more easily get rid of those in the line who are not filling their places to their best advantage or to the best interests of the service.

Now supposing, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] contends, that 4,500 officers in the line is sufficient, and we can accommodate that number by allowing the appointment of three to the academy by each Member of the House and Senate, and so forth, as contemplated in the proviso, what condition are we going to find ourselves in in the event of an emergency? We shall have enough officers to man the ships in active service and to man the shore stations, but we can not spread as we would like to. We ought to train men in the Naval Academy for the merchant marine, if need be, and for the Marine Corps, and for the staff corps of the Navy, and not depend on getting these men out of private life, as we are doing now. That can not be done if we reduce the number of appointments to the academy from five to three, as proposed in this bill.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Has the gentleman considered the possibility of using this surplus of graduates from the academy in building up a naval officers' reserve corps, which would seem to me to be very feasible and helpful in the case of an emergency?

Mr. BRITTEN. That is just another way of using the surplusage which may come from the Naval Academy through this excess number to be appointed. We are carrying the overhead there with a great institution and the training force. Why not allow these men to come out of that school?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask my colleague, who is a distinguished member of the Committee on Naval Affairs and has been for some time, and has always expressed his interest in the Navy, if he does not think it would be well and appropriate for the Committee on Naval Affairs to take up the whole matter of the reorganization of the Navy, not only of the academy at Annapolis, but the matter of the commissioned personnel of the Navy, the matter of retirement, the matter of retainer pay, and a number of other things that have been pieced on to the naval legislation of this country, so that it is difficult for an able seaman like my colleague to understand what the law is covering the Navy? I will ask him if we can have any hopes held out to us of something being done along the same line as has been done in regard to the reorganization of the Army?

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, yes. I think the suggestion of my colleague from Illinois is a very good one. A reorganization of that kind might very reasonably be considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs. But with this constant usurpation of power by the Committee on Appropriations there is no incentive for these other committees to do any work at all. Bills are repeatedly brought in here by the Committee on Appropriations with such legislation as was made in order this morning by rule; legislation that properly belongs to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. They will do the same thing with respect to the Army bill, and with respect to the rivers and harbors bill. They will do it with every bill that is brought in here, unless the House objects.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. I tried to get the attention of the Chair several times on a parliamentary inquiry, and the Chair was looking right at me. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman can not take a Member off his feet by a parliamentary inquiry without his consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Florida that he can not take a Member off the floor in that way.

Mr. SEARS. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has that right and the Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and five Members present, a quorum. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] make a point of order?

Mr. BRITTEN. I have not concluded my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has three minutes remaining.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I think it is up to the Members of the House to call the attention of the House from time to time to these usurpations of power by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes, I do.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Does not the gentleman consider that one of the best examples of the usurpation of the powers of the other committees of the House and the autocracy of the subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations was the case which we had this morning in the adoption of this rule making in order legislation affecting the limitation of armament on a naval appropriation bill when it ought to have come out of the Committee on Foreign Affairs?

Mr. BRITTEN. The matter of calling an international conference is apparently of little importance to the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Foreign Affairs should not be in existence. The Committee on Appropriations should conduct the business of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The Committee on Naval Affairs need not be in existence. The Committee on Appropriations can take care of everything applying to the Navy, in an indirect manner, if not in a direct manner. Of course, I do not think this proviso is subject to a point of order, because it has been adroitly worded in order to come within the Holman rule, but its positive effect is to reduce the number of appointments to the Naval Academy by Members of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the distinguished gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. As long as the Committee on Appropriations have with them the chairman of the Rules Committee they can do anything they please.

Mr. BRITTEN. There is no question about that.

Mr. McKENZIE. Just so long as the membership of this House stand back of the Committee on Appropriations, as they did this morning, we are not in a position to make any very great complaint, are we?

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman is entirely right. It is because of the feeling in the House that we wanted to give this new rule for procedure a trial under the leadership of that great and distinguished leader, MARTIN B. MADDEN, who is a real leader of men. [Applause.] I am for him for anything he wants in this House. [Applause.] But if the Committee on Appropriations is going to continue to usurp the powers of other committees from time to time and take action on matters of policy as important as this one to-day, and do so after a hearing of four or five minutes, I think it is time that the House should assert itself and change the rule.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order——

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman has said this is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am just about to make my point of order.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman said it was not subject to a point of order.

Mr. BRITTEN. I make the point of order against the proviso.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I make the point of order——

Mr. LINEBERGER. Regular order.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. This is the regular order. I am making the point of order that this paragraph is no longer subject to a point of order for the reason that the Chair overruled a point of order directed to the whole paragraph.

Mr. BRITTEN. No; but there was a reservation pending.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. That does not make any difference. The greater includes the less, and when a point of order against the whole paragraph is overruled that disposes of a point of order reserved or made to any part of the paragraph. That has been frequently held. I am not able to cite the Chair to the precise decision just at this moment, but the reason for that is an obvious one. If a point of order is made to the whole paragraph and any part of the paragraph is subject to the point of order, then the point of order must be sustained to the whole paragraph. Of course, a gentleman may choose to make the point of order to a part of the paragraph, and then that is the only thing that is involved; but if some other gentleman makes it to the whole paragraph that disposes of the paragraph as a whole and of every part of it.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman said this was not subject to a point of order and the Chair has already ruled that the paragraph is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is in some doubt, but thinks that in view of the fact that the gentleman reserved a point of order to the particular proviso and the gentleman from Texas made a point of order directed at the entire paragraph on entirely different grounds, the gentleman from Illinois would still have the right to make a point of order to a special proviso of the paragraph.

Mr. BRITTEN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the proviso at the bottom of page 28, because it changes existing law; and even though it may do so with a view of coming within the Holman rule, it does so under a subterfuge and it should not be permitted in the bill. I maintain it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the proviso is to reduce the number of appointments for each Member of the House and Senate and each Delegate from five to three. The obvious effect of that is to reduce the number of officers of the United States, because the midshipmen in the Naval Academy have been held by the courts and the disbursing officers of the Government to be officers of the United States. Therefore, it comes squarely within the Holman rule. While it is legislation, it is proper legislation on an appropriation bill, reducing the number of officers, and thereby bringing about an obvious retrenchment in the expenditures of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Even if the Chair was not called upon to consider the question of the applicability of the Holman rule, if there were any doubt on the face of it that it reduced expenditures, the Chair is inclined to think this is distinctly a limitation of an appropriation. The present occupant of the chair has ruled a number of times that where an appropriation was within the law it was within the power of the committee to limit that appropriation as to the precise direction in which it should be expended. This is unquestionably a limitation of an appropriation, and the Chair thinks that both on that ground and probably also on the ground stated by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] it is in order; and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I want to say a word in reply to what has been said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN]. I think what the gentleman has said in the main is accepted and approved by the Committee on Appropriations, that general matters of legislation should come from the proper legislative committee. In this particular instance I am quite sure that we have not at least violated the spirit of that policy. There is now, I think, on the calendar of the House a bill reported from the Naval Affairs Committee, of which the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] is an influential member, effecting this very same legislation—reducing the number of appointments to the Naval Academy from five to three. The number of that bill is H. R. 11002. Under the circumstances the Committee on Appropriations felt that we were but carrying out the official purpose of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and while the legislation recommended has not been acted upon, we have at least not done great violence to the gentleman's committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRITTEN. I realize that the gentleman desires to be entirely fair at all times, and he always is. My objection to this proviso is the mere policy of taking legislation away from the Committee on Naval Affairs, where it belongs, and putting it in a bill coming from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Then the gentleman's objection is not to the action of the committee but the policy?

Mr. BRITTEN. I have made no objection to the proposed action.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Am I not correct in understanding that this was asked for by a member of the Naval Affairs Committee and did not come as a suggestion from the Appropriations Committee at all?

Mr. BRITTEN. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I do not know except that a member of the Naval Affairs Committee was anxious to have it made in order and carried on this bill.

Mr. BRITTEN. In order to apparently preserve the rights of the Committee on Naval Affairs. In other words, your committee is taking away from the Committee on Naval Affairs every right to existence.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It was the determination of the Committee on Appropriations that it would not include anything of a legislative nature in the bill—anything that was taking away the rights of the legislative committee, and I am satisfied that this would not have been included except that the gentleman from New York asked for it.

Mr. BRITTEN. Did any representative of a legislative committee come before you and request the calling of that naval conference?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am speaking of the resolution introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS]. As far as the conference was concerned, there was none.

Mr. BRITTEN. But the committee did take up that legislation and put it in the bill.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is absolutely true, and this morning the House made it in order.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the House by its previous action has indorsed it, because the other resolution for a conference was carried in an appropriation bill.

Mr. BRITTEN. The other one went through the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. OLIVER. The Hensley resolution or amendment was carried in a naval bill.

Mr. BRITTEN. There was no appropriation committee of this character in existence at that time.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Does not the gentleman think when a thing of this sort is done by the House and it is for the interest of the country that no committee which is a mere agency of the House is injured or has any right to complain?

Mr. BRITTEN. I do not think so, otherwise you do not need separate committees. You might just as well put the House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and let it be a standing committee and wipe out all the other small committees or so-called agencies.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I think it has developed this morning that there is a vast amount of business under the jurisdiction of the Naval Committee outside of the matter of appropriations.

Mr. BRITTEN. There will not be when this Appropriations Committee gets through.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 28, line 1, strike out "$70,617,419" and insert "$62,097,419."

On page 28, line 15, strike out "$121,446,892" and insert "$113,526,892."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, these figures are figures which will be for the enlisted personnel of the 75,000 men in place of 86,000 which the committee has provided for. There is another amendment if you adopt this that it will be necessary to make to carry out the change from 87,000 enlisted men to 75,000. If you pass these two amendments you will save to the Government $9,308,970, and by so doing you will not make it necessary to take any man off from any ship now in the Navy.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. No; not now. I have only five minutes, but when I get through I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Connecticut. I want to make a statement, and I want to show that the committee that is in charge of this bill a year ago wanted a Navy of 67,000 men. If they were right then, and I think they were, they are absolutely wrong to-day. They prove it by their own figures in their own report made to the House in this bill, written within the last 10 days, and in my opinion they were right. I want to quote from their own report on page 4, paragraph 3, where they say:

In passing, it may be remarked that on September 30, 1922, although the House voted 19,000 more men than the committee proposed, there were but 52,538 men with the fleet, or but 2,538 more than the committee had proposed; there were 10,643 men specifically assigned to shore billets, or but 678 more than the committee had proposed. The remainder, out of a total of 86,985 men, or 23,754, are accounted for as follows:

Prisoners	760
Hospital patients	1,841
Recruits	6,935
In transit	3,301
Shore-based submarine tenders	2,116
Naval district craft	1,367
General detail	2,383
Decommissioning vessels	3,889
Miscellaneous	1,162
Total	23,754

It was the committee's belief that whatever slack there was existed in the foregoing list, and that holds true to-day.

If that is true, and you are voting to pay a Navy of 86,000 men to-day, you are practically voting to pay for over 30,000 men on land; and I say to you that it is absolutely unnecessary for the Navy to have an army of 30,000 men on shore. [Applause.] If these gentlemen will read their own remarks made in this House one year ago, they will find that they themselves told you that it was not necessary to have over 15,000 men on shore, and yet they are providing in this bill for over 30,000 and you are voting $9,308,970 of the people's money away to pay for an army on shore with which to run the Navy.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. HULL. I promised to yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], but I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman's statement is correct, there are possibly thirty thousand and odd men in the Navy now on shore.

Mr. HULL. Practically so.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does the gentleman from Iowa know how many enlisted men there are in the Navy at the present time?

Mr. HULL. Yes; there were 86,985 September 30, 1922.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. I yield first to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. TILSON. I wish to ask the gentleman how carefully he has figured how much injury such a proposition would do to our Navy. He has so carefully figured the amount of money saved as $9,000,000 that it seems to me, as it was presented to us a year ago, he would do more than $9,000,000 worth of injury to the Navy, and I think this Congress and the people of the country thought so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more to answer that question.

Mr. TILSON. Oh, it will take more than that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL. No; it will not take more than that. I will answer the gentleman's question in two minutes. I have thought seriously about this proposition for the last two days, and I have talked with men well posted on the matter, and all, with the exception of one, have told me it would not injure the Navy one iota; and I do not believe it will, else I would not have offered the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I heartily agree with the gentleman's amendment. I want to ask if it is not a fact that many reserves, of these 34,000 land naval forces, drawing salary from the Government, are not engaged in private businesses over the United States?

Mr. HULL. I do not know anything about that. The gentleman from Texas is better informed about that.

Mr. BLANTON. In the insurance business, in the loan business, and in the real estate business.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I would not offer this amendment to-day if I thought it would hurt the Navy at all, but it will not hurt the Navy. The situation has not changed at all from last year. They do not need 30,000 men on shore, and when you have not money to provide for the school system in the city of Washington for your school children, you better look out how you provide $9,308,970 more than the Navy needs.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. The gentleman has made an interesting statement. Can he designate approximately the men who are idle or useless or tell us what they are doing. Thirty thousand men on land is a surprising number for a Navy.

Mr. HULL. There are 10,643 men assigned to shore billets. I presume that most of these men ought to be assigned to shore billets. You have to have some slack, but here further is what the committee says, and they could not change the items. They have prisoners, hospital patients, recruits, those in transit, shore-base submarine tenders, naval district craft, general detail, decommissioning vessels, and miscellaneous. All those total 23,754 men, to be added to the 10,643 men in shore billets. And then they conclude their own statement in their report:

> It was the committee's belief that whatever slack there was existed in the foregoing list, and that holds true to-day.

Yet you are asked to vote $9,308,970 for a sentimental idea on the part of the committee, that because they were outvoted a year ago that they should not be expected to stand firm for what they believe to be right, but should vote the people's money away, because if they did stand firm they might be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa. I am surprised at the gentleman from Iowa. The House will recall that after debate of some days with reference to the strength of the Navy, something like eight or nine months ago, after a great deal of information had been given on both sides in reference to the proposition, the House by a decisive vote determined upon a Navy of 86,000 men. We won that fight without the assistance of our good friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY]. We now have him converted. I am surprised that the gentleman from Iowa, after we have been reinforced with the ability and grace of the gentleman from Michigan, should attempt to cut down the personnel of the Navy.

Be that as it may, the gentleman from Iowa has stated that we have a Navy force of something like 30,000 men on land. The gentleman is not wholly accurate in that statement. In the first place, I think we may divide the Navy into three forces—the operating fleet, those upon strictly shore duty, and miscellaneous. At the present time there is in what is known as the fleet something like 52,538 men. To this there should be added the men who are not properly credited to any shore force. In order to make up his 30,000, the gentleman has to add to the shore force, for example, all of the prisoners and all of those confined to hospitals. They are not engaged in shore duties. I submit it is not a fair statement to the House that in order to run a fleet of something like 52,000 men we have to have "an army on shore" of 30,000 men.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I can not yield now.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. In a moment. The gentleman has the recruits, amounting to 6,905, included in the 30,000, and certainly a considerable portion of those should be subject to training every month.

Mr. ROGERS. And that includes those that are in trade schools also.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman is correct. Then there are those in transit. It happens that on the 30th of September of this year, when the figures in transit—3,301—were given, there were something like 1,771 on board a naval transport going over to the fleet in the Pacific, chargeable to that fleet, and yet the gentleman says these men are shore sailors. He includes them in his estimate of 30,000 men.

I submit its unfairness. Then ship base submarine tenders. We have submarine tenders. The men who man them are on the water, but because of inadequate facilities they must necessarily be located very close to stations and at the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan a year ago those were taken off from the seagoing force and credited up to either miscellaneous or shore, but they certainly are not properly credited to shore billets. They belong to the sea force and properly so. Now you have the decommissioning of vessels. Almost 4,000 men are now engaged in decommissioning vessels, placed there because of the attitude of the Committee on Appropriations and at their suggestion. Now those men are at sea at work upon vessels. Surely it is not fair to credit them to the shore force. They belong to the Navy and are a part of the sea force. They ought to be kept there, and they must be kept there until these vessels have been decommissioned.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman questions my statement. I read the report of the committee, and I submit there were some of these men in prison and some in hospitals. That is all you have said, and the number is given on page 4.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. HULL. I will admit that if we cut the Navy down 11,000 men they will simply have to do a little better figuring down here as to where they keep these men. We have cut the Army down and we ought to cut this down and make them do better figuring.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I want to say to the gentleman from Iowa that while he read those figures he was very careful to emphasize the fact that there was a Navy with something over 50,000 men at sea and "an Army of 30,000 men on land." It was not an accurate statement according to the information presented to this House by this committee.

Mr. ROGERS. May I interrupt the gentleman's remarks long enough to read this clause from the report of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I will be glad to have the gentleman do so.

Mr. ROGERS. The committee's report says:

> Nothing has arisen during the two intervening months since last April that would warrant the committee in proposing a smaller number than the House so recently expressed itself as favoring.

As the gentleman has said, this whole question was gone into as recently as last April, and nothing has happened since, as the chairman of the subcommittee so well says, to warrant a reversal of our action.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman talks about saving $9,000,000. If we only want to save money, why not adjourn and appropriate nothing for anything or anybody?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I am very much interested in the gentleman's statement; but the gentleman failed to give the information wanted. The gentleman says there are 30,000 on shore. The number accounted for was 20,000, and finally accounted for and useless, 10,000 or 11,000 and——

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman and myself disagree as to "useless." I said nothing about 10,000 useless men. The gentleman from Iowa made that statement.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. The gentleman has accounted for a few——

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman from Wisconsin can not expect me in the course of 5 or 10 minutes to detail to the House all the duties and all the service of eighty-six odd thousand men in our Navy. I am prepared to take the word of the Naval Affairs Committee, the men who participated in the debate a year ago, reinforced to-day as they are by the members of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. The gentleman says 30,000, and concedes 20,000 as serving a useful purpose. He does not controvert that. Now, there must be 5,000 or 10,000——

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman from Minnesota controverts any idea that there are any considerable number of useless men in the Navy.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman from Wisconsin is making a mistake in assuming that the gentleman from Iowa is correct. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I now yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Texas. I desire to ask for information just how many men are engaged on shore duty after subtracting the ones mentioned?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. In strictly shore duty there are 10,643 men assigned to what are known as shore billets.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The major portion of those are met by the items mentioned?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes; as I read to the House.

Mr. HICKS. I desire to say, because I think we are possibly laboring under some misapprehension, that whenever shore duty of these men of the Navy is mentioned we think of them instinctively as sailors. Now, as a matter of fact, of this number on shore 2,233 are men who are engaged at air stations which perforce must be on land. There are 2,233 who are technically sailors who must be stationed on shore duty, doing work at air stations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that the membership has forgotten what the debate was about concerning the Navy a few months ago, and I am inclined to side with the committee. I do not think anything has transpired to warrant the committee in trying to reduce the Navy. [Applause.] However, the debate a few months ago was on this question, and the loyalty of some of us was questioned by some of our very loyal and distinguished brethren because we were willing to follow the committee, who said that so many men could man the treaty Navy.

Mr. MCARTHUR. How many men?

Mr. TINCHER. The committee said 52,000, and the proponents of a big navy stated it would take nearly 60,000. I am giving you the round figures. I am not a member of the committee, and I do not remember the exact number—65,000, I think it was.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] stood on this floor and said that his inquiry had prompted him to state that they would put the men on the boats and would not man the Navy in the way that we thought, if we gave them the men. I have followed these reports and I follow the committee this time.

The gentleman from Michigan is leaving Congress. He will not be a Member of the next Congress. But the fact will remain that he was right, and they are not using the men on the boats, but have them on shore. [Applause.] And he is warranted in saying that we can not reduce it because the same men are here now to vote who were here before, and the same influences are now at work that were at work before to maintain the size of the Navy. But we, who acted on the theory that we could do that and still be patriotic, have been vindicated by the action of the Navy Department itself, and they have these men and they have them on shore instead of manning the treaty Navy. [Applause.]

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Does the gentleman recall, as he probably does, that every first-class navy on earth aims to keep on shore approximately one-third of its enlisted personnel?

Mr. TINCHER. I recall the gentleman from Illinois himself taking the floor and pleading for a big navy on the ground that we must man the treaty navy, and holding out to the country the idea that those supporting the committee were opposed to manning the treaty navy and trying to reduce the naval force. Now they admit that the men are on shore, and then they criticize the committee because they do not say "Come in."

I speak in behalf of the subcommittee that brought in this report. I know how they feel. I know that the only reason in the world why they did not bring in a report to reduce the Navy was because they considered, as far as this Congress was concerned, that the matter was res adjudicata—a matter that had been tried out and settled.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is revealing the secrets of the subcommittee. [Laughter.]

Mr. TINCHER. I am not on the subcommittee.

Mr. MCARTHUR. I still make the same point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman is revealing the secrets of the subcommittee.

Mr. TINCHER. I am not on the committee.

Mr. MCSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that joke ought to be adjudged.

Mr. MCARTHUR. The gentleman has not yet answered. He ought to answer, especially for the edification of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

Mr. TINCHER. I suppose my friend from the West coast will admit that the naval stations in Chicago are competent to fight their own battles. I am just as friendly to the Chicago navy as I am to the navy of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR]. But I insist that those who stood with the committee and were right before, and did not get our orders from the department before, have the right to have it go into the record to-day that they are not using the men on the ships. You can find them out at the Wardman Park Hotel or at the Raleigh or at the New Willard, but they are not at sea. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I think we have a situation here, created by the amendment which has been offered, that is well worthy of the careful consideration of the committee. A year ago it was determined that it was necessary for the manning of the ships that we should have a Navy of 86,000 men. It was contended then by the committee that 67,000 was adequate. It was, however, determined by the Congress that we ought to provide for a Navy of 86,000 men. This was done, and we now have a Navy of 86,935 men.

Now, what condition do we find, Mr. Chairman, with regard to these men? Has the number of men on the ships been increased? It has not. There are only 52,538 men on the ships of the Navy to-day, while 34,392 men are on shore. It will not do for gentlemen to say that the country will be satisfied that the enormous number, proportionately, of 34,392 men are necessary on shore. When over 52,000 men are needed with the ships it will not appear to the public reasonable that 34,000 men should be still kept on shore.

These are conditions that we have got to meet when we consider this proposition. The amendment offered by my colleague from Iowa [Mr. HULL] is not to strike out the 34,000 men. It is only to reduce the amount down to 75,000 men instead of 86,000. Is that an unreasonable reduction? If we take out these 11,000 men that he asks us to reduce by his amendment, there would still be more than 23,000 men on shore. Is any gentleman qualified by expert knowledge or otherwise to say that 23,000 men, with this character of a Navy, nearly one-third of the men of a Navy of 75,000 men, would not be a sufficient number for shore service? It occurs to me that it will be extremely difficult for anybody to make that kind of a showing.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly; I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. How does the gentleman feel about expert advice or expert opinion as to the maintenance of one-third of the force on shore by England, France, and Japan, and our best authority?

Mr. TOWNER. I have not that knowledge.

Mr. BRITTEN. That is a fact, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. TOWNER. That one-third of the men are necessary on shore?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. If that is the case, I should certainly adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa. With 75,000 men in the Navy you would still have over 23,000 men on shore.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman is not calculating on the proper figure. If you take one-third of 86,000 you will find it is 29,000, and 29,000 is about what we shall need on shore to maintain our Navy if the best expert advice knows what it is talking about.

Mr. TOWNER. Well, we have too many men on shore, even according to the gentleman's idea, and if we reduce the number, as we shall if we adopt the amendment reducing the number to 75,000 men, we shall then have practically one-third of the men provided for on shore.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, the House by a very decisive vote last April decided in favor of a personnel strength of 86,000 for the Navy.

Mr. BEGG. How decisive was it?

Mr. KNUTSON. I do not recall the figures now, but it was quite decisive.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. It was sufficient.

Mr. KNUTSON. It was sufficient for all purposes, and it will be repeated again to-day. Nothing has occurred within the last six or eight months to warrant us in making a reduction at this time. We are hopeful that the agreement entered into at the Conference on the Limitation of Armament in Washington last winter will be carried out by all the powers subscribing to the naval treaty, but my information from the Navy Department is that little progress has as yet been made toward carrying into effect the provisions of that treaty except by our Government.

Now, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa is merely an entering wedge for the reduction of the Navy. I am firmly of the opinion that the American people want a Navy that is second to none. I believe it is the best guaranty we can have for the national security. It is the cheapest insurance we can have. If the gentleman's amendment carries, we will have to go through the fight again next year, when some one will, without regard to the needs of the country, offer an amendment to reduce the enlisted personnel to 50,000, and probably the next year to 25,000, and then we will find ourselves on the same level with China and other countries that are too proud to fight.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the distinguished assistant floor leader yield for a question?

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman is conferring upon me honors which are not mine——

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Minnesota yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes; I recognize that title.

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask how many of these 30,000 land seamen are stationed in Minnesota?

Mr. KNUTSON. None. The wisdom of the Navy Department places these men where they are needed, and they are not needed in Minnesota. We do not have even a recruiting office in Minnesota. I have no interest whatsoever in this matter except as an American who wishes to protect his country against all possible contingencies. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. ROGERS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13316) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. We seem to be proceeding upon the idea that it is some sort of crime for a sailor to be assigned to shore duty. Our very well-informed colleague, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], has spoken of it as "shore leave," as if all these men who were not on the ships were loitering on shore.

Mr. KNUTSON. Or sitting in the parks.

Mr. TILSON. Or sitting in the parlors of hotels in Washington or elsewhere.

Mr. BLANTON. Or the Army and Navy Club.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, such a motion as this is not at all consistent with the facts in the case. It has been already stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN], who is well informed on these subjects, what is the usual percentage of shore duty to sea-duty personnel in the best-regulated navies of the world, and it corresponds quite closely to the present distribution of our own Navy. I wish to call attention to the facts as they exist in regard to assignments to land duty.

On January 1, 1922, according to the hearings, there were 35,500 men on shore. Of course, that includes hospital patients, prisoners, and so forth, the number of whom can not be affected in any way by any change of appropriation that we may make. On September 30, 1922, this number had been reduced to 28,735. This was in accordance with the general understanding last April when we were discussing this question that a larger proportion of the men should go on board the ships.

The proposition of the Navy now is to put on shore 27,924 men; that is, that during the fiscal year 1924 the number on shore duty will be reduced to 27,984, which seems to be about as far as the number can be well reduced if we take into account the large number of recruits who ought to be trained on shore before they go on board ship, the number of men in transit, some of whom are in transit on the water, but still charged to land duty, the number of men in prison, in hospitals, and so on. In order to take up the slack, as it is called, it will require just about the number now proposed.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I notice from the report of the committee that it is stated that on September 30 the number on shore was 34,000. Where did the gentleman get his information?

Mr. TILSON. I read from page 27 of the hearings.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The committee report on page 4 says there were 52,000 men on ships, and the remainder being on land would make the number about 34,000 on land.

Mr. TILSON. I do not know how the report was made up, but I am speaking from the information furnished to the committee on page 27 of the hearings.

In the discussion last year it was brought out very clearly, I think, that a reduction to 67,000 men, as then proposed, or even to 75,000, as now proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], would seriously affect the efficiency of our Navy. If we should attempt now, after the limited discussion that we have had here under the five-minute rule, to make a change in the number of the personnel, we should be taking a leap in the dark, the result of which would be a very serious injury to the Navy.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, we have heard a great deal of discussion this afternoon about 52,538 men being the personnel that we have afloat. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that on September 20 of this year that number represented the actual number of men on service in the fleet, but that in addition to that 3,889 men were in decommissioning work, 1,700 on transports, 1,367 on district craft, and 2,116 on shore base subtenders, or a total of 61,610 men actually on ships of various kinds. Subtract that from the total of 86,000 enlisted personnel and it does not give the number on shore duty that gentlemen have indicated. Gentlemen have been talking about the men who were not on actual fleet duty. The real figures show something like 25,000 men on shore duty, really less than the well-established rules for the conduct of all navies require, namely, one man on shore for every two men afloat. I submit that the Navy Department has made an excellent showing in this matter and that it has carried out the spirit and purpose of the instructions in the last naval appropriation bill in providing for a Navy with an 86,000 enlisted personnel, and that we have no more men actually on shore duty now than are absolutely necessary to maintain the Navy in its proper relative strength of one man on shore to two men afloat.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McARTHUR. Certainly.

Mr. ROGERS. When the bill was up before the House last April there was an estimate furnished by the Navy Department officially to the Congress stating what disposition the department proposed to make of the 86,000 men if Congress granted the 86,000. That estimate shows that 57,268 of the 86,000 would be kept for sea duty. Now, the evidence is, as the gentleman has just brought out, that the Navy Department has done a little better—if you want to call it better—and has 58,200 men afloat instead of 57,200.

Mr. McARTHUR. I think there are more than that.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a short statement to the House relative to the enlisted force of the Navy and the attitude of the Appropriations Committee toward this matter at this time. Last year the duty fell upon the Committee on Appropriations to prepare a bill immediately following the action of the Conference on the Limitation of Armament. By reason of that conference it was possible to reduce the number of men in the Navy, and under the circumstances it seemed proper for the Committee on Appropriations to recommend the proper reduction. There was not time for the legislative committee to act prior to the time for considering the naval appropriation bill in the House. We had to act promptly because there had been a reduction in naval armament, and it was necessary to translate that reduction in the Naval Establishment into a reduction of expenses for the current year.

The law fixes the maximum number of men for the Navy at 137,000. The Committee on Naval Affairs reported a bill to the House on March 22, as I recall, fixing the minimum number of men at 86,000. The Committee on Appropriations recommended 67,000. For several days the matter was discussed in the House with a thoroughness that challenged the attention of every Member of Congress and, in fact, the whole country. The number was finally fixed at 86,000. So we have the action of this present Congress fixing the minimum at 86,000 with a maximum of 137,000 fixed by prior law.

This year the Committee on Appropriations faced an entirely different situation because we had the action of Congress to guide us both as to the minimum number of men and the maximum number of men, one at 86,000 and the other at 137,000, and between those limits our action had to be confined. We have brought the bill here carrying an appropriation to pay for the minimum number of men provided by act of Congress.

If Congress wishes to change either the minimum or maximum limit which it has heretofore fixed, in the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations such a proposal should come from the proper legislative committee. Therefore we have presented this bill to the House carrying sufficient appropriations for 86,000 men, regardless of the fact that we presented a proposal for a smaller number eight months ago. The Appropriations Committee, like every other committee, is the servant of the House and cheerfully takes orders from the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman have two minutes more in order that I may ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks that the time of the gentleman from Michigan be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. The gentleman from Michigan attracted the attention of the House when he first came here because of his wonderful grasp of naval affairs. I know he impressed me as a man who has mastered the subject, and when he went on the Committee on Appropriations he made the same impression because he was so thorough, and I have great confidence in his judgment. I would like to have him suggest, although I know he can not advocate a reduction—I would like to have him point out where, in his opinion, men have been stationed on shore duty that might have been dispensed with and that amount of money saved to the country.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say to my friend from Wisconsin that, of course, as chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill on the floor I am the agent of the full Committee on Appropriations, and the committee is committed to 86,000 men. We have agreed to the provision of the bill making the personnel 86,000 in order to carry out the will of the House. I will say, however, answering the gentleman from Wisconsin directly, that the policy of the department in regard to many matters has a direct bearing on the number of men required for the naval service. In my opening statement I discussed the question of keeping men on shore for long courses of training instead of putting them into the fleet after brief courses, as was done during the war. Many other economies of men, in my judgment, could be effected, but I do not desire to detain the House with a recital of them at this time. I went into them fully last year and the general situation has not changed since that time.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment. A year ago I stood by the committee on its figures for the personnel of the Navy. I did not believe that the increase that was proposed and carried was wholly justified. I believed then, and I am still inclined to believe, that we could have maintained the Navy in first-class condition with fewer men than were authorized, but the House increased the strength of the Navy and the Senate concurred. The committee has reexamined the matter and has fixed the number. I am still inclined to think that perhaps we could get along very well with a somewhat smaller number of men than has been proposed by the committee, but I think it would be a very unwise thing. Now that the committee has examined the matter and given it their best attention—and the committee is not disposed to maintain a Navy unnecessarily large—I think it would be a very great mistake to make a reduction below the number that in the judgment of the subcommittee and the committee are essential. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. As I understand it, the committee has no judgment upon it at all. It simply has not changed from the rule. It does not pass upon the necessity of the Navy.

Mr. MONDELL. I am sure the committee does not believe that there should be a reduction such as has been proposed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HULL) there were—ayes 25, noes 81.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONNALLY of Texas: Page 39, line 12, after the word "service," insert the following:

"Provided, That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be available for the pay of any enlisted man or officer who may be assigned to recruiting men or boys under 21 years of age without the written consent of the parent or guardian of such minor or minors."

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House——

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. But I have begun to debate the matter and it is too late.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear the first part of the amendment. Is it in the form of a limitation?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. No point of order has been made, and I propose to debate it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the point of order of the gentleman from Illinois comes too late. The gentleman from Texas had been recognized.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] was on his feet asking for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TINCHER). The present Chairman has just come to the chair, and the regular Chairman was leaving and in conversation with him when the gentleman from Illinois rose. The present Chairman was looking at the gentleman from Illinois and did not recognize the gentleman from Texas. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the point of order.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, let us have the amendment again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know what the point of order is.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. As I understand it, the point of order is reserved.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Does the gentleman want the point of order disposed of now or reserved?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to address myself to the point of order when that question is presented. We have had it admitted in argument by the leader of the majority, Mr. MONDELL, that he thinks the Navy can get along very well indeed during the next fiscal year without the number of men provided for in the bill. I know that the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], who has the affection of everyone who really knows him, thinks that the Navy can function adequately during the next fiscal year with less than the number of men provided for in the bill. A very considerable proportion of the majority side of the House is of that conviction, and the predominating part of the minority side of the House entertains that conviction. Yet every few days Members of Congress get appeals from fathers and mothers setting forth the fact that some individual recruiting officer has, with the blandishments of persuasion, with beautiful lithographed pictures of foreign lands, seduced some boy who is not 21 years of age to the belief that the proper place for him is in the Navy of the United States.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Not just now.

Mr. BEGG. I want to ask a serious question.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. But I want to finish this suggestion. Members are then forced to secure affidavits establishing a case of dependency to the authorities of the Navy, which seems to be hungry for men. Without such proof it will never release the boy over 18 and under 21 from the Navy, although he may have been enlisted without the consent of his parents or guardian. The law now is that one may be enlisted who is over 18 years of age without the consent of the parents or guardian, but the laws of our States all provide, as far as I know, that until a boy becomes 21 years of age, or until his father emancipates him, the father does not lose control over him or his earnings.

I believe it is unfair and unwise for the Federal Government to permit the Navy to go into the homes and, without the consent of parents, take away boys of 18 years of age, some of whom are breadwinners, some of whom are supposed to provide for their fathers and mothers. At the very period when they ought to be in school or learning a trade boys who have not reached the age of discretion are lured into the naval service. The Navy ought not to want men so badly as that, and this Congress ought not to permit their enlistment. I yield now to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BEGG. Does not the gentleman believe that if he wants to accomplish what he has in mind, the way to do it would be to prohibit the enlistment of boys in the Navy under a certain age?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Theoretically that would be the proper procedure, but the gentleman knows that under the present organization of the House the Appropriations Committee is the predominating committee, and in order to get any effective legislation through this House you must put it on an appropriation bill, because the sessions of the House are largely consumed with appropriation bills; and the gentleman furthermore knows that the program of his party now is not to pass anything through this session except the ship subsidy bill and the appropriation bills.

Mr. BEGG. If I understand the gentleman's amendment correctly, it withholds any money from recruiting officers sent out to recruit boys under age without the consent of the parents.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Has a recruiting officer ever been sent out to do that?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. They are all sent out to do that.

Mr. BEGG. None of them are sent out for that purpose.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. If the gentleman's contention is true, then my amendment would be ineffective and unobjectionable from his standpoint.

Mr. BEGG. It is a farce.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Then why does the gentleman object to it?

Mr. BEGG. I do not object to it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Then it seems to me the gentleman is taking up a lot of time unnecessarily.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, they are prohibited by law now from enlisting them under 18 years of age. They do it, and they should be stopped from doing it, and the gentleman's amendment would stop them from doing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, has the point of order been made?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has been reserved. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes; I make the point of order.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, it does seem to me that this is not subject to a point of order. I am heartily against this amendment and feel that it should be defeated, but I think the amendment is in order, because it is nothing but a limitation.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard on the point of order before the Chair rules?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. The amendment is not subject to a point of order; it is just foolish.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman is an authority on that.

Mr. MONDELL. The amendment of the gentleman from Texas says that no officer shall be appointed to recruit boys under age. Of course, no officer is appointed to recruit boys under age. They shall not be placed on that duty without the consent of the parents of the boys that are to be recruited. Just how the Navy Department intending to send out recruiting officers instructed to recruit boys under age would secure permission of the parents of the country to recruit their boys under age before being so commissioned I do not understand. Of course, no one does. The point of order does not lie, but the amendment is simply silly.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman read the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois care to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do, Mr. Chairman. I made this point of order not because I am particularly anxious to press a point of order against this particular amendment, but I think we are going pretty far afield in the matter of legislating upon appropriation bills if we allow an amendment of this character to stand without any objection. It is true a limitation may be imposed upon an appropriation, but it has been held also that it must be in fact a limitation upon an appropriation and not a limitation upon the functions of an executive officer. In the House Manual, under paragraph 825, it is stated as follows:

The limitation may not be applied directly to the official functions of executive officers, but it may restrict executive discretion so far as this may be done by a simple negative on the use of the appropriation.

In Hinds' Precedents, fourth volume, paragraph 3957, I read as follows:

The limitation must be upon the appropriation and not an affirmative limitation of official functions.

On April 24, 1900, the Post Office appropriation bill being under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. W. T. Crawford, of North Carolina, offered to the paragraph appropriating for inland transportation by star routes the following amendment:

"Of which sum $50,000 shall be used, under the direction of the Postmaster General, in supplying temporary service to the newly established offices in cases where the establishment of star routes is contemplated."

Mr. Eugene F. Loud, of California, having raised a point of order, the Chairman held:

"It is not a limitation upon the appropriation; it is a limitation upon the functions of the Post Office Department. It takes away from the Postmaster General that discretion that he now has and is, therefore, in the opinion of the Chair, obnoxious to the point of order, and the Chair sustains the point of order."

In the present case the amendment, in effect, does not limit the appropriation. The appropriation is available, the appropriation is going to be expended, men are going to be recruited, and it is merely proposed to amend the existing law by directing that the recruiting of men for the Navy shall be done in some other manner than that now provided by law. I find at the bottom of paragraph 825 in the House Manual the following:

The fact that a provision would constitute legislation for only a year does not make it a limitation in order under the rule. Care should also be taken that the language of limitation be not such as, when fairly construed, would change existing law or justify an executive officer in assuming an attempt to change existing law.

What difference is it going to make in reference to the expenditure for recruiting, or how does it limit that expenditure if we say that minors shall not be recruited without the consent of their parents? That will not affect the recruiting. That will not produce one cent of saving in the appropriation, nor does it limit the appropriation. It is simply a change of existing law, and I for one, Mr. Chairman, have begun to feel that the time has come when the House at every opportunity, or some Member of the House, should raise objection to attempts constantly to change existing law. I think we have gone far—in fact, to the extreme limit—in the matter of changing laws by appropriation bills and by amendments to appropriation bills. Very soon there will be no substantive legislation whatever except by way of original proposals in, or by way of amendments to, appropriation bills. I make this argument because I think it is the duty of every presiding officer in the House to preserve the rights of the House and preserve the methods of legislation, to the end that this custom of legislating on appropriation bills or through appropriation bills shall at least not go any further than it has gone already.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] made the argument on the point of order that this particular amendment was not in order because it was foolish. That was to be expected from the gentleman from Wyoming, for phrenologists tell us that those individuals with small capacities and largely developed bumps of self-esteem consider always those who differ with them as being foolish. Now, Mr. Chairman, the point of order as made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] is to the effect that the amendment is legislation. It is not legislation in the sense that the point of order was urged, but it is a limitation; and if the Chair will bear with me for just a moment—because in all frankness I know that the Chair wants to decide this question fairly and properly—I believe I can convince the Chair. What is a limitation? A limitation on an appropriation bill is that which limits the use of money which is appropriated to certain purposes. As was so well pointed out by the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Mann, on one occasion, and as was concurred in, as I remember now, by the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Clark, an amendment similar to this amendment could be so worded as to provide that no part of this appropriation shall be paid to red-headed men, and it would be a limitation within the rules of this House. This amendment could provide that no part of this money should be paid to any man who performs duty on land. You could destroy every one of the shore stations and shore duty if the Congress wanted to do it, because such a provision would be a limitation on an appropriation.

Now, in all frankness, if I had to write a statute governing the subject I would not draft it as I have drafted this amendment. I would write it so as to win at least a degree of approval from the gentleman from Wyoming. But in order to draft it so as to escape points of order I had to make it rather awkward in its form; I had to draw it so that it would be a limitation. Therefore I provided that no part of this appropriation shall be applied to the pay of any officer or any man—I could not say "assigned to recruiting duty," because that would destroy all of the recruiting duty; I had to say that none of it should apply to officers and men engaged in recruiting boys under 21 years of age without the written consent of their parent or guardian.

Now, what is the object of the amendment? The object of the amendment is to let the Navy Department know that this Congress wants it to stop enlisting boys under 21 years of age without the consent of their parents; and if it is put in here, although it might not suit the ideas of the gentleman from Wyoming, the Navy Department will not enlist another one if it knows it. The object of this amendment is to withhold payment from any officer or any enlisted man who recruits a boy under 21 years without the consent of his parents. This is a direction that the Navy Department shall not pay that officer or enlisted man one cent.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I just wanted to suggest to the gentleman that the other day Mr. Speaker GILLETT ruled on the precise point, on a resolution offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM], where the gentleman from Massachusetts proposed that no part of the appropriation should be paid to any employee who did not come in under the civil-service law, and the Speaker overruled the point of order and held that it was a mere limitation on the appropriation.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I do not favor the gentleman's amendment, but I do agree with him on that point.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes; I thank the gentleman. There have been hundreds of cases of amendments offered on the floor of this House in the nature of limitations which have been sustained.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. In a moment.

As I recall it, the other day, when the House had under discussion the question of prohibition enforcement in the Treasury Department bill, quite a number of amendments were offered from the floor providing that no judge or district attorney should be paid any part of the funds appropriated if he did not perform his duty; and while the Chair said that perhaps they were foolish amendments, yet he held them to be in order as a limitation.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. In justice to the recruiting officers, I think the gentleman is aware of the fact that where the boys are recruited under the age of 18, the boys have misstated their age. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's position. I think that often a boy does not know. He is not yet a man when he is only 18 years of age.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Is the gentleman in favor of my amendment?

Mr. KNUTSON. I may not vote for the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas on the point of order.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I presumed that the whip on the majority side was going to ask me something about the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I would like to suggest to the gentleman, in answer to the statement of the whip on the Republican side, that the officer may claim that he could not find out the boy's age, but when they discharge them they make them produce the proof of their age. I think they could find out his age when they enlist a boy just as well as when they discharge him.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes. When they get them in they are not quite so searching in their attempt to find out the age. When they put them out they are quite careful.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. No; I regret I can not yield to more interruptions.

Mr. TILSON. We are trying to help the gentleman.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I could cite hundreds of precedents from Hinds' volume, and I submit that it is quite clear that this is simply a limitation. I think the point of order ought to be overruled.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is quite clear that the amendment is a limitation, especially in view of recent rulings by several Chairmen.

I recall that the first time the question was discussed in my hearing an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] on the Army appropriation bill, depriving certain Army officers of pay if they did certain acts in social relations with regard to privates and other officers, and the Speaker sustained the amendment. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact that on day before yesterday I raised this same question. Page 490 of the RECORD shows that I offered evidence here, conclusive evidence, of the fact that recruiting officers not only enlisted boys under 21, as they are authorized to if they are 18, but they enlisted a boy named Bradshaw as young as 15 years of age, without the knowledge and consent of his parents; and when application was made for his discharge by his parents the Bureau of Navigation, while promising to discharge him, wrote that the boy had sworn so-and-so, which intimated that action might be taken against him.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Did the boy make a false affidavit as to his age, or did the recruiting officer falsely enlist him?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the boy, as stated by my colleague [Mr. CONNALLY of Texas], seduced by the blandishments of the recruiting officer, swore falsely that he was 18.

Mr. BEGG. Then the recruiting officer was not to blame.

Mr. BLANTON. He stated that he was 18 years of age in order to get into the Navy, to make these trips around the world.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment.

Also, I showed, day before yesterday, that a young man named Eddy was recruited under 18 years of age, and I produced a letter here from a reputable firm of lawyers in Texas—Messrs. Walters & Baker, of San Saba—and a letter from his mother, that this young boy Eddy was enlisted by a recruiting officer without the knowledge and consent of his mother; and I showed that it was brought to the attention of the Bureau of Navigation that the young man was under 18 years of age. A telegram was sent to his mother asking for her consent. She wired back saying she refused to give her consent, and stating that he was under 18 years of age, and protesting against his acceptance.

Yet he was accepted into the Navy and sent to San Francisco; and when I wrote the Bureau of Navigation, showing that this good woman was a widow in destitute circumstances with five little children to support and that this minor son was her main stand-by for her support, and asking that the boy be discharged, the Bureau of Navigation sent the same letter that it sends to all parents, while promising to discharge him, stating, in effect, "Your boy swore that he was 18 years of age. We had a right to enlist him," which intimated that he might be discharged dishonorably and that some court-martial might take place against him. Then this destitute widow wrote a letter to me, which I put into the RECORD on page 490, saying, "I do not know what my boy swore. I am afraid I will get him into trouble, and under the circumstances I withdraw my application for his discharge."

That is the situation with which we are confronted, and yet it is called foolish because we want to stop it. It is called silly because we want to stop it. It may be silly or foolish to some Members, but I want to say that I am in favor of the amendment offered by my colleague. In war time the Government has a right to take these boys, but in peace time it ought not to take them without their parents' knowledge and consent unless they are 21 years of age.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, regardless of what our views might be with reference to the enlistment of minors and the precautions necessary to protect them, I think it would not be wise to place this amendment on the appropriation bill. This amendment is drawn as well as it could be drawn and make it get past the point of order. It simply provides that you can not use any of this appropriation to pay these officers if this thing is done, that no part of the money appropriated can be used for that purpose, and we have the incongruous situation that we have a positive law and regulation covering the entire subject, and yet notwithstanding that we put in this language providing that they can not use this fund to pay the officers.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Is that situation any more anomalous than the one with which we are confronted when the law says the strength of the Navy shall be 187,000 and the naval appropriation bill says that strength shall be 80,000? Is not that a similar proposition?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I do not think the two are analogous at all.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. If a deduction is to be made from the pay of the recruiting officer, when will it be made and how much will be deducted?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The gentleman might get that information from the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is easy enough to work yourself up into a passion of sympathy for the son of a widowed mother, but there were two or three peculiar things suggested to my mind in the case mentioned by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. In the first place, a boy of 15 years of age voluntarily joined the Navy, and then his mother sent a wire asking for his release on the ground that she was dependent on him for support. Now, in every one of these cases of these boys who enlist under age the chances are nine out of ten that instead of being an asset to the parent they are a liability, and most of these boys run away from home and file a false affidavit as to their age in order to get into the Navy. I am not sure that the future of the boy is not in better shape if he is allowed and compelled to serve his three or four years in the Navy than if he is discharged and allowed to go on his wayward way.

Mr. ROGERS. Does the gentleman think it would be unreasonable that the Navy Department should require any boy under the age of 21 who seeks to enlist to submit to the recruiting officer a certified copy of his birth certificate? It seems to me that is the way to reach this thing. We have a law as to who may enter the Navy with or without the consent of parents and who may not. Why not require the recruiting officer to have real evidence as to how old the applicant is?

Mr. JONES of Texas. He probably would get it if we should pass this amendment.

Mr. BEGG. I would not object to that requirement. I am not out of sympathy with the proposition to require these boys to be a little older before enlisting without the parents' consent. The point I am making is that there is no occasion for too much sympathy with the boy who lies about his age in order to get in. What does this amendment say? It says pay shall be withheld from the enlisting officer who is assigned to go out and enlist boys under age. Now, I maintain that if this amendment should be passed it would not do any good, because no officer in the Navy is ever assigned to go out and violate the law. If a false oath is filed with him as to the boy's age the officer is not guilty, and the pay of the officer could not be withheld from him. If he has exercised all the precautions necessary in the discharge of his duty you could not take away his pay if a boy came in and filed an affidavit stating that he was 21 years old when he was in fact only 19. This amendment is surplusage, to say the least; and under it you could not withhold the officer's pay, because, as I said in the first place, he does not get any such assignment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does not the gentleman think, if this amendment were adopted, all the recruiting officers would require either a birth certificate about anyone as to whom there was any doubt, or else the consent of the parents?

Mr. BEGG. I would have no quarrel with this amendment if it simply said that no recruiting officer was to receive any part of this pay unless he required an affidavit or a birth certificate showing the boy's age before he enlisted if he was under 21. I would not quarrel with that. I am not out of sympathy with the amendment, but the amendment will not do anything if it is written into the bill except to make a jumble and a jargon of the actual operation of the law.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the substitute which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers a substitute, which will be reported by the Clerk.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Sixty Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I move that the committee do now rise, and on that I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the committte do now rise, and on that motion he asks for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. KELLEY of Michigan and Mr. WINGO.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 1, nays 95.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TINCHER). On this vote the ayes are 1 and the nays are 95; 5 are present and not voting. A quorum is present. The noes have it, and the committee refuses to rise.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment by way of a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. FIELDS as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. CONNALLY of Texas:

"Page 29, line 12, after the word 'service,' insert: 'Provided, That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be applied to the payment of the salary of any recruiting officer of the Navy of the United States who shall enlist recruits under 18 years of age without the written consent of their parents or guardian.'"

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the substitute is not germane. My amendment provides for men 18 to 21, and the effect is to extend the present law from 18 to 21. The gentleman's substitute only applies to boys under 18 and really does not touch the question that my amendment applies to. Under the present law enlistments are legal over 18 years of age without consent of the parents. The effect of my amendment is to require the consent of the parents to enlistment over 18 to 21. The gentleman's substitute is not germane to that question.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I will offer it as an amendment to the section and not as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LONGWORTH). That is not in order at the present stage of proceedings.

Mr. FIELDS. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will offer it as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that it is germane to the general subject and overrules the point of order.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in all sincerity, because by the adoption of it Congress can cure an evil of which we hear complaints from every quarter of the country almost every day. The recruiting officers of the Army and the Navy, as has been stated on the floor of this House, time and again have followed the practice of enlisting into the service recruits who are not of legal military age. Boys of 15, 16, and 17 years of age are enlisted into the service. Oftentimes they are induced to do so by the flowery stories of the recruiting officers of an opportunity to go round the world, and oftentimes they are advised by the recruiting officer to falsify in their application.

Not long since a boy 17 years of age in my district enlisted. His mother, who was in delicate health, appealed to me to secure his release. I talked with the boy and asked him why he enlisted and why he made a false statement in his enlistment. He said he told the recruiting officer he was not 18 years of age. The recruiting officer said, "Oh, that will be all right; just sign this paper." And so the boy said he signed it, but did not know that he was subscribing to a falsehood.

Now, I say, Mr. Chairman, if that recruiting officer had been under the penalty of losing his pay for recruiting a boy under 18 years of age he would have ascertained whether or not that boy was 18 years of age, and moreover he would not have enlisted him with the knowledge that he was under 18.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. When and how much would you deduct from the officer's pay?

Mr. FIELDS. When found guilty I would strike him from the Federal pay roll. The gentleman from Nebraska will recall that there was a few years ago a practice adopted in many of the Army camps of the country where written orders were issued prohibiting enlisted men from attending certain public functions where officers happened to be. I offered an amendment to the Army appropriation bill providing that no part of the fund herein appropriated shall be applied in payment of the salary of any officer of the Army of the United States who shall issue or cause to be issued any order, written or verbal, establishing social distinctions between the officers and men of said Army while not on military duty.

Oh, they said, it would affect the discipline, it would disorganize the Army, but the limitation was adopted, and, Mr. Chairman, they have been getting along nicely ever since. They have been attending the same church ever since without demoralizing the Army, and I imagine that they could go to heaven together without the slightest reflection on the officers. [Laughter.]

I say to you gentlemen of the House that this limitation should be adopted. I offer it as a substitute to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas because the law provides for the enlistment of boys of the age of 18.

I would prefer his amendment to my own if his was not in conflict with law—because I do not believe that the law ought to go below 21, but it does. But if my amendment is adopted it harmonizes with the law and it will stop this practice which is going on day in and day out of recruiting boys under 18 years of age who are not of military age. It will simply strike from the pay roll the recruiting officer who recruits boys under 18 years of age, and I assure you that when that limitation is put on the recruiting officers they will be able to ascertain the ages of the applicants before enlisting them into the service.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. If I understand the gentleman's amendment he keeps back the pay of the officer who enlists the boy under 18.

Mr. FIELDS. Without the written consent of the parents or guardian.

Mr. BEGG. Suppose a big, strapping, healthy-looking fellow walks into the recruiting office who is only 16 years of age and makes the false oath that he is 19 years old and the officer enlists him, what are you going to do?

Mr. FIELDS. Under this limitation the officer would require him to file a birth certificate or a sworn statement from the parent or guardian showing that he is 18 years of age. That is what I would do if I were the recruiting officer.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky. I am in hearty sympathy with the general purposes of his amendment, but I do not think the amendment goes far enough.

Mr. FIELDS. It goes as far as the law will allow.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It will not if the amendment of the gentleman from Texas is adopted. As a matter of fact, the law as it exists to-day in a measure protects the boys under 18 years of age, except as to the form of the discharge, but no protection exists as to boys between 18 and 21 years of age. I concede, as the author of the amendment concedes, that it is not drawn in the best way, if one would be permitted to draft and propose legislation just as he wanted it proposed, but it had to be drawn to fit into this bill. However, I do not believe there is a man in the House who does not know that if the amendment offered by my colleague from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is adopted, no recruiting officer will enlist any boy about whose age he is in doubt without getting the consent of the parents, or without procuring a birth certificate showing that the boy is 21 years of age. That will not lay any great burden upon the enlisting officer. It will not be much trouble for him when a boy about whose age there can be no doubt applies, to say to the boy that he must obtain a copy of his birth certificate or get the written consent of one of his parents. Here is the trouble with the situation as it exists to-day: They enlist these boys who are not 21, and in some instances under 18 years of age, and then a showing is made that the parents are dependent upon the boy, or have a claim to his services, and the boy is given an ordinary discharge, and if you can find any great legal difference between a dishonorable discharge and an ordinary discharge you will do more than I can find. They are both without honor and both call for explanation. I have had instances where boys of 16 years of age have been discharged with an ordinary or blue discharge, which for all purposes of law amounts to a dishonorable discharge, without carrying its discredit. Why not get the information beforehand on the part of the recruiting officer?

Mr. STEPHENS. Suppose the boy has no parents and can not produce a birth certificate.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Oh, there are no boys who have not either parents or guardians, who are under 21 years of age, or who can not secure a birth certificate. If there is a State in the Union that does not require the filing of a birth certificate I would like to know what State it is. Does the gentleman know of such a State?

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. I understand there are only 28 States in the Union that have provision for the registration of births. Such was the information furnished me some four years ago and was correct as of that date.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I have understood that there are a great many more than that.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, unfortunately even in those States that have a law such as is mentioned it is not always observed.

Mr. JONES of Texas. That may be true, but the amendment of my colleagues does not require the securing of a birth certificate. I state that as one way in which the officer may protect himself. Most assuredly he could require the affidavit of some disinterested person who knows how old the boy is. In the rare instances in which a boy who has no guardian or parents the recruiting officer can compel the boy to get the affidavits of two disinterested persons to the effect that he is 21 years of age, and he can get that in a very few minutes or require the boy to do it, and that is much easier than having the Government go to the expense of taking the boy away from his home and bringing him back again, and going to all the trouble incident to the final disposal of such a case.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word or two in reference to the matter brought up by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. He would have it appear here that the widowed mother of some boy was harshly treated by the Navy Department, and he paints a picture of her sufferings and being threatened and fearing some legal action would be taken upon the part of the Navy Department because of violation of contract. In all fairness I am going to read a letter which was written to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] by the Bureau of Navigation of the Navy Department, and I think when a letter is read in whole, not merely in part, it will show that the Navy Department, instead of being harsh, was extremely gentle and liberal. This is a letter written to the gentleman from Texas by the Bureau of Navigation on the 7th of July in reference to this boy referred to, the son of this widow. After reciting that the boy had gone into the Navy and had established a contract, then the letter says:

> However, I note your statement as to the boy's correct age, but regarding that I can take no action with regard to authorizing his discharge until evidence has been presented showing the correct date of birth.
> I would suggest, therefore, that you advise the mother to present a birth certificate, a certificate of baptism, or her own affidavit, setting forth the exact date of the birth of her son, and if, upon receipt of evidence, it develops that young Eddy enlisted while under 18 years of age, the bureau will promptly direct his discharge on account of under-age enlistment.

And that boy was discharged.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no; he never has been discharged. He is still in the Navy.

Mr. HICKS. That is what the Bureau of Navigation tells me. He was discharged.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no; the gentleman ought to read the subsequent letters.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I think it may help us a little bit to understand the situation if we first consider the law that is in effect at the present time. By act of Congress passed March 3, 1915, it was provided:

> That hereafter no part of any appropriation for the naval service shall be expended in recruiting seamen, ordinary seamen, or apprentice seamen unless in case of minors a certificate of birth or a verified written statement by the parents, or either of them, or in case of their death a verified written statement by the legal guardian, to be first furnished to the recruiting officer, showing the applicant to be of age required by naval regulations, shall be presented with the application for enlistment.

That is the law at the present time.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Then we ought to cut off their pay if they violate the law.

Mr. FIELDS. They are not obeying the law.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It provides that no part of any appropriation shall be used hereafter unless these regulations are complied with. And the law continues:

> And when it is afterwards found upon evidence satisfactory to the Navy Department that the recruit has sworn falsely as to his age and was under 18 years of age at the time of the enlistment, he shall upon request of either parent, or, in case of their death, by the legal guardian, be relieved from service in the Navy upon the payment of full cost of first outfit, unless in any given case the Secretary in his discretion shall relieve such recruit of such payment.

So that I think that the law as it stands——

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. In just a minute. The law as it stands now contains practically all the restrictions that various gentlemen have suggested, and this discussion will have the effect of calling the attention of the Navy Department to the whole matter, so that in the future greater care may be exercised in the enforcement of this statute in reference to recruiting.

Mr. FIELDS. I will say to the gentleman if my substitute is adopted it will most surely call the attention of the recruiting officers to the fact——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I have not had an opportunity to examine the substitute carefully, but it seems to me that it is not as comprehensive and not as likely to protect recruits as the existing law, and my own judgment is that we had better let the law stand as it is, and if corrective legislation is found necessary later let it come from the proper legislative committee.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I have had considerable experience in the way of getting boys who were under 18 years of age out of the Navy, and I want to state that there is one phase of the matter which has not been brought out by those who have participated in the debate thus far, and that is that boys frequently take the birth certificate of their older brother and they also assume the older brother's name. They present it to the naval or military officer and by means of the name and the birth certificate of their older brother they are thereby enlisted in the Army or Navy, whichever the case may be. I can not understand why the enlisting officer should be censured or deprived of his pay for his part in the transaction, and after the boy has been in the service a short time he gets tired or dissatisfied and then he discloses that he used the brother's certificate. I see nothing in the two amendments proposed that covers the proposition to change the existing law so it would cover the cases which so frequently have been brought to my attention. I live within 18 miles of Newport, which is a naval station, and there is also a naval station at Providence, 18 miles away, and there are both naval and military officers who have enlisting offices in the city of Fall River, where I have resided almost all my life. There are men enlisting all the time. The naval officer or the military officer is not to blame for enlisting those boys because they bring with them the birth certificate and assume the name of their brother, and there is no way for the naval or military officer to tell whether it is genuine or not, and because the person seeking enlistment brings a certificate of birth and age it is readily accepted as sufficient evidence to the officers, even though he assumes his brother's name.

Mr. FIELDS. If my substitute is adopted, it will doubtless cause the recruiting officer to require the applicant for enlistment to bring the written statement of his parent or guardian, which would disclose the fact that he had his brother's certificate.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I doubt it very much. I think the presentation of the certificate is sufficient, and I think it would be very unwise to adopt either of the proposed amendments. It would be far better to allow the law to remain as it now is.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, it seems that we have pretty well exhausted the matter. How much time does the gentleman from Texas want?

Mr. BLANTON. Three minutes.

Mr. WINGO. If we are going to waste more time on this business, I make the point that there is no quorum present. You were in an awful hurry yesterday when you had a serious matter, and you kept your political absentees here and you had better bring them in. I make the point of order there is no quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. I understood the gentleman from Arkansas said if we wasted any more time on this proposition he was going to make the point of order of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman made the point of order. One hundred and four gentlemen are present—a quorum.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I move that debate close on this paragraph and all amendments thereto.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I demand a division.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 67, noes 0.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that some gentlemen did not vote on either side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has just counted and found a quorum was present.

Mr. WINGO. Does the Chair say that there are 100 men in this Chamber?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair counted just a moment ago.

Mr. WINGO. Does the Chair say there are 100 men in this room?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair made no such statement. The Chair said two minutes ago there were 100.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has no right to interrogate the Chair.

Mr. WINGO. What is the gentleman going to do about it?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division; I would like to bring in the 104.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 21, noes 70.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

PROVISIONS, NAVY.

For provisions and commuted rations for the seamen and marines, which commuted rations may be paid to caterers of messes in case of death or desertion upon orders of the commanding officers, at 50 cents per diem, and midshipmen at 80 cents per diem, and commuted rations stopped on account of sick in hospital and credited at the rate of 75 cents per ration to the naval hospital fund; subsistence of men unavoidably detained or absent from vessels to which attached under orders (during which subsistence rations to be stopped on board ship and no credit for commutation therefore to be given); quarters and subsistence of men on detached duty; subsistence of officers and men of the naval auxiliary service; subsistence of members of the Naval Reserve Force during period of active service; expenses of handling provisions and for subsistence in kind at hospitals and on board ship in lieu of subsistence allowance of female nurses and Navy and Marine Corps general courts-martial prisoners undergoing imprisonment with sentences of dishonorable discharge from the service at the expiration of such confinement; in all, $16,424,000, to be available until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to commute rations for such general courts-martial prisoners in such amounts as seem to him proper, which may vary in accordance with the location of the naval prison, but which shall in no case exceed 30 cents per diem for each ration so commuted; and for the purchase of United States Army emergency rations as required.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise on the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. I just want to correct an error made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS], if the committee will indulge me a moment. I want to read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Thursday, page 490, the letter from Mrs. Selma Eddy. I read:

WILLOW CITY, TEX., September 5, 1922.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: I received your letter last night concerning the discharge of my boy, Terrel Robert Eddy. I have decided to let the matter drop, as I don't know what the boy swore, and I am afraid I might get him into trouble. He has one more year to serve in the Navy, and I think it best to leave him alone. However, I thank you very much for your trouble.

Yours very truly, MRS. SELMA EDDY.

Now, what scared the woman was the part of their letter which came from the Bureau of Navigation, which the gentleman from New York did not read, but which, from page 490, I read, as follows:

When young Eddy enlisted, December 1, 1920, he made oath that he was born August 12, 1901, from which it would appear that his enlistment was taken in good faith, and considered legal and binding in all respects under the Revised Statutes, which make the enlistment of a boy 18 years of age or over, without the consent of his parents or legal guardian, a valid contract.

So the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS], with whom I have no controversy, except I do not want to let him make statements here that are not in conformity with the facts, when he stated that this boy had been discharged and that the Bureau of Navigation had accorded everything to this woman, was in error. It was probably a mistake based upon some misinformation that he had. As a matter of fact, in the same RECORD, that of day before yesterday, on page 490, I showed that Messrs. Walters & Baker, a reputable firm of lawyers at San Saba, Tex., had proved beyond question or doubt that this woman was a destitute widow with five little children to support and that the boy, who was wrongfully taken into the Navy, was her mainstay; and yet, when promising to discharge him, the Bureau of Navigation wrote this letter asserting that the boy swore he was 18, from which she was afraid the boy would be given a dishonorable discharge or that he might be prosecuted. The gentleman from New York ought to be fair. All this happened after what occurred in the letter he read had transpired.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The woman withdrew her request that her boy be discharged, and there is nothing in the letter to show that the woman was acting through fear.

Mr. BLANTON. Did not she write "I am afraid I might get my boy into trouble"? Oh, if you send to the mother a statement like that from the Bureau of Navigation, from Admiral Washington, who never saw it, although his name was signed to it, "Your boy swore to a lie," what does the woman imagine? She imagines that her boy might be taken up before a court-martial and that he may be dishonorably discharged and punished for making a false statement.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The gentleman is drawing on his imagination. There is nothing of that kind in the letter.

Mr. BLANTON. No English language could be plainer. She said, "I do not know what my boy swore." She said, "I am afraid I may get my boy into trouble." And she waives his discharge. That comes from a poor destitute widow, the mother of five little children. Yet the gentleman takes issue and says her boy ought to be left in the Navy. He may be able to take that position before his people of South Dakota, but my constituents in Texas do not like it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

For surgeon's necessaries for vessels in commission, navy yards, naval stations, and Marine Corps; and for the civil establishment at the several naval hospitals, navy yards, naval medical supply depots, Naval Medical School and Dispensary, Washington, and Naval Academy, $1,760,000: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for clerical service in naval hospitals, dispensaries, medical supply depots, and Naval Medical School, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, shall not exceed 150,000.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may insert the dollar mark in front of the "150,000" on line 16.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that will be done.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy yard, Mare Island, Calif.: Rebuilding dikes, wharves, and quay walls, and maintenance dredging (limit of cost, $2,800,000), $1,500,000, to be available immediately.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HICKS. I want to ask the chairman, if I may, in reference to the Mare Island item, the amount provided here for dredging. I presume that is the dredging over those shoals that obstruct the free passage between San Francisco Bay and Mare Island Bay. Or is that in the harbor itself?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say to the gentleman that it is the dredging immediately in front of the yard.

Mr. HICKS. It does not include those shoals 4 or 5 miles below the island?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No.

Mr. HICKS. Does the gentleman know whether that channel that I refer to is kept open at a reasonable expense to the Government?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; it is. The Army has jurisdiction, as the gentleman knows, over the maintenance of the channel from San Francisco Bay to Mare Island. The last information we had through the Army engineer was that the depth of the channel was not sufficient and that the dredging would continue to make it 500 feet wide and perfectly ample to take care of our largest ships when the present project is completed.

Mr. HICKS. As I remember, when I was there two years ago there was a large wooden dike built just as you approach Mare Island, around inside the harbor at Mare Island; and that dike, being of wood, was becoming deteriorated. I was wondering whether this was not the appropriation for that instead of for the harbor.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The appropriation of $1,500,000 includes the repair and restoration of the piers and wharves along the water front and also the replacement of the dikes. Congress last year authorized a project there of $2,800,000. We appropriated $750,000 last year. This is one of the items that we increased above the Budget figures—providing $1,500,000 this year instead of $750,000 this year and $750,000 next year. The reason for allowing the $1,500,000 now was that the dikes are breaking down, owing to attack some two or three years ago by the teredo, which bored into the wooden piling. The giving away of the dikes will permit the silt and other deposits to fill up the basin in front of the yard and thus necessitate extensive dredging later on unless this project is hastened. We believed it to be more economical to appropriate a larger sum of money this year and push the work along and thus prevent further damage and resulting expense.

Mr. HICKS. How long will these dikes last?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The new dikes are to be made of reinforced concrete.

Mr. HICKS. Out of concrete?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, this appropriation is to repair the sea wall and dikes and not for dredging, except right in front of the yard and that made necessary in the work on the quay wall and dikes. The dredging in front of the yard will be done by a clam-shell dredger that the yard already has. These dikes and sea wall were almost destroyed by the teredo during the four years of low water that they had in California. The teredo can not live in fresh water. The water in front of Mare Island Navy Yard and down through the Pinole Shoals is fresh water, except in exceedingly low water, when there has been several dry years in succession in the mountains and valleys. If the $750,000 had been used for this purpose when I first asked for it, the work would have been completed within the $750,000; but the Bureau of Yards and Docks did not use any of the lump sum that was appropriated for yards and docks for that purpose. The result is as I anticipated, that it will cost about four times as much now as it would had the sea wall and dikes been repaired then and not allowed to go out. There will be no teredo in the Mare Island Navy Yard channel probably for the next 20 or 30 years, but in order that this condition shall not occur again in the future the Navy Department is using reinforced concrete instead of wooden piling, and I believe it will complete the work within the authorized appropriation. So far as the channel is concerned, it is under the control of the War Department. The project of the War Department is for a channel 500 feet wide and 35 feet deep at lower low water with a turning basin of 1,000 feet. The channel has been maintained by the Army Engineers at an annual cost of about $50,000. The estimate of the Army Engineers of the cost of maintaining the channel was not to exceed $100,000 per annum.

At the present time the channel is 500 feet wide, and the water is 35 feet deep at lower low water through the channel in front of Mare Island Navy Yard and the Pinole Shoals and in the turning basin. There is a tide of 7 feet there which makes it 42 feet at high tide. The channel is adequate to accommodate the largest battleship afloat of any nation or the largest merchant ship afloat of any nation, and would be maintained by the War Department for commercial purposes regardless of whether the Navy Yard were there or not. There are two railroads that have their termini at Vallejo, and the commerce of that port alone has justified, and will justify, the maintaining of the channel.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURRY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman in what way this item is objectionable to him?

Mr. CURRY. It is not objectionable to me. I am making an explanation.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURRY. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. What was the idea in allowing Mare Island Navy Yard to get into such a state of decay as to require such an appropriation as this? Have the dikes heretofore been constructed of wooden piling or something of that character?

Mr. CURRY. The dikes have always been wooden piling. The teredo never got into the Mare Island channel before. The reason it got in this time was because we had four years of drouth and the water in the channel was so low that it was salt instead of fresh. The teredo lives only in salt water.

Mr. HICKS. Bad timber from Washington. [Laughter.]

Mr. CURRY. The timber was all right, and it was from Washington.

Mr. MILLER. It was good timber then.

Mr. CURRY. The reason it has gotten into this condition is because four years ago in the lump-sum appropriation there was an item of $750,000 which was supposed to be spent at the Mare Island Navy Yard for the repair of these dikes and quay wall, but it was not so expended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. CURRY. I ask for two minutes more to answer this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURRY. I told the committee at that time that unless they made a specific appropriation, in my opinion the money would not be so used. At that time Admiral Parks, the then Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, came before the subcommittee and stated that it would be used for that purpose. It went through in a lump-sum appropriation and the Navy Department did not allocate one dollar to the Mare Island Navy Yard for this purpose. Admiral Parks stated that the reason he did not allocate any money to the Mare Island yard was because the appropriation was not large enough to do some other things that he wanted to do. Since that time I have always insisted on a specific appropriation.

Mr. MILLER. That was the explanation I expected to receive.

Mr. CHALMERS. The statement that this channel will accommodate all ships, both of the Navy and the merchant marine, is perhaps not exactly correct. I understand that the Leviathan when loaded draws 38½ feet, so that at low water in this channel the Leviathan could not go through.

Mr. CURRY. I think if the master of the Leviathan should try to take her in on low water he ought to have his epaulettes taken off, but she can easily be taken in at high tide and have 4 feet to spare under her keel. You add 7 feet tide to 35 feet at lower low water and it makes 42 feet, which gives plenty of water under the keel. The water over the Pinole Shoals and in the Mare Island Channel is deeper than on some spots on the bar at the entrance to San Francisco Bay.

Mr. MILLER. She would come naturally to the Puget Sound Navy Yard.

Mr. CURRY. Well, the Puget Sound Navy Yard is all right, and so is Mare Island, and so is the Puget Sound Representative. Any ship that can be taken to the Bremerton yard can just as easily be taken to Mare Island.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF AERONAUTICS.

AVIATION, NAVY.

For aviation, as follows: For navigational, photographic, aerological, radio, and miscellaneous equipment, including repairs thereto, for use with aircraft built or building on June 30, 1923, $275,000; for maintenance, repair, and operation of aircraft factory, helium plant, air stations, fleet activities, testing laboratories, and for overhauling of planes, $6,290,000, including $350,000 for the equipment of vessels with catapults; for continuing experiments and development work on all types of aircraft, $1,573,224; for drafting, clerical, inspection, and messenger service, $710,000; for new construction and procurement of aircraft and equipment, $5,798,950; in all, $14,647,174, and the money herein specifically appropriated for "Aviation" shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with existing laws as "Aviation" and for that purpose shall constitute one fund: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, determine, and pay out of this appropriation the amounts due on claims for damages which have occurred or may occur to private property growing out of the operations of naval aircraft, where such claim does not exceed the sum of $250: Provided further, That all claims adjusted under this authority during any fiscal year shall be reported in detail to the Congress by the Secretary of the Navy: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for maintenance of more than six heavier-than-air stations on the coasts of the continental United States: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the construction of a factory for the manufacture of airplanes.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice on page 40, lines 18 to 24, there is a provision for the settlement of claims of private property not to exceed $250. What is the argument in favor of keeping it down to $250, where by Navy plane it is $1,000?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think it is $500.

Mr. WINGO. We had the question up, and I had forgotten whether it was put at $500 or $1,000.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Five hundred dollars is the limit for damage by ships. I think the gentleman can see that in the case of ships the opportunity for damaging property would be greater than by airplanes.

Mr. WINGO. I advocated when the question was up before that we ought to have a uniform rule covering the amount that the executive department might use in the settlement of claims, so as to avoid these little, petty claims coming to Congress. Does the gentleman think it would be unwise to bring this up to the $500 or $1,000?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. We thought this had better be left as it is until the legislation to which the gentleman refers is enacted into law.

Mr. WINGO. Then that has not become law?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It has not. I will say to the gentleman that I am in hearty accord with him, but there has been as yet no action by the Senate on the bill referred to.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. On page 41 there is a provision that no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the maintenance of more than six heavier-than-air stations on the coasts of the continental United States. What stations has the department in mind in the establishment of these stations?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. This is legislation that has been carried for some time.

Mr. MILLER. That may be; but that does not answer my question.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I was proceeding to answer the gentleman's question. These stations are Cape May, Chatham, Hampton Roads, Lakehurst, San Diego, and one other that I do not just now recall.

Mr. MILLER. Then there are five stations on the Atlantic coast and one on the Pacific. Does it not occur to the gentleman there should be more than one air base on the Pacific coast?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It would seem, offhand, as though the gentleman might be quite right. The gentleman is a distinguished member of the Naval Affairs Committee——

Mr. MILLER. No; I am a member of the Military Affairs Committee. I was wondering why, when the activities are being pressed on the Pacific coast and half of the fleet is practically on the Pacific Ocean and the eyes of the world are on the Pacific coast, why the bill should not provide for more than one station on that coast.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. There was the suggestion last year that another base be established on the North Pacific in the neighborhood of Seattle. I recall that the distinguished gentleman was very much interested in an air base in the Northwest and urged with great force that one be established there.

Mr. MILLER. That is right, and that is the one we are inquiring for in an indirect application to this bill.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman understands that the Appropriations Committee has its hands tied in so far as starting new projects is concerned. He must go to the proper legislative committee.

Mr. MILLER. That is startling to me that the Appropriations Committee has its hands tied. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of any sum in this act appropriated shall be expended in the pay or allowances of any commissioned officer of the Navy detailed for duty as professor or instructor at the United States Naval Academy to perform the duties which were performed by civilian professors or instructors on January 1, 1922, whenever the number of civilian professors or instructors employed in such duties shall be less than 80: Provided, That in reducing the number of civilian professors no existing contract shall be violated: Provided further, That no civilian professor, associate or assistant professor, or instructor shall be dismissed, except for sufficient cause, without six months' notice to him that his services will be no longer needed.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman if the requirement that a candidate for appointment to the Naval Academy shall report at Annapolis for physical examination, and when he fails to pass must pay his own expenses to the academy and back home, is one of law or is a departmental regulation?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. My recollection is, although I am not entirely clear about it, that if the boy goes to Annapolis for his physical examination and fails to get into the academy his expenses must be borne by himself. The Government pays 5 cents a mile for travel to the academy, but if he fails he must pay his own expenses back.

Mr. BARBOUR. It is required that he report to the Naval Academy for physical examination?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am not quite sure that that is uniform. In certain instances a physical examination is conducted at a point near the boy's home.

Mr. BARBOUR. The instructions recently sent out to candidates appointed by myself contained the requirement that the boys report to the Naval Academy for physical examination, and if they fail to pass the examination they will be required to pay their own expenses home.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It may be that they are given a preliminary examination at a point near home, and that the final examination is at the academy.

Mr. HICKS. I think probably that is true. Here is the case that I have to deal with, and it is probably the same case that the gentleman from California might have to deal with. In my district an applicant comes to me, and I give him a letter to the admiral of the Brooklyn Navy Yard and ask the admiral to give him a physical examination. That examination is identical with the Annapolis examination, and if he passes the one in Brooklyn the chances are that he will pass the one in Annapolis.

Mr. BARBOUR. In two of these cases that I refer to they are already enlisted men in the Navy, stationed at San Francisco, and their directions are to report to the Naval Academy for physical examination.

Mr. HICKS. I think if the gentleman would ask those men to go to the navy yard in San Francisco and then ask the admiral to examine them, he would subject them to the physical examination, and if they passed that they would probably pass the examination at Annapolis.

Mr. BARBOUR. It may be that they would pass in San Francisco, then come on to Annapolis and be rejected, and it seems to me that in such case some provision should be made for paying the fare of those boys back to their homes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I think there is some virtue in what the gentleman says.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. But on whose shoulders is the obligation, the man who is going to get a free education or the Government that is going to pay for it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARBOUR. Provision for these physical examinations could be and should be made nearer the home of the candidate.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I am not debating that point. It is a question of failing to pass the examination. Why, we might have the country swamped with men who are willing to take an examination, whether they could pass it or not, in order to get a transcontinental ride.

Mr. BARBOUR. But if he takes the examination near home he is there, and does not get a long transcontinental ride if he fails.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not pose as an expert on this matter, but I know in the Army side of things a candidate for the Military Academy at West Point is advised to have himself examined at the nearest Army post, with the reasonable assurance, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] says, that if he passes in the fundamentals of that examination he will qualify in the technical and record final examination at West Point.

Mr. BARBOUR. Why should not the first examination be final?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Because, I think, every institution would prefer to pass on all finalities at its own threshold, rather than have agents in the field who might vary in their terms and forms.

Mr. BARBOUR. But if they reject a man who comes across the continent I think they should provide for his transportation home.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Oh, no; because the obligation is upon the man who gets a free thing rather than upon the person who gives it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant librarian, $2,500; cataloguer, $1,800; 2 shelf assistants, at $1,400 each; secretary of the Naval Academy, $3,000; clerks—2 at $2,100 each, 2 at $1,900 each, 2 at $1,800 each, 9 at $1,600 each, 4 at $1,400 each, 23 at $1,300 each, 7 at $1,200 each; repair man or seamstress, $1,000; surveyor, $1,700; services of choirmaster and organist at chapel, $1,700; captain of the watch, $1,600; captain of the watch, $1,500; 30 watchmen, at $1,400 each; 5 telephone switchboard operators, at $840 each; mail messenger, $1,200; in all, $134,900.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in line 19, page 42, after the figures "$1,600" and the semicolon, the word "second," which was omitted by mistake, so that it will read "second captain of the watch."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the change will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for the maintenance of Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps, $8,604,943; and the money herein specifically appropriated for the maintenance of the Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps, shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with the existing law as maintenance, Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps; and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, that finishes the bill except the item for the increase of the Navy. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LONGWORTH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13374 and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 13316) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and had agreed to the conference asked by the House and had appointed Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. SPENCER, and Mr. OVERMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE FOR MONDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1922.

The SPEAKER. The Chair earlier in the day designated the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] to preside in case the Chair was late on Monday. Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas will not be able to be here, and the Chair designates in his stead the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

CONFERENCE REPORT—DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE AND LABOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHREVE] I present a conference report upon the bill (H. R. 13316) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for printing under the rule.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, December 18, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

834. ELECTIVE FRANCHISE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BALL presented a resolution of the Kalorama Citizens' Association of Washington, D. C., which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KALORAMA CITIZENS' ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C., December 12, 1922.

CHAIRMAN OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

SIR: At the last meeting of the Kalorama Citizens' Association, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved by the Kalorama Citizens' Association in regular meeting assembled, That the so-called Poindexter bill (S. 14) providing for the election of a Delegate to the House of Representatives from the District of Columbia, in no manner meets the legitimate and just claims of the District for a voice in the affairs of the Government, and therefore should not receive the support of those who believe that the District is entitled by every consideration of equity, justice, and Americanism to share the privilege and responsibilities of complete national suffrage accorded to all other citizens of the Republic.

"Resolved further, That the association unreservedly indorses Senate Joint Resolution 133 (the so-called Jones resolution) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, under which Congress will be empowered to remove the stigma of disfranchisement from the citizens of the District and grant them the right of representation so dearly prised by every free man and woman.

"Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the chairman of the respective Committees of the District of Columbia of the two Houses of Congress and to each citizens' association with the request that such association take similar action, and further requesting the chairman of the District Committee of the Senate to have this resolution printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD."

It is respectfully urged that your committee do all that is possible to further the desires and sentiments of the members of the association as expressed in the resolution.

Respectfully,

EDW. R. WALTON, Jr., Secretary.

PATROL DRIVERS, METROPOLITAN POLICE.

Mr. BALL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 3252) to amend paragraph 8 of the act entitled "An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia," approved February 28, 1901, as amended, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 951) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 4194) granting a pension to Nellie Berry; and

A bill (S. 4195) granting a pension to Harrison Sperry; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BROOKHART:

A bill (S. 4196) defining the legal status of all children under 18 years of age in the District of Columbia; creating a parental court; and providing for a child relief allowance for the assistance of certain mothers; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. WATSON:

A bill (S. 4197) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue to certain persons and certain corporations permits to explore, or leases of, certain lands that lie south of the medial line of the main channel of Red River, in Oklahoma, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 4199) to refund to Clinton G. Edgar income tax erroneously and illegally collected; to the Committee on Claims.

WORLD WAR FOREIGN DEBT COMMISSION.

Mr. HARRIS. I introduce a bill which I ask may be read at length.

The bill (S. 4198) to increase the personnel of the Foreign Debt Commission, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first section of the act entitled "An act to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes," approved February 9, 1922, is amended to read as follows:

"That a World War foreign debt commission is hereby created consisting of eight members, one of whom shall be the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall serve as chairman, and seven of whom shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Not more than four members so appointed shall be from the same political party."

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, this measure is not offered in any partisan spirit. In fact, it is offered to prevent any partisan spirit in the solution of the great problem involved which will have to be solved ultimately by the Foreign Debt Commission and Congress. I have no criticism whatever of the splendid men who were appointed on the commission. They are among the very best men in our country. But they are all five Republicans, and I believe if both parties in Congress were represented on the commission we would get it away from partisan politics and solve the problem much better than if handled by a strictly partisan commission. My bill would increase the commission to eight members, permitting the President to appoint three Democrats, preferably Members of Congress. This would not be any expense.

The Sixty-ninth Congress and others after that may have a majority of Democrats. A Democratic President may be in office, and if the debt-funding commission is now made nonpartisan, it will prove a continuous body instead of furnishing agitation to turn out all the Republican members of the commission and substitute Democrats.

Mr. President, I introduced in the Senate the first resolution on this matter declaring it to be the sense of the Senate that no debts owed the United States by European governments should be canceled, and I still believe these countries in the course of time will be able and should pay to our country all of their indebtedness.

I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

REGENT OF THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. STANLEY. I introduce a joint resolution which is a mere matter of form—the selection of a regent for the Smithsonian Institution to fill a vacancy. I ask that it be read at length.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 258) providing for the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than Members of Congress was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, in the class other than Members of Congress, caused by the expiration of the term of Alexander Graham Bell, of Washington, District of Columbia, be filled by the appointment of Irwin B. Laughlin, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. STANLEY. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will not object, Mr. President, on the theory that it will lead to no discussion.

Mr. STANLEY. It will lead to no discussion.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that on December 16, 1922, the President approved and signed the act (S. 3195) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept completion of Carey segregation No. 11 and to issue patent therefor.

STATISTICS OF FOREIGN COMMERCE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I submit a conference report. I do not ask for its consideration but simply present it.

The report was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3295) to consolidate the work of collecting, compiling, and publishing statistics of the foreign commerce of the United States in the Department of Commerce, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, and 3, and agree to the same.

W. L. JONES,
KNUTE NELSON,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. W. FORDNEY,
W. R. GREEN,
W. C. HAWLEY,
JNO. N. GARNER,
J. W. COLLIER,
Managers on the part of the House.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4050) to provide for the purchase and sale of farm products.

Mr. RANSDELL addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for just a moment?

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate agree to vote upon the Norris motion to-morrow at 4 o'clock, with the understanding that when the Senate closes its business to-day it shall recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield for that purpose?

Mr. RANSDELL. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the proposal.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its work to-day it shall recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow, and at 4 o'clock to-morrow vote upon the motion submitted by the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4050, to provide for the purchase and sale of farm products.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. REED of Missouri. We want to know something more about it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is satisfactory to the junior Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. FLETCHER. I rose to ask if it would be satisfactory to the junior Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. So far as I am concerned, it is agreeable to me. It is not fixing a time for a vote on the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is for a vote on the motion.

Mr. NORRIS. Simply a vote on the motion to take up the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. To take up the bill the Senator from Nebraska reported?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; to take up the bill I reported.

Mr. SMITH. At what hour does the Senator propose to have the vote taken?

Mr. JONES of Washington. At 4 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request of the Senator from Washington is that when the Senate completes its business to-night it shall take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow, and that at 4 o'clock to-morrow a vote upon the pending motion shall be taken.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I shall not object to the unanimous-consent proposal offered by the Senator from Washington, but I think I ought to inform the Senate that the Committee on Banking and Currency is now holding hearings on several bills which have been introduced by Senators covering the agricultural credit situation, and we are to have hearings this afternoon at which we expect important witnesses to appear. I think it will be the desire of the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency to attend that meeting this afternoon at 2 o'clock. For that reason I hope that during the two hours which will be allotted to the consideration of the motion to-morrow the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency will have a fair portion of the time. I would like to have five or six minutes to express my views in regard to the motion of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest that if any Senator desires to talk on the motion we will have all the time between now and 4 o'clock to-morrow, as far as that is concerned. My suggestion that we take a recess from to-day until 12 o'clock to-morrow was made to accommodate the committee which is holding hearings, and also I had in mind what the Senator has said with reference to the hearings this afternoon.

Mr. McLEAN. I simply want to give notice that I should like to have 5 or 10 minutes to-morrow afternoon to make a brief statement.

Mr. JONES of Washington. All right. There will be four hours to-morrow to debate the motion.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not wish to cut anybody out who wants to make any remarks on the motion, but the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] told me that he expects to speak on the motion, and I judge from what he said that his remarks will be at some length—not a very long address, but longer than the Senator from Connecticut has intimated he wants to speak. I do not desire to have any understanding which will cut the junior Senator from Iowa out. As far as I know now the time suggested by the Senator from Washington will give ample opportunity for everyone who has signified any idea that he wants to talk to speak as long as he may wish.

Mr. SMITH. What is to hinder any Senator who desires to discuss the proposition under consideration from talking on it to-day?

Mr. NORRIS. Nothing.

Mr. SMITH. We have from now until 4 o'clock to-morrow afternoon to discuss it.

Mr. McLEAN. But the Committee on Banking and Currency will be engaged this afternoon in a very important hearing, and it will be impossible for the members of that committee to be in both places.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There will be four hours to-morrow.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from Connecticut, who is chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, a question? That committee has been holding hearings for several days, I understand, on some bill. Can the Senator tell the Senate when, in all probability, they will conclude the hearings and be able to report?

Mr. McLEAN. We expect to conclude the hearings to-morrow or Wednesday, and in all probability we shall be able to report out a bill early next week.

Mr. HARRISON. About Monday of next week, does the Senator say?

Mr. McLEAN. Early next week. I would not fix the exact day.

Mr. HARRISON. The Christmas holidays are coming on. Is it the intention of the Senator to report the bill before the Christmas holidays?

Mr. McLEAN. It is my understanding that the adjournment over the Christmas holidays will be but two days, but I may be mistaken about that.

Mr. HEFLIN. I hope the Senator is mistaken, and I think he is. I do not think there will be a quroum here during the holidays.

Mr. McLEAN. I do not know; I am not responsible for that.

Mr. SMITH. Did I understand the Senator to say that he thought by Monday or Tuesday of next week the Committee on Banking and Currency would be ready to report their bill?

Mr. McLEAN. We hope to do so.

Mr. WATSON. Monday will be Christmas. Of course, there will be no session on that day.

Mr. McLEAN. We certainly will get the bill out immediately after New Year's. If the Senate is in session, I think we will report it next week.

Mr. WATSON. My understanding is that it is the present intention to adjourn from Friday evening until Tuesday morning. In that event the committee could bring out its bill next week, according to the statement of the chairman.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HARRISON. Was the last request to agree to vote at 2 o'clock or 4 o'clock?

Mr. NORRIS. At 4 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So that there may be no misunderstanding, the Chair will state the proposed agreement again, as the Chair understood it. It is that when the session of to-day ends the Senate will take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow, and that at 4 o'clock to-morrow the Senate will proceed to vote upon the motion of the junior Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HARRISON. Reserving the right to object, can we not have it understood that the time for discussion will be divided equally between those who are for the motion and those who are opposed to the motion? Will not the Senator who made the request incorporate that?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It would be very unusual for the Senate to do that. I anticipate that everybody who will desire to talk on the motion will have full opportunity to do it beween now and 4 o'clock to-morrow. I do not know of anyone on this side who wants to speak on it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it has been suggested that at least one Senator might desire to speak at length upon the motion. I do not know what that means. It may mean one hour, it may mean four hours, under the rule of unlimited debate. It is hardly a fair proposition to say that we are going to vote on an important matter of this kind at 4 o'clock without having some kind of an understanding as to a division of time. It is not quite the right thing to be advised in advance that 1 Senator may want a considerable time and the other 95 Senators may not have any time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to say that I have no objection, personally, to providing as a part of the agreement that the time shall be divided equally between the opposition and those favoring the motion. I suppose the time would be divided and controlled by the Chair. It is such an unusual proceeding for the Senate that I do not know how it would work, but I, myself, have no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to propound this inquiry to the Senate: Inasmuch as a Senator can speak on any subject and may be speaking neither for nor against the motion, how can the Chair control the situation?

Mr. JONES of Washington. We are not going to displace the unfinished business between now and 4 o'clock to-morrow. The unfinished business will be before the Senate to be proceeded with.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from Washington yield to me to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it the intention of the Senator from Nebraska between now and 4 o'clock to-morrow to make a speech explaining this bill? I think the Senate ought to know something about the bill before we vote on taking it up, and I think we ought to have sufficient time for that purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. I presumed that Senators knew about it. I do not want to inflict a speech on the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say very frankly to the Senator that I have been busily engaged on the shipping bill, and I have not examined his bill. I would like to examine it. It seems to me that the time between now and 4 o'clock to-morrow afternoon is very short.

Mr. NORRIS. I assume it is going to be discussed by those who debate the question, and I may want to discuss it before we get through. But since there seems to be some doubt, may I ask the Senator from Washington to withdraw the request and let the debate on the shipping bill proceed?

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will do that for the present.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well; I withdraw the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request for unanimous consent is withdrawn, and the Senator from Louisiana will proceed.

Mr. RANSDELL resumed and concluded his speech, which is, entire, as follows:

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, a few days ago I gave notice that at the opening of the session to-day I would discuss the pending shipping bill, and I should like to do so at this time.

I wish to call attention to the fact that there are a great many interesting and important features in the bill in addition to the so-called aid or subsidy feature thereof. Those matters have not been emphasized very much to date, and I wish to discuss them briefly, not in detail, but to have Senators understand that entirely aside from the so-called subsidy feature it is a most excellent bill. I wish to say right here, however, that in my judgment it would not be effective and would not produce the results we seek to obtain unless one of two things happens: First, to make effective the discriminating duty provisions now on the statute books and held in abeyance because of our treaty relations with many of the nations of the world, to make effective the provisions referred to in section 34 of the shipping act of 1920, which section instructed and authorized the President of the United States to denounce the treaties with foreign countries which contravened the discriminating duty provision of the law—place that provision in effect, I say, and give us the benefit of discriminating duties which built up our merchant marine in the early days, for, Senators, it is a fact known to all who have studied the matter that one of the very first acts of Congress in 1789 was to provide discriminating duties in favor of goods brought to this country in American bottoms.

It seems, sir, impossible to put into effect that discriminating duty provision, and in lieu thereof the only thing that so far has been presented to the Congress which in my humble opinion promises any real measure of relief is the direct aid, the so-called subsidy. I do not intend to discuss that in detail. It has already been gone into by others.

But, Mr. President, there are other features of the bill to which I wish to call special attention. One, sir, is the revolving loan fund of $125,000,000, provided for the purpose of assisting shipbuilders and ship companies to construct the many vessels which are needed to constitute a well-balanced fleet. Mr. President and Senators, we have not a well-balanced merchant marine at this time. We have a very large tonnage, but most of our ships are not of the combined freight and passenger type—fast vessels, vessels that can build up our trade with foreign lands not only by carrying freight to and from those lands but by carrying passengers as well; vessels which in time of war may, if necessary, be converted into auxiliary cruisers. We are very short of vessels of that character. I will go into that more in detail later, but let me say at this moment that in the merchant marine of Great Britain there are 194 magnificent steel vessels of the combined freight and passenger type which have a speed of from 15 to 27 knots an hour. Every one of those vessels, sirs, is a potential auxiliary cruiser, and we have only 50 such vessels. We need a great many more such vessels in order to build up our merchant marine and to strengthen our Navy, and aid for ships of this character is provided in the revolving loan fund of $125,000,000 which is proposed in the pending bill.

This fund is in no sense a subsidy. Not more than two-thirds of the cost of a ship or two-thirds of the cost of reconstructing and refurnishing such ship is ever to be loaned under this fund. The Government is to be secured by a first mortgage on the ship and the interest rate, it is provided, shall not be less than 4½ per cent. It is a strict business proposition. In the same sense that we established the Federal Reserve Board for the business interests of this country, for the benefit of bankers, merchants, and others, and that we established the Federal land bank in order to aid agriculture by lending money to our farmers, so this revolving loan fund would provide money for shipbuilders. It is a most important feature of the bill, and I hope those who oppose the measure so strenuously will bear that feature in mind.

Another feature of the bill which is also very important is that which provides for the creation of a national insurance fund for the purpose of insuring the cargo and the vessel which is engaged in foreign trade. It is very important, Senators, that the great business of insuring our foreign commerce be placed in American insurance companies. The premiums paid out for that purpose aggregate very large sums. We have only a limited number of marine insurance companies in America, while there are a great many such companies abroad, and a large percentage of the marine insurance of this country has in the past been written by those foreign insurance companies. The insurance provisions of the pending bill seek to do this: If foreign insurance companies offer a lesser premium rate than that which is offered by American insurance companies, then the insurance loan fund will allow that insurance to be placed by American companies at the rate offered by the foreign companies, so the insured will receive the benefit of the lowest possible rate and the money will remain in this country.

Another good provision of the bill, sirs, is that which provides for the payment of extra compensation to vessels for carrying the mail. Not only will the fast vessels which carry the mails receive the compensation or subsidy, as do other vessels, but they will be paid for service rendered a fair amount for carrying the mails. That will be of immense benefit in a business way.

Another feature of the bill to which I call attention is that which provides that one-half of the immigrants coming into this country must hereafter, if this bill shall pass, come in American ships. In the past most of the immigrants who have come—and the passage moneys which have been paid by them have aggregated very large sums—have come in foreign ships. This bill provides that not less than 50 per cent of the immigrants must come in American bottoms.

There is another provision of the bill to the effect that in the case of any company or any individual owning and operating ships and desiring to receive the benefit of the direct aid provided in the pending bill, not less than one-half of the tonnage of such individual company must be registered under the American flag; in other words, if an individual owns a few American ships and a great many foreign ships he can not receive the benefit of the direct aid provided in this bill, as not less than 50 per cent of all his tonnage must be registered under the American flag in order to receive such benefit.

MAINTENANCE OF TRADE ROUTES ESSENTIAL.

Then there is a provision which is of especial benefit to the people of the West, of the South, of the Gulf, and of the South Atlantic. That provision is that service must be maintained on routes which have been established by the Shipping Board. There have been a great many routes established from the South Atlantic, the Gulf coast, and the Pacific coast cities. The pending bill provides that the routes and service thereon must be maintained for a reasonable time in order to ascertain whether or not such service may be profitable and businesslike. It is most important for the small communities whose people in the past have not been sea minded to have lines of ships running from their localities to the ports of the world.

Then there is in the bill a provision requiring that in time of war all vessels of every kind and sort which receive any direct aid under this bill shall, on request of the President, be requisitioned for the public service. It is needless for me to comment on the value of that provision.

The bill further provides that the Army and Navy transport service between this country and our island possessions, or between this country and foreign lands, shall, as soon as practicable, be carried on in the vessels which receive the direct aid; that we shall do away with the Army transport service and the Navy transport service, and also do away with a number of ships which really would be useless if we had a well-developed merchant marine, and hereafter conduct that service in our regular merchant vessels.

Next, there is a provision to which I call the especial attention of all friends of inland waterways. That provision is clear, plain, and unmistakable, and I shall read it into the RECORD. For many years, Senators, we have been trying to encourage and develop water transportation. I see some good friends of water transportation on the floor, and I hope they will do me the honor of listening to this plain and simple provision:

It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to promote, encourage, and develop water transportation service and facilities in connection with the commerce of the United States, and to foster and preserve in full vigor both rail and water transportation, and the board—

That is, the Shipping Board—and the commission—

The Interstate Commerce Commission, previously referred to—are hereby severally authorized, empowered, and directed to cooperate to that end.

Then the provision proceeds to make it perfectly clear, emphatic, and positive, so that no one can misunderstand, that it is the intention of Congress to build up and maintain a fair spirit of cooperation and coordination of service between the railroads and the waterways of this country; not alone, sir, the ocean waterways, but the interior, the internal waterways. This is the most comprehensive declaration on that subject ever suggested to Congress, and if the bill containing this provision shall become a law the internal waterways of this land, which in the past, to a very great extent, have been strangled by the unfair efforts of railroads, will come into their own again. The provision will not be enforced in any way, nor is such a thing contemplated, to injure the railroads. We simply ask fair play and justice for the waterways and fair play and justice for the railways.

The last provision to which I call attention is one making it imperative that hereafter when officials of this Government, those who receive their pay from the public, take an ocean voyage on official business they must travel in ships flying the American flag. Mr. President and Senators, it has been almost a public scandal in the past, at least until very recently, that public officials, public servants, in traveling abroad have not sought American ships, but have used foreign ships. Of course, no one seeks impossibilities. This measure does not provide the impossible; but it says that if it be reasonably possible for these officials to use American ships they must do so, under penalty of having the charges for their trip disallowed and not paid by the Government. There is the same provision in regard to freights across the water. Those freights must also be carried in American ships.

Senators, I have gone into this matter very briefly, with the hope that those of you who are inclined to oppose this bill will study its features other than the subsidy feature, for I say to you that there are many wise provisions in the measure, many provisions which will tend to assist to build up and to strengthen the American merchant marine, entirely outside of the subsidy feature. Again I wish to emphasize, however, in that connection that unless we get either this subsidy feature, this direct aid, or by some hook or crook put into operation the discriminating features of existing law we need not adopt any provision whatever in this bill.

ONLY ALTERNATIVE IS GOVERNMENT OPERATION.

Mr. President, the only substitute offered so far by the opponents of this measure is a continuation of Government ownership. One of the Senators, in what appears to be rather an indefinite manner, seems to suggest some kind of a body or some individual to carry on Government operation of our present great fleet for an indefinite period of time—perhaps until times get better. He intimates that later on we can sell these ships for a very much larger sum than they would sell for now, and in the meantime he suggests having them operated by somebody. The indication is that he wants to get rid of the present Shipping Board.

Another Senator suggests that we turn over the fleet to the Department of Commerce. Now, Senators, it seems to me that after the experience of this country with the Government operation of railroads, and the experience of this country so far with the Government operation of ships, we should go very slowly to establish any new governmental agency to handle such a large enterprise as our merchant marine.

We did not make a success, Senators, when we operated the railroads. We have not made a success of our operation of the merchant marine so far. I am not criticizing individuals. I have nothing but kind thoughts about the men who undertook the mighty task of operating the railroads of this country in war times. I have nothing but kind thoughts and kind words about the men who, at the request of the former President of the United States, Mr. Wilson, and our present President, Mr. Harding, have given the very best there was in them toward handling our great fleets. My statement is this: These gentlemen undertook impossible tasks. They did the best they could with them. They did not succeed, through no fault of their own; and it is our duty, sirs, to place the ships in private hands, just as we placed the railroads back in private hands some time ago.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield for a question.

Mr. HEFLIN. I call to the Senator's attention the testimony of Mr. Lasker, who said that he had not sought business with these ships; that they only took that which was offered. I submit to the Senator and to the Senate that it does not seem that a very great effort has been made to get business and to make this business a success.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I do not intend to be diverted from the line of my remarks. I do not recall the testimony to which the Senator refers. If he says it, I have not a bit of doubt that Mr. Lasker made some such statement; but, Mr. President and Senators, I have been in close contact with the Shipping Board since we passed the first shipping law in 1916.

I have known personally every one of the men connected with it, the various members of it, and I know that they have done the very best they could to carry on the mercantile business of this country. I have talked to them, conversed with them many times, and heard them testify before committees. I am not familiar with all the details of this particular statement; but, just as the devil can quote the Scriptures for his own purposes, I have no doubt that the able Senator from Alabama can pick out some isolated statement of Mr. Lasker's testimony or Mr. Anybody Else's testimony and let it fit in with the views he advocates.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. I decline to be interrupted further. I have a long speech, and I want to go on with it. I will ask the Senator to speak in his own time.

Mr. HEFLIN. I simply wish to suggest to the Senator that the devil is for the subsidy.

Mr. RANSDELL. He may be, but he has some pretty good company. I think there are some angels for the subsidy, too, and I have no doubt that there are some devils who are opposed to it as well as perhaps some angels, including my very genial and handsome friend from Alabama.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator includes him among the angels?

Mr. RANSDELL. I include him among the angels. I accept the suggestion. I know he is an angel; at least, he looks like one.

So far the operation of our ships has been a losing business. Do you not think, Senators, we have had about as good men handling the Shipping Board up to date as we could get? Do you believe, sirs, any one of you, that if you were President you could pick out a much better board than we have now, or better than the boards have been in the past? I doubt it very much. Let us see who are the members of the present board.

First there is Mr. Albert Lasker, of Chicago, one of the most successful business men in America, a man who by his own private efforts accumulated a large fortune, who stands very high among those who know him.

Then there is Mr. T. V. O'Connor, of Buffalo, who was familiar with shipping for many years in the stevedoring business, and for years president of the International Longshoremen's Association, a man who enjoys the respect and esteem of all his associates, and who was for years connected with business closely allied to shipping.

Then there is our own George E. Chamberlain. I do not need to say anything about ex-Senator Chamberlain in this body. He was a successful lawyer for years, governor of his State for seven years, a Member of this body for 12 years, a real, live, vigorous, forceful statesman, and a man whom everybody in the Senate honored and loved.

The next is Mr. Meyer Lissner, of Los Angeles, a man very active in civic affairs of that city for many years, president of the first Board of Public Utilities of Los Angeles, from 1909 to 1911, and largely responsible, sir, for the creation of the great port of Los Angeles, one of the most important on the Pacific coast. Everything connected with his life indicates that he is a sound business man of high character.

Then comes Admiral William S. Benson, for 47 years active in the service of the Navy, Chief of Naval Operations of this country during the greatest war that ever afflicted mankind, and the Navy was a great success during that war under the direction and management of William S. Benson. This gentleman has filled very many important positions, and has received many national and international honors. His whole life has been spent upon the sea in connection with seafaring matters, and he is certainly a wise and able man.

The next member is Mr. Frederick I. Thompson, one of the leading newspaper men of the South, chief owner of the Mobile Register, the Mobile News-Item, and the Birmingham Age-Herald, a man who by his keen mind and his hard and intelligent work has built himself up to affluence, and a very strong and forceful man.

The next is Mr. Edward C. Plummer, who is and has been for over 30 years a lecturer on shipping matters. In early life he worked in shipyards. He has been a close student of this subject for a long time. It has been my pleasure to know Mr. Plummer for over 20 years, and I regard him as one of the sanest, wisest men of my acquaintance, and familiar with every matter connected with shipping because of close study.

These are the seven men who now control the policies of the Shipping Board. Does anyone conceive that we can get a better body of men? How could you pick them out? Mr. President and Senators, the fault is not with the membership of the board. The fault lies deeper than that. The fault is because we are not a seafaring people. We have not been in the game long enough to learn it. The seafaring countries of the Old World, like England, have been studying ships for centuries. They have been following the seafaring life for centuries. They understand every feature and every phase of it. They know how to practice all the economies connected with it. The sea is their life's blood. England is a "tight little island." She gets her wealth from foreign lands. She can not reach those foreign lands except in ships, and her people understand the game. In the early days of our Republic, the days of the old sailing vessels, the clipper ships, we had a hardy race of seamen on the New England coast.

WHY OUR SHIPPING DECLINED.

They made a big success of shipping in those days, and but for the intervention of steam in the early fifties we would still have a successful race of hardy seamen along the Atlantic coast. But the intervention of steam and the Civil War of the sixties, which drove so many of our ships from the seas, which practically destroyed the American merchant marine, put us out of the business. Then for years and years there were so many attractive enterprises in various parts of the country in which men could make more money in other kinds of business than they could hope to make on the sea that the enterprise and skill of America were engaged in those kinds of business.

Mr. President, you can change the organization if you wish, put the ships under the Department of Commerce if you wish, but I predict that you will not meet with greater success with some new Shipping Board or with some new department than we have met with in the past.

Let me remind Senators of this fact, that the Shipping Board is a creature of the Congress, responsible directly to Congress, making its reports to Congress. Do Senators wish to do away with our creature, with this body which reports to us, and place the duty of handling our ships in some bureau of the Department of Commerce, where the shipping of the country will be only a side issue? That would not do, Senators. If you intend to create some new agency, certainly you had better create a department of shipping and place at its head a secretary whose sole duty it will be to look after ships. Do not attach this great task to some one of the present departments of the Government.

A great deal has been said about the Government operation of ships in Canada and in Australia and by the Panama Railroad Steamship Co. Let me give some actual facts and figures in regard to that. One of the first acts of the British Government after the armistice was to do away with the State control of shipping. That the step was well taken in the interest of British commerce is shown by the fact that to-day the British merchant marine has regained practically all the ground it lost during the war. The ships of Great Britain again carry more than one-half of the trade of the entire world.

Think of that! This wise old ancestor of ours, as soon as the war was over, placed all her ships in private hands, and those she owned herself she sold immediately to her private citizens and private shipping companies. She is not operating any ships. She has not tried to play that game of Government operation as we have tried. She was too smart for it. She never did anything wiser in her life. But her colonial possessions were not so wise. One of the British possessions essayed the experiment of a State-run merchant marine, and in the first blush of postwar trade, when all the ships of the world fell far short of carrying the cargo offering, and when ocean freights were $30 to $40 per ton and even higher, Government operation was carried on at a profit, which inspired its advocates to declare that it would be criminal for the Government to sell its ships.

We heard the same kind of talk here. Even so great a ship authority as Lord Pirie, probably the world's leading shipbuilder, declared that if all the nations built vessels at top speed for five years after the armistice they could not produce too much tonnage for the world's trading needs. The five-year period is not yet up, but the acid test of time has worked, and already world shipbuilding is back below the pre-war level.

At this point Mr. RANSDELL yielded to Mr. JONES of Washington to submit a request for unanimous consent.

CANADA'S EXPERIMENT COSTLY.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I was proceeding to speak about the government operation of ships in Canada, and will continue.

Canada has tried government operation under the most favorable auspices, and still found it a failure. With government-owned railways to act as solicitors and collectors of freight for government-owned vessels she has, nevertheless, been unable to make both ends meet. She had also the very marked advantage of entering upon government operation of shipping with a trained staff of transportation experts serving its railways, which embrace more than a third of all the railroad mileage of Canada. For 1919 the Dominion Government was able to show an operating profit on voyages of $1,056,000 and for 1920 of $1,293,000; but in neither case was depreciation or interest figured. And in 1921 the result of voyage operations was a loss of $2,210,000, or almost as much as the profits for the two preceding years. But this is only part of the story. Interest for 1921 amounted to $3,352,000, depreciation to $2,374,000, and other charges to $111,000, so that the actual loss on the year was $8,047,000. But this is not the full picture of losses, for there was carried forward from the years when a profit was claimed on operations $1,745,000 interest due and unpaid to the Government and a deficit of $328,000 on insurance. Subtracting from this the surplus of $1,004,000 claimed to be available at the end of 1920, the result of Canada's first three years of government operation was a loss of more than $9,100,000.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. What rates were made on the government-owned vessels as compared with the rates made by vessels when there was no government interference?

Mr. RANSDELL. I can not give the Senator the details about that. In 1919, when the rates were very high, $30 to $40 per ton as general commercial rates throughout the world, the government-owned vessels in Canada made a large profit; but when the general commercial rate fell in 1921 there was a big loss. I am unable to give the Senator the detailed figures in response to his question. I assume, however, that the government-owned vessels of Canada had to compete with the ordinary privately owned vessels of England, Norway, and other countries.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator has given us some figures. I am not trying to get into a dispute with him, but the figures are manifestly incomplete. The Senator told us that the vessels were operated at a loss. That loss might all be chargeable to the fact that they charged too low a rate and that the rate which they did charge was less than the ordinary rate which would have obtained if there had been no government-owned vessels in competition.

Mr. RANSDELL. I was speaking about the Government-owned vessels of Canada which made a loss, and not the privately owned vessels.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I understand; but to illustrate—I am taking the Senator's time in order that we may have enlightenment.

Mr. RANSDELL. That is perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Let us suppose that the vessels could have been operated—I shall use a purely illustrative figure—at $1 a ton and a profit made, and that the commercial rate would ordinarily be that dollar a ton; but those vessels, when they started to operate, proceeded to operate at 80 cents a ton, either because they wanted to give a cheap rate or because the private competitors had seen fit to cut the rate to put the Government vessels out of business. Accordingly they operated at 80 cents and showed a loss. Now the mere fact that the vessels showed a loss, as has been stated, does not mean anything as a conclusive proposition until we know what their rates were and what the rates would have been if they had not been in competition. I wish the Senator would investigate the question and give us some light on that matter.

Mr. RANSDELL. I shall be glad to look further into the question. If there has been anything in the nature of a rate war in Canada over the foreign trade or overseas trade, I have not heard of it. The figures I am giving are taken from official Canadian sources and there is nothing said, so far as I understand, about any rate war which would present the question suggested by the Senator from Missouri. He very correctly said that had there been a rate war and the Canadian vessels in order to meet it had put their rates down below a proper commercial figure, then the fact that they had lost money would mean nothing. I agree to the correctness of the Senator's conclusion in that particular. But I am quite sure there has been nothing of that kind. However, in order to make assurance doubly sure I shall go into it more fully and present the figures later.

Canada is still holding the bag, but she is finding that it is getting too heavy for her. The last official report shows the Government fleet to be composed of 65 vessels, aggregating 380,000 dead-weight tons, which cost over $78,000,000, and which is carried on the books at $69,000,000, and this is conceded to be far above its value. The report further states that the average cost of the fleet was $191 per ton, and that the ships could be replaced at an average of $75 per ton. It is recommended on behalf of the Government that all of the ships under 4,000 tons and five larger ones be disposed of. It is also recommended that for five years the interest due the Government shall be payable only if earned, after allowing for depreciation. The outlook for the Government's pocketbook, therefore, can not be said to be a bright one.

The net results of Canada's first three years of Government operation of shipping therefore may be said to be: 1. A recorded loss of over $9,000,000. 2. The possession of a fleet carried on the books at more than double its replacement value. 3. A Government admission of failure in the plan to sell more than half the total number of ships. 4. A dubious outlook for returns to the Government in the request that interest payments be made the last charge to be satisfied. 5. Even at 5 per cent per annum depreciation charges will amount to more than $3,000,000, or more than the fleet earned in 1919 and 1920 combined, when freights were high. It does not require any stretch of the imagination, therefore, to write down Canada's experiment in Government operation of shipping as a failure.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am merely seeking light.

Mr. RANSDELL. I shall give it to the Senator if I am able to do so.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The question is, why was it a failure? That question has not been answered by the Senator in the figures which he has given. Was it a failure because of mismanagement? Was it a failure because the rates had been made too low? Was it a failure because there was a general slump in the shipping business and privately owned vessels were possibly being run at a loss? In other words—I make the point merely for the purpose of emphasizing the necessity for further light—to say that a business has been a failure does not get us anywhere. Thousands of private enterprises have failed, yet that does not argue that another private concern might not succeed in the same business.

The Senator has stated one thing that I think tends to throw a little light on the matter, that the vessels cost undoubtedly more than twice their replacement value. If any private concern had bought vessels and paid two or three times their value and then had to pay interest upon them, that private concern would probably be verging upon bankruptcy. It would certainly be doing so unless it was able to make very large profits. Why did the Government of Canada pay those excessive prices? Did it get the vessels during the war at war prices, and, if so, would it not be necessarily obliged as a business proposition to charge off the excess value and stand the loss as a war loss and start the enterprise at a fair valuation of the vessels? I think the Senator, with all his industry, and he has a good deal of it—his power of analysis is superb—ought to carry the figures further and show us why the Government can not successfully operate the vessels.

FAILURE ALMOST UNIVERSAL.

Mr. RANSDELL. If I could answer that question, I think I could answer a question that the American people would like very much to have answered. I would be able to tell the Senator why we failed so miserably in the Government operation of our railroads. I would be able to answer the Senator why Government operation throughout the world, so far as my information goes, has been a failure, except perhaps in the Empire of Germany, where, if I am correctly informed, the German railways and the German water-borne commerce were operated at a profit under the autocratic rule of the German Government.

For some cause or other, however, it has not been profitable in other lands. The only really successful Government enterprise in America about which I know anything is the operation of the mails; but the mail service has been a complete monopoly from the birth of our Republic to the present time.

Mr. FLETCHER rose.

Mr. RANSDELL. I decline to yield for the moment. Let me answer the question of the Senator from Missouri, and then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Florida.

The Government operation of the mails has been a success. Nobody other than the Government has gone or can go into the business. The Government does make a little money out of the operation of the mails now; but I do not know of any other business that has been persistently a success when governmentally owned and operated for any length of time, and I do not believe, as a general proposition, that the Government can in a big way make a success of the operation of business.

Now, answering further the question of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] about conditions in Canada, I desire to say that I do not know why the Canadians paid $191 per ton for their ships. I presume that it was for exactly the same reason that we paid $200-plus a ton for our ships. Those ships were constructed in war times, and it was a war expenditure. I think, sir, that it would be wise to charge off that present high cost and to start afresh. However, let me say that the figures that I have presented here indicate that there was no interest whatever charged in making up this loss, and the Government of Canada is advising that there be no interest charged. They wish to see if they can not earn something exclusive of interest. They sustained an actual loss in 1921 of $2,120,000, exclusive of any interest.

Now, to say that private shipping companies were making some money in 1921——

Mr. REED rose.

Mr. RANSDELL. Let me answer, and then I will again yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I wished to say a word in relation to what the Senator from Louisiana has just stated.

Mr. RANSDELL. I have figures here to show that private English companies have been making very considerable profits recently. I have figures from the New York Journal of Commerce of October 31 last indicating that the Peninsula & Oriental Steamship Line has made large profits. I will not take the time to read them, but I will insert them in connection with my remarks.

The figures referred to are as follows:

The Peninsula & Oriental Steam Navigation Co. accounts for the year ended September 30, 1922, show that, after providing for depreciation, also the expense and discount on the issue of £3,500,000 debenture stock amounting to £191,858, there is a credit balance on the year's accounts (including £100,305 brought forward) of £744,901. The following table shows the figures for the previous two years:

	Year ended—
	Sept., 1920.	Sept., 1921.
Net profit	£667,377	£571,465
Brought forward	£115,230	£111,939
Preferred dividend	£152,000	£152,000
Deferred dividend	£508,668	£431,100
Rate of dividend	15%	12%
Carried forward	£111,939	£100,305

Mr. RANSDELL. I have also from the New York Journal of Commerce, of October 31 last, figures to show that the Prince Line, which is another big English line, has made large profits. At the same time I have been unable to find any figures or any reports to the effect that privately owned American lines have been making any profit during the last year. If such lines have made any profits, I can not find any record of them.

I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD at this point the clipping from the Journal of Commerce showing the profits of the Prince Line.

There being no objection, the clipping was ordered printed in the RECORD as follows:

The accounts of the Prince Line (Ltd.) for the year ended June last show a net profit, after making an allowance for depreciation and taxation, of £159,686, while £138,892 was brought forward. The directors announce a final dividend of 7½ per cent, making 10 per cent, free of tax, for the year, leaving to carry forward a sum of £178,299. For the previous 12 months the net profit amounted to £286,815, making an available balance, with £72,376 brought forward, of £359,191. A total dividend of 10 per cent was paid, free of tax, while £100,000 was placed to general and insurance reserve.

Mr. RANSDELL. Why the privately owned American lines have made no profits and the Government-owned Canadian lines have made no profits I am unable to say. I learn from the reports of the Shipping Board that our Government-owned vessels have not, as a whole, been making any profits. I understand that one of the lines has made some profits. That line was referred to by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and was the line which is operated by Mr. Rossbottom. That is an exceptionally advantageously located line, and it has made some profits; but, as a whole, the operation by the Shipping Board of our vessels has been very unprofitable for the last 12 months, just as the Canadian operation of their vessels has been unprofitable. At the same time, however, certain English privately owned lines have been profitable.

It would take a much wiser man than myself, or even, I think, than the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], to tell us why private individuals can make money and the Government can not make money in carrying on the same kind of business. I assume that one reason why the railroads of this country did not make a success when operated by one man was that the business was too big for one man to make a success of it. I have known farmers who could live on farms of a few hundred acres and make a success, but when the same farmers tried to operate farms miles away they failed.

I speak feelingly about the matter, for when I tried to farm 1,200 miles from base I did not make a success. So when a man sitting here in Washington attempts to operate 234,000 miles of railroad, running throughout this great country of ours, it is too much; it is too big an undertaking; he can not make a success of it; and when the Shipping Board attempts to operate a great fleet of 7,000,000 tons on all the seas of all the world, involving in many instances the necessity of making decisions instanter, I do not believe it can conduct the operation successfully. I think the private initiative, the personal interest, the energy, the enthusiasm, the skill, and the determination which a private individual will put into his own business is lacking in any kind of Government operation. I assume that it was for just such reasons that the people of Canada were unable to make a success of the shipping business. I now yield to the Senator from Florida, and then I will yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I merely wished to make a statement in the nature of a correction. I understood that the Senator from Louisiana carried the interest charges in his total.

Mr. RANSDELL. No; I will read the figures again.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well, if he did not; then he need not read the figures again.

Mr. RANSDELL. I did not.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish merely to follow up the thought of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] by suggesting that it will be well, of course, to understand upon what plan or basis the Canadian Government is operating its ships. If the Canadian Government is operating them as we are under the MO-4 contract, where the Government stands all the losses and the private operators, the managing agents, get their commissions on the business no matter what it may amount to, the Canadian Government may expect to lose money. The result depends a good deal on the plan of operation so far as the force and effect to be given to the shipping activities of Canada is concerned. I do not know whether or not the Senator from Louisiana has examined the question sufficiently to determine just how and upon what basis or plan Canada is attempting to operate her lines.

With reference to governmental success elsewhere, I call the Senator's attention to the fact that Australia has built a splendid fleet of Commonwealth ships and has operated them successfully; that the figures show a profit last year of something like $33,000,000 on the operation of that fleet; and that the Government operation there is direct government operation and not a mere pretense, not a mere figure of speech.

We, however, in the United States have had no Government operation except of the Panama Steamship Co. and the United States Line. Recently both of those lines have been operated successfully, but the operation of our other ships has not been Government operation, as I understand it, and as I think the Senator from Louisiana will agree with me when he analyzes it, for it is on its face conducted on the basis of managing agents, the Government standing all the losses and those operating the ships having no responsibility except to earn their commissions and to get what are called "husbanding fees" in addition to their commissions.

With reference to private operation, I shall not attempt to go into that, but if the Senator will allow me just a moment more, I happen to have here a clipping taken from a newspaper issued on December 12, which states:

BOSTON, December 12.—Directors of the United Fruit Co. at a meeting here to-day voted an extra dividend of 2 per cent in cash with the regular quarterly dividend of the same amount.

The profits may have been derived in part in connection with their other business in selling their products, but they have a splendid fleet, and I have no doubt a good deal of their profit comes from the operation of the fleet.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will assume——

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator from Louisiana will allow me, I will merely say that later on I shall put into the RECORD a fuller statement regarding the experience of Australia in the operation of ships.

Mr. RANSDELL. I shall be very glad to have the Senator do so, for I am going to say something about Australia.

Referring first to the last portion of the Senator's statement in regard to the United Fruit Co., let me say that is a wonderful enterprise. I have had the pleasure of traveling on some of the ships of the United Fruit Co., and they are very fine ships; but those ships are merely an incident to their commercial enterprise. The United Fruit Co. are great fruit merchants; they have enormous plantations, principally banana plantations, in many tropical countries. I had the pleasure of traveling on one occasion for 12 continuous miles through a banana plantation; my journey was on a railroad on both sides of which stretched this great plantation owned by the United Fruit Co. It was at Port Limon, in Costa Rica. That company is absolutely a commercial enterprise, and their ships merely an incident. It might just as well be stated that the Standard Oil Co., through their tankers and their great lines of ships for handling their own business, conducts a successful shipping business because they declare large dividends. The Standard Oil Co., as we all know, is a tremendous commercial enterprise, and the same statement is true of the United Fruit Co.

Now, to come back——

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. I will ask the Senator to pardon me. I must answer the Senator from Florida first, and then I will be glad to yield to the Senator from Missouri. Coming back to what the Senator from Florida said about the situation in Canada, I do not know whether the Canadians have been operating under the MO-4 contracts or what kind of contracts they have employed. The Canadians, however, are proverbially a wise people; I often wish the people of the United States would emulate the people of Canada in a great many things, for if there be a wiser people on this globe than those of Canada I wish somebody would point them out. When they have been so wise in connection with all their transportation problems, including their transcontinental railroad problems, their problems of good roads, and everything connected with business, to say that they have done something very unwise in connection with their shipping is beyond me. I can not answer the Senator's question, but I will try to accommodate him by securing more data on the subject and go into it more elaborately at some later time.

In regard to the Panama Steamship Co., I wish to give the Senator some actual figures as to that company and also with reference to the shipping venture of Australia. The Senator tells us about the wonderful success in the shipping business which Australia made last year. I do not agree with the Senator at all as to that. It is said that doctors disagree; but my figures are altogether different from those of the Senator. Here they are; I will state them to the Senate.

WHAT IT COSTS AUSTRALIA.

Australia has been cited as a golden example of the benefits of Government operation of shipping. Official figures in proof of this are difficult to obtain. No annual reports covering the period of operation have been issued, with the exception of one for the year ending June 30, 1922. The position taken by the Australian Government has been that making public the results of the operation of its fleet would aid competing lines. On November 16, 1921, however, Premier Hughes, in an address to the Australian Parliament, stated that the net earnings of the Government's ships for the five years ended June 30, 1921, had been £7,144,000, or about $30,000,000. I assume that is the $30,000,000 to which the Senator from Florida has referred. No allowance whatever—I will ask Senators to listen to this—had been made for depreciation or interest on the Government's investment, which amounted on the first cost of the ships—listen to these figures, Senators—£10,706,000, representing 51 vessels, aggregating 257,000 gross tons. No account is taken of the loss on the fleet of wooden steamers ordered by Australia, which amounted to £2,323,000. No mention is made of the fact that the earnings of the fleets were invested in building passenger ships after the armistice.

In other words, the profit from Government operation was turned, not into the Treasury but into new tonnage, and that tonnage is now being operated at a loss.

Because of the great curtailment of independent Australian shipping services during the war the opportunities for a Government-operated fleet were then exceptional, and with ocean freights at high levels large profits were made; but with the application of interest and depreciation charges the paper profits for this period would be converted to a loss. It is also interesting to note that more than a third of the Australian fleet is composed of ex-enemy ships, and that 18 of these, aggregating 83,000 gross tons, were acquired at a first cost of only £909,000 and that their net earnings were £4,056,000.

But only recently the Australian Government issued the first of its yearly reports on the operation of its State fleet. This shows that with war and partly post-war freights a thing of the past, the Government can not make the income from voyages exceed the voyage expenses. For the fiscal year 1922 it is stated operating expenses were £2,722,000 and operating receipts £2,718,000, and on top of this capital expenditures are given as £3,811,000. The voyage losses were not large, it is true, but they are likely to represent only an entering wedge of loss, while the capital expenditures for this one year were more than half the profits—in which no allowance is made for depreciation and loss—of all the previous years combined.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. Let me finish my statement and then I will yield.

That further losses may be expected is not an unreasonable prediction, especially in view of the statement made to the Australian Parliament by Mr. Hughes, in which he read a cablegram from private English shipping interests urging that either the Australian Government buy the ships of competing British lines or sell the Government ships to the competing companies in order to eliminate the present ruinous competition. Mr. Hughes claimed to see in this, however, an additional tribute to Government operation, on the ground that if the ships were worth purchasing by the independent lines they were worth keeping by the Government. He seems to have overlooked the point, however, that Government operation has resulted in losses to both State and private shipping, and that the Government losses must come out of the pockets of the taxpayers; but these phases of the question are realized in Australia, and it is now a vital political issue whether the ships shall be kept by the Government or sold.

Here, then, are two instances of the workings of Government operation in shipping—Great Britain, the sea-wise mother, casting the yoke of State control off at the first opportunity, while her young offsprings, Canada and Australia, continue to stagger under it. Need it be asked: Which course should we follow?

I now yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was just going to ask the Senator if he would be good enough to state what his authority is—whether this comes from some statement that has been furnished him in an authoritative way, or from an article written by some one on the subject?

Mr. RANSDELL. From Commerce Reports, published by the Department of Commerce.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have been examining some literature on the subject, and I may have found the same source of authority; I do not know; but that is the reason why I was interested.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. RANSDELL. I shall be delighted to yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no information on the subject, and I am asking for information; but it seemed to me that there was one thing in that statement which was not quite fair. The percentage of loss, I think, was based on the cost of the vessels. Then, later on, part of the cost of the vessels was given at a very low figure, because they were enemy vessels that had been captured in the war. To be absolutely fair, it seems to me, the statement ought to give the facts as to the construction of the balance of that Australian fleet. Were those ships built in time of war? If so, it would appear to me to be manifestly unfair to reckon the percentage on their cost. I should like to inquire if the Senator knows whether or not those ships were built during the war at war prices?

Mr. RANSDELL. I think, from the best information I have, that a good many of them were built during the time of the war and perhaps at war prices.

Mr. NORRIS. If that be true, the figures ought to be changed.

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish, however, to make this point: Just as our own ships were built in time of war and at war prices and have been operated since, and we have lost money on them, so I am trying to show by these figures that the Australians have lost money, exclusive of any question of interest on the cost of the vessels; and my figures bear out that fact, as I construe them.

Mr. NORRIS. As I got the figures, the percentages were based on the cost of the various vessels. If that cost was a war cost, it is not a fair basis, it seems to me, on which to reckon the percentage of loss.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am putting the figures in the RECORD just as I read them. The Senator may draw a different conclusion from them if he chooses.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield to the Senator from Florida with pleasure.

Mr. FLETCHER. Premier Hughes has stood for government ownership and operation of ships in Australia; and whereas there has been opposition, and, as the Senator has said, the question was a matter of issue in the recent election, he will note that according to the dispatches from London dated December 16, Premier Hughes has been reelected premier by a considerable majority, and his policies have been thereby indorsed by the Australians.

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not deny the correctness of that; but the facts and figures which I have read show that the operation of vessels in Australia has not been a success recently, and they show that there is a great deal of unrest there—not enough so far to oust Mr. Hughes from office, but certainly the enterprise has not been the kind of a success that the friends of Government operation can point to with pride and say to us, "Go thou and do likewise"; and yet that is what they are trying to do. They are trying to point to this so-called Australian success and this so-called Canadian success and ask us to go and do likewise.

PANAMA RAILROAD STEAMSHIP CO. SHOWS A DEFICIT.

In regard to the Panama Railroad Steamship Co., I have a statement about that that I wish to put in, in further answer to the Senator from Florida.

Another example of Government operation in shipping is furnished by the annual report of the Panama Railroad Steamship Co. This is the line to which reference was made in the minority report of the Commerce Committee as an example of how ships could be operated profitably under the American flag. The distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] referred briefly to this matter in his speech a few days ago, but I should like to add some additional details, which I think should be spread upon the record.

Instead of a profit, this company reports that for the fiscal year ended June 30 last there was a net deficit of $587,322.45. The previous year the report showed a loss for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, of $700,810.22.

For the past fiscal year the report shows that $358,420.44 was charged off to depreciation and general and extraordinary repairs. No allowance was necessary for interest.

The following comparison for 1922 and 1921 was submitted:

	1922	1921
Gross revenue	$2,862,898	$5,136,445
Gross expenses	3,450,231	5,837,257
Deficit	587,332	700,810

Vessels in operation during the year were decreased from 12 to 5 on account of the depression. The report points out that part of the loss was due to the fact that Government freight and passengers were carried below the commercial tariff. If these had been booked at ordinary commercial rates, the loss during the year would have been $125,000.

A heavy deficit also was reported for the account of the railroad company. The combined loss for the railroad and steamship lines for the year was $1,297,634, as compared with $617,528 for the preceding 12 months. The report says:

The total operating revenues of the company's steamship line were $2,723,985.58, a decrease of $2,268,765.54, as compared with the 12 months ending June 30, 1921; operating expenses for the same period were $3,443,490.39, as against $5,850,407.22 for the preceding year, a decrease of $2,406,916.83. The net operating deficit resulting therefrom decreased $138,151.29, as compared with loss for prior year. Passenger traffic shows a decrease in revenue of $115,591.71. Revenue from the transportation of mails and treasure decreased $75,442.01 and $20,099.83, respectively.

Of the total tonnage transported in the 12 months ending June 30, 1922, 197,099 tons were carried by the company's steamers and 55,767 by chartered steamers. In the previous fiscal period the former carried 314,877 tons and the latter 100,282.

The operations of the Panama Railroad Steamship Line during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, although more favorable than for the preceding year, resulted in a deficit of $587,382.45, after charging to operating expenses $358,429.44 account of depreciation and general and extraordinary repairs. The primary cause for loss was the continued world-wide depression in business, with its consequent heavy decrease in tonnage transported; the marked lowering of rates of freight, owing to the severe competition of direct lines operating between South Pacific and east coast Colombian ports and New York; the unsettled exchange situation, which, with the curtailment of credits previously granted by American merchants to South American merchants, compelled the latter to buy and sell in Europe instead of as formerly buying and selling in the United States; and the continued high cost of foodstuffs, stores, and material.

So it seems to me, Mr. President, that the three instances cited by the opposition—Canada, Australia, and the Panama Railroad Steamship Co.—when examined into carefully, fall to the ground, and show that so far from Government ownership being a success it is a failure.

FOREIGNERS OPPOSE OUR SHIP BILL.

Mr. President, I next come to a phase of the subject which I discussed some time ago—foreign opposition to this bill. I hope Senators will listen carefully to what I have to say on this subject, because there is, or at least there was, a great deal of foreign opposition. I spoke at length before you on this topic on July 20 last. I laid before you opinions voiced by the press of Great Britain, views of British shipping and commercial leaders, members of Parliament and other individuals, and quotations from official reports of the British Government. There were objections and remonstrances, threats, veiled and unveiled, and even intimations of war upon us if we took steps to protect our place upon the seas. The question squarely put up to the people of the United States was whether we should choose our own sea policy or allow Britain to dictate it for us. We, who carry perhaps a tenth of the world's trade—and I doubt if it is that much—were accused by a nation whose ships transport more than a half of all sea commerce of seeking a monopoly on the seas.

It is not my purpose to lay before you again all the record of the bitterness of foreign opposition to legislation to aid our merchant marine to a point where we would carry not even a fair share of the world's trade but at least a fair share of our own. I do want, however, to recall to your attention a few expressions that I quoted then, and to supplement them with some recent developments.

It is said that British capital controls the policy of many great American journals. Is it possible that there is any connection between the opposition of foreigners and that of our home people? I do not make this charge, sir; but, recalling the extraordinary Tory sentiment during the Revolutionary War and the extreme partiality of a large percentage of our people to Great Britain during all our history, I wonder if some of our good people are not insensibly influenced that way? Shall we regard international unions as the true spokesmen? The real Americans, sir, who work on American ships, favor this bill, and they have gone on record to that effect. Here are some of the organizations that are in favor of the pending shipping bill:

The Neptune Association of Licensed Masters and Pilots, 6,000 strong; United Associations of Masters, Mates, and Pilots, 8,000 strong; United Radio Telegraphers, 7,500 strong; United Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association, No. 80, 3,500 strong; Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association, several thousand; Fidelity Marine Association, restricted to captains and first mates, several thousand; National Board of Steam Navigation; American Society of Marine Engineers; Licensed Tug Men's Association; International Longshoremen's Association; and others I have not before me at this time.

It is interesting to note that all international interests, whether of labor or commerce or defense, are arrayed against the pending bill. International money, which is in control of Wall Street, opposes anything that will affect the prosperity of the European interests with which it is connected and from which it draws its profits. The profits of an American merchant marine will come to America, and those profits should approximate $500,000,000 every year.

The boldness of the British press in discussing the American shipping bill is unexampled. I quoted to the Senate last July an article from the Liverpool Courier entitled "Westminster watchdogs awaken," in which it was declared there was a pro-British party in the United States. Think of that, Senators, a great pro-British journal declaring that there is a pro-British party in the United States, under the caption "Westminster watchdogs awaken." I appeal to my brethren of America to awaken when such charge as that is made. The writer then urged that encouragement be given this pro-British party, and said:

There are in the States two sections very well defined, the pro and the anti British. The division runs athwart even the strong line of cleavage separating free traders from protectionists. This means that some pro-British protectionists, while wishing nothing but well to Great Britain, are compelled by party attachment to back the present bill. On the other hand, there are conscientious free traders who would be against its passing but for the fact that their anti-British bias is stronger than their adherence to an economic theory.

Not content with this, the Courier's writer continued:

The general attitude of Great Britain, both officially and in her trading units, must be such that the pro-British party in the States is encouraged, and the anti-British party made aware that the subsidy is not the concern of Americans only.

I ask those Senators who oppose this subsidy to listen to me while I repeat what the great British paper said:

The general attitude of Great Britain, both officially and in her trading units, must be such that the pro-British party in the States is encouraged and the anti-British party made aware that the subsidy is not the concern of Americans only.

They did not propose to let us run our own affairs. They were going to dictate to America what it should do in regard to this subsidy.

This writer continues:

There should be no empty threats of retaliation, either from Westminster or from the constituencies. There should be no waving of the Big British Stick—

He capitalizes "Big British Stick"—

There should be instead the actuality.

Not wave the stick at us, but hit us with the stick; not a waving, but a striking. He adds:

It is, of course, perfectly open to any Britisher legitimately to regard the subsidizing bill as treachery to his country.

(The italics in this quotation are mine.)

Great Britain, out of pure sentiment toward America, has agreed to alterations of her naval power standard.

Great Britain, out of genuine love for America, agreed to the 5-5-3 naval reduction treaty! Did anyone ever hear such a remarkable statement? Out of genuine love and sentiment to us Great Britain consents to the reduction of her navy.

She has consented to the supersession of the Anglo-Japanese alliance by a pact more favorable to the United States; she has allowed the trans-Atlantic consideration to affect her handling of the Irish situation.

I never imagined that before, but if anything on earth has finally induced her to be kindly to the Irish, I am glad of it.

"And in return what has America done?" the writer asks, and his answer is, "Worse than nothing." We not only abstain from assisting Great Britain in her efforts to reestablish European social life, he says, but he adds that we actively menace her by proposing a breach of commercial morality.

The United States has the audacity to propose a breach of commercial morality by introducing this shipping bill and trying to secure its passage. That is a breach of commercial morality!

There are three things that the British must do, the writer says, and he enumerates them thus:

1. Diplomatic suasion must be brought to bear upon Washington.
2. Capital and labor must combine, in the most actual sense, to produce and to transport at the cheapest rate.
3. America must be left under no misapprehension as to the solidity of the Empire as one vast commercial unit, in the face of the sustained aggression which the subsidizing bill foreshadows.

Those are strong words, Senators. I hope that every Senator in this body who contemplates voting against this bill will read and consider them. His way of having "pressure brought to bear upon Washington" was to have members of Parliament "insist that the British Government do its duty." Is it the duty of Parliament, or the British Government, to instruct the American Congress about the legislation it shall pass? I do not think so, and feel sure there is no man in this Chamber who does think so.

The Liverpool Courier is acknowledgedly an authority on things maritime, so its comment on June 9 last urging retaliation when our shipping bill passes is of both value and interest to us in considering the bill. I quote verbatim:

It is quite untrue historically that subsidies necessarily fail.
The Japanese merchant service, which so lately as 1890 had only 171,000 tons of shipping, has risen to its present figure of 3,254,000 tons largely through State aid and encouragement at British expense.
The German merchant service was built up from small beginnings by subsidies, preferential railway rates, and pressure on emigrant traffic to 5,500,000 tons before the war.

SAYS SUBSIDIES AIDED RIVALS.

Mr. President and Senators, here is this great English newspaper, which is an authority on things maritime, admitting that subsidies do build up in a wonderful manner, and have built up in a wonderful way, the commercial marines of Japan and Germany. It says so in the plainest language. If subsidies have built up the German merchant marine and the Japanese merchant marine, why will they not build up an American merchant marine?

And while we are still on the subject of subsidies another British shipping journal of prominence, the Liverpool Journal of Commerce, reprints a dispatch to the Deutsche Bergwerks Zeitung from its Hamburg correspondent, in which it is stated:

In secret the British Government certainly is already granting large subsidies to many shipping companies.

Of course, I can not prove that, but here is a great British paper reproducing a telegram from a German paper saying that in secret the British Government is already granting large subsidies to many shipping concerns.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. RANSDELL. I would be glad to yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If governments are granting subsidies to privately owned shipping concerns, it must be because without the subsidy they could not operate at a profit. If that is true, what is to become of the argument that we must turn our vessels over to a private concern because the Government has not been able to make a profit? It seems to me the two cases stand on the same bottom. Neither of them is running at a profit. I am following the line of the argument, not stating a fact.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will try to elucidate that point for the Senator. I am not contending that these governments have always given or always will give subsidies, but I do contend, and history confirms the statement, that Japan when a very weak power commercially, when it had, according to this paper, only 171,000 tons, inaugurated a policy of very large government aid, and as a result of that it built up a very strong merchant marine. I do not understand that Japan is giving very much aid now, though she is proposing the identical loan proposition we are proposing here. She is proposing, and I believe is going to carry out, a loan of 250,000,000 yen to assist in building ships, reconditioning ships, and things of that kind. The yen, I believe, is equivalent to half a dollar in our money, so that would be $125,000,000.

I contend that Germany, when a weak nation on the sea, did establish a subsidy policy, for years maintained that subsidy policy, and as the result of that policy she became very strong on the seas.

Great Britain gave a great deal of aid to her shipping in the early days and she became so strong on the seas that she does not need to help all of her ships now, but she does very largely help her ships by naval subventions and mail pay. I have the figures here to show that Great Britain now aids her ships to the extent of about $9,000,000 per year, not all of them, as we are proposing to do, but certain classes of her ships.

My contention, sir, is that if we pass the pending bill and get our ships on a permanent basis, make the American people ship minded, train them to go down to the sea in ships, make them turn their investments to the shipping business for a period of 10 years, as proposed in the bill, then we can carry on the business in all probability without further Government aid.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Will the Senator pardon just a further word? I am unable to discuss the question because of the condition of my throat.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator's argument this morning was that the vessels must be turned over by the Government because they were being operated at a loss and that all Government operations were a failure, because Canada's government-owned vessels lost some money last year and the conclusion from that loss was that they must be turned over to private ownership, where they could be made profitable.

Now, the Senator has said, in substance, that private ownership has also been a failure except when the Government makes up the loss by a subvention. If that be true, then the argument against Government ownership fails, because we might as well lose the money directly on ships that we own as to pay out a subsidy on ships that we do not own. At least that part of the argument answers itself.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, if the Senator can get any consolation out of his argument I leave it to him. I can not follow him in that conclusion and shall, therefore, proceed with what I was saying.

Quite the bitterest of the comments against the shipping bill appeared in Fairplay, an English shipping weekly, that since has changed its tone materially. "Lookout Man," as he signed himself, entitled his article "Fights with the raw 'uns," meaning of course, a bare-knuckle battle, and went on:

Fights with the raw 'uns are barred in this country for moral reasons; they tended, I believe, to brutalize the onlookers; or, perhaps, they gave them a shorter run for their money than they seem to enjoy to-day, when a 20-round affair has even been known to last for six rounds, not seconds, though I fancy that the record has been almost reached. When, however, we are battling for existence, or at least for our purse, down the other fellow's yard, the gentler teachings of civilization and lecture-room logic have to go away and hide themselves. And that, I am pretty sure, is what would happen were the two great Anglo-Saxon races to find themselves at commercial death grips on the waters.

If that is not a threat, and a very serious one, I do not understand the English language. That the British realized their press comments in opposition to the American shipping bill were going too far is revealed here and there in their leading papers. For instance, the London Times of June 23 last, said:

American memories go back 12 years to the discovery by Congress that the German shipping companies then maintained a lobby in Washington for the purpose of thwarting any attempt to give legislative aid to American shipping.
And then follows what, in the correspondent's own words, may be called "passages discreetly worded," thus:
Congress and the country generally are perhaps inclined to be hypersensitive on the subject of foreign propaganda just now, and any interests who might think it desirable to follow the German example will unquestionably be defeating the object they seek to attain.

Another great British paper, the London Post, words its warning to us more adroitly when it says:

Mr. Harding's views, however, are not entirely agreed in by his party. Many Republicans believe that the proposed legislation is dangerous and will be bound to create friction with England and other maritime nations, and will not be productive of the results Mr. Harding anticipates. That the bill will be harmful to British interests is admitted.

And the British Government itself, in an official document discussing the postwar shipping situation, decides bluntly against "flag discrimination" because, it adds:

We have only to examine the nature of our carrying trade to see the undesirability of adopting any such policy.

I want to pause just a moment to point out the significance of the wording of that last sentence. Note that nothing is said about equal opportunity for the ships of all nations. The question is considered not on the basis of the world's carrying trade but on the basis of the carrying trade of Great Britain. A cold, clear-cut business proposition. And then follows the admission of this British Government committee that the ships of Great Britain carry more of the world's trade—not merely British trade, mark you—than the ships of all the other maritime nations of the world rolled together. And this is the country that charges us with seeking a monopoly of the seas.

This very report carries the matter even further in its conclusions when it says:

Our conclusion then is, and must be, that the only policy which can meet the position is one which, instead of giving preference at home, will secure the grant of national treatment to British shipping in the fullest sense abroad. Action should be directed toward maintaining this treatment where it is already given and toward securing it where it has hitherto been withheld. So far as maritime policy is concerned, this is the most effective support that His Majesty's Government can give to British shipping during the difficult period of reconstruction.

ATTITUDE MUCH CHANGED LATELY.

It is only fair to state that the truculent attitude of the British press is not nearly as pronounced now as it was six months ago. We can only conjecture the cause of this, but we can rest assured that it in no wise signifies a change of the British heart toward our plans for establishing a merchant marine. Perhaps some light is cast upon the situation by a cable dispatch from Washington to the London Post, "from our own correspondent," which appeared in that paper on July 24, last, just subsequent to my address on the British opposition to the shipping bill.

Referring to the Senate address, the London paper says that it "merits the attention of English readers, and shows the mischief done by injudicious utterances, printed or spoken."

Discussing the declaration from English sources that there is a "pro-British party" in Congress, the London Post correspondent says that it is absurd to discuss it, because there is no such thing; but, he adds, "if there was such a party, the least said about it the better."

It is unnecessary—

He continues—

to go into the Liverpool paper's article further, but Mr. RANSDELL was warranted in saying that it was offensive and opposed to the friendly spirit which should exist between the two countries.

And in closing, the correspondent states:

That the subsidy bill, if it should ever become law, will be harmful to British interests is, of course, well known on both sides of the Atlantic. Mr. RANSDELL quoted one of my dispatches, in which those words were used, but that is not the moral to be drawn from his speech. The moral to be driven home—

Senators will note that "home" in this case means Britain—is the absurdity and harm done by talking about "a pro-British party," which puts a dangerous weapon in the hands of men who will not scruple to use it.

Apparently Britain has taken the moral to heart, and its foot is on the soft pedal, for, as I have indicated, the tone of the British press is now in marked contrast to what it was a few months ago.

In fact, we find one British publication, the shipping weekly, Fairplay, in August last, in commenting on the address in the Senate, trying to make out a case to the effect that the British—instead of showing open hostility to the subsidy bill, know no more about it than they do of the fourth dimension and care less.

This is the paper which a few weeks ago was jumping on us and jumping hard.

Presumably because we have shipping in our bones—

This paper adds—

shipping questions are of as little concern to the average Englishman as the Tower of London to a city man. But though the thing is not impossible, it would take something very serious indeed to rouse public opinion to such an extent as to make it react on Parliament and compel our legislators to do anything to help the British mercantile marine.

The paper then goes on, and note the echo, albeit a faint one, of its "fights with the raw 'uns,'" when it approaches its climax:

Therefore, as most of us are rather anxious that our merchant fleet should never be handicapped by a subsidy, or even by such other retaliatory measures as unfair competition might render necessary, it is greatly to be hoped that nothing will be said or done in the United States capable of being employed as a frenzied electioneering cry on this side. We are a peculiar people, but, though we are willing to grasp either Excalibur or the sword of Don Quixote, we are an intensely businesslike one, too, as witness the fact that it is eight years ago that we went to war simply because we were under contract to do so.

THREATENED BY ENTIRE EMPIRE.

But we are threatened not only with Great Britain's big stick, but with the big stick of all the forces of British imperialism as well. Note how unmistakably the note of anti-American aggression is struck in the latest annual report of the Chamber of Shipping of the United Kingdom. Therein it is asserted that it is unreasonable for any country to expect to receive continued free navigation and equal trading rights within the British Empire if it adopts legislative measures hurtful to the empire's shipping. It must be recognized, it is further asserted, that in handling these questions other countries are dealing not with the United Kingdom, but with the British Empire. The obvious necessity for a great mercantile marine to that empire, it is added, need not be stressed, and it is declared that there have been recent indications that the British Government has definitely adopted an imperial attitude toward shipping questions as, for instance, in the discussions at recent imperial conferences and by the appointment of the imperial shipping committee.

To those who say that subsidies will be of no aid in the development of our merchant marine, I would point to the reference in this report of the leading British shipping body to measures that will be hurtful to the British mercantile marine. When they say "hurtful," is it to be doubted that they mean measures that would enable the shipping of other nations to gain a fair share of the worlds' carrying trade, which is now more than half British dominated, with the ships of Britain alone carrying more than the vessels of a dozen or 15 other maritime nations combined, including ourselves? Need it be doubted that Britain is opposed to anything that would cut into her huge and wholly disproportionate share of that commerce? She carries more of our own trade than we do ourselves, and she is perfectly content to have us continue under conditions that will assure her of continuing to do as she is now doing. And with the British taking the stand they do, can we doubt that the measures we propose to take will be effective?

Mr. President, I wish to give here a concrete instance of British discrimination against the United States. In this connection I call attention to a statement by Harvey S. Firestone, president of the Firestone Tire and Rubber Co., at the annual meeting of that organization at Akron, Ohio, on December 15, only a few days ago. Mr. Firestone declared that unless action taken by England and certain colonial governments relative to the production and exportation of crude rubber is rescinded or modified in a drastic manner, the effect will be far-reaching. He added that the British policy had already caused an increase of 100 per cent. "This present advance," he said, "represents an increased cost to the United States of over $100,000,000 on the estimated consumption for 1923, and this must be passed on to the tire user."

Mr. President, I am sorry there are none of our farmer brethren present to listen to me just now. I would like them to see what the British discrimination is doing to the farmer, because he uses more than half of the rubber, I imagine, which goes into automobile tires.

TIRE USERS TO PAY THE BILL.

In this connection, I should like to have inserted in the RECORD, without reading, an excerpt from a newspaper giving exactly what Mr. Firestone said.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

CHARGES BRITISH CUT UNITED STATES RUBBER SUPPLY—COST INCREASE OF 100 PER CENT WILL BE PASSED TO CONSUMER.

AKRON, OHIO, December 15 (by the Associated Press).—Harvey S. Firestone, president of the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., in an address here to-day at the annual stockholders' meeting, declared that "unless action taken by England and certain colonial governments" relative to the production and exportation of crude rubber "is rescinded or modified in a drastic manner" the effect will be "far-reaching."

Mr. Firestone declared that "the limiting of production and exportation already has caused an increase of 100 per cent in the cost of the crude product since announcement of the new program was made in October."

"This present advance represents an increased cost to the United States of over $100,000,000 on the estimated consumption for 1923," he continued.

"This must be passed on to the tire user. This is the time for the United States to pass such legislation as will encourage American capital to develop rubber plantations in the Philippine Islands, where the soil and climatic conditions are equal to any rubber-producing belt, and to negotiate with the South American republics to develop production in their rubber regions.

"Rubber is growing each year to be more important to the economics of commerce and transportation and great opportunities are before us to make the Philippines one of our most valuable possessions and to have a secure supply of this important product."

Mr. RANSDELL. Now, here is an example of British discrimination that reaches even into the American farm, for the American farmer is vitally interested in the tire question and he will pay a large proportion of that additional $100,000,000 next year. The increase that he and other automobile users will pay will not benefit American industry, but will go abroad to pay the British interests double what they have been getting for the same amount of material. This one instance of British discrimination will give a free and equal opportunity to all Americans to turn over to Britain in one year an amount equal to all the proposed subsidies for shipping for years to come.

In this connection, Mr. President, I ask to insert in the RECORD, as part of my remarks without reading, a clipping from a New York newspaper, quoting from Mr. Winthrop L. Marvin, vice president and general manager of the American Steamship Owners' Association, one of the best-known shipping men in America, who denounces the British mail ban against United States ships and says that the discrimination has extended over many years and more than counteracts the efforts which are made here to favor American vessels.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clipping referred to by the Senator from Louisiana will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

MARVIN DENOUNCES BRITISH MAIL BAN AGAINST UNITED STATES SHIPS—SAYS DISCRIMINATION EXTENDS OVER MANY YEARS AND SURPASSES EFFORTS MADE HERE TO FAVOR AMERICAN VESSELS.

The British Government's refusal, reported from London, to send Christmas mail by the United States liner George Washington, holding it for the slower British ship Caronia, which sails a day later, was denounced yesterday by Winthrop L. Marvin, vice president of the American Steamship Owners' Association, as an unjustified discrimination against American steamers.

"The United States has been paying of late years five or six million dollars annually for the conveyance of its ocean mails," said Mr. Marvin. "It pays American ships a higher rate than foreign ships, but it gives about half of its total mail pay to foreign shipowners. The British Government, on the contrary, pays not a penny to foreign and particularly to American ships if it can be prevented.

"This boycott of the American steamer George Washington by the British post office is nothing new. It is in exact accord with the proscriptive policy pursued for many years by the British authorities. When the long famous American Line of the International Mercantile Marine Co. was established in 1895 and thereafter, with the 20-knot flyers, New York, Paris, St. Louis, and St. Paul, it provided the swiftest weekly mail service across the north Atlantic. These American steamers were operated with the utmost regularity throughout the year. Only two British steamers were then faster than these four American steamers; yet the British Government would allow to the American line only letters specially addressed and insisted on sending the bulk of the western mail by the slower Cunard and other British steamers. It often happened then that goods consigned to New York merchants by the fast American ships reached piers here two or three days before the documents sent by the slower British steamers. New York business men protested again and again in vain against this excessive favoritism to slow British ships by the British Government.

"In 1905 Great Britain paid only $10,511 in mail money to the four fast American liners, though the American Government in that year paid $313,000 to British steamers on the same route."

NEWCASTLE INCIDENT AN EXAMPLE.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, there is fresh in the minds of all of us the so-called Newcastle incident, which might well be classed as British discrimination against American shipping. Our consul and vice consul in that British seaport were accused of being too active in getting business for our ships. The British Government saw fit to think their activities transcended the bounds of diplomatic privilege. Our State Department, after investigation, thought otherwise; but under the customs governing diplomatic intercourse, the British Government canceled the exequatur of our representatives and perforce there was nothing to do but transfer them to other posts. Our consulate in Newcastle was closed, and I believe it has not yet been reopened, although representations have come from London that, perhaps, the British Government should not have acted as they did. Newcastle itself is feeling the effect of this action of His Majesty's officials, and has petitioned for a reopening of the American consulate there.

We all remember the Egyptian cotton case, which constitutes another example of how British commercial and shipping influence militates against the entrance of any foreign ship in its chosen, select trade. As at Newcastle, the British decided it was better to let us carry in our own ships some of the cotton from Egypt that we need; but it took considerable diplomatic persuasion to make them see this.

The barring of American tankers from using the Suez Canal was another instance of British influence working against our ships, but happily that matter was settled without recourse to any diplomatic measures. Our own American Bureau of Shipping had an able representative in Europe at the time, and his call at the London office of the Suez Canal Co. was productive of the essential modification of the new rules that had barred tankers classified by that society.

FOREIGN SHIP SUBSIDIES.

Mr. President, I now wish to give some figures as to the amount which is paid by foreign nations for ship subsidies.

When we consider the general subject of foreign ship subsidies, there must be taken into consideration not only the direct payments of Government money to shipping lines but several other important aids as well. It has been asserted that all aid to shipping by foreign nations totaled only $17,000,000. Mail subventions, of course, are the most easily traced of all ship aids granted by our maritime rivals. The annual governmental budgets probably are the fairest way of estimating just how much these direct foreign aids amount to, and I would offer for the Senate's perusal a table, with certain explanatory notes, of the several amounts annually authorized to be spent or being spent as aid to shipping.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the table will be printed in the RECORD.

The table referred to is as follows:

Annual amount of foreign-ship aids.

Nation.	Character.	Amount.
Great Britain	Packet service	$3,018,178
	Naval reserves	2,439,417
	Merchant ships, etc.	845,750
Canada	Mail pay	1,100,775
Australia	do	846,365
South Africa	do	767,790
France	Navigation bounty	216,000
	Mail subventions	4,708,655
	Fisheries	182,448
Norway	Subsidies	2,760,000
Denmark	Mail pay	229,256
Sweden	do	21,000
Italy	Mail and navigation	14,100,000
Japan	do	4,833,411
Brazil	do	2,956,160
Spain	Mail and subsidies	3,300,214
Total		42,265,220

Mr. RANSDELL. Great Britain naturally, because of its commanding position in ocean carrying, is the one nation to which we should look closely. Picking apart the direct aid of $6,243,345, we find that the mother country pays $3,018,178 for "foreign and colonial packet services." All that goes in British ships, as I have pointed out elsewhere. The next largest item is $2,439,417 for "naval reserves," a direct subvention to merchant ships and merchant officers to enable the nation to command services of ships and men immediately in time of war. The balance is made up of appropriations for "royal service of merchant cruisers" and for merchant ships direct; that is direct from the British exchequer itself.

When we delve into the direct aids given by the colonies, the sums for merchant ships from the public funds grow rapidly. There is Canada, for instance, that in mail pay alone, as was shown by a detailed table on page 523 of the RECORD by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], paid $1,050,800 in 1921–22 and is paying $1,100,775 in 1922–23. Much comment has been made about our own mail pay bills of about $5,000,000, and yet Canada, with about one-twentieth of our population and with actual resources infinitesimal as compared with ours, can afford to pay more than one-fifth that sum.

Taking the much-disputed Australian figures, we can safely extract without fear of comment the $846,365 which she pays to ships for mail carrying, including the Fiji Islands service. Add to this the $767,790 paid by South Africa and we have from Great Britain itself and only three of its many colonies a grand total of almost $9,000,000—to be exact, $8,958,275.

That aid is of substantial benefit to British shipping without doubt, but Great Britain did much more indirectly for her marine workers when immediately after the war she lifted the ban of State control. That angle of the shipping situation is so important to merchant marine development that its value can not be estimated. It is best reflected in the comparative figures of idle tonnage, to which I refer elsewhere. Would to heaven, Mr. President, we had had the wisdom to follow the example of Great Britain and have made some disposition immediately after the war of our ships, thereby placing them in private hands.

Continuing our analysis of other foreign aids we find France increasing its mail subsidies for Far East service from 20,000,000 francs in 1922 to 45,000,000 francs for 1923. With 16,000,000 francs allotted to lines running to Portugal, Brazil, Argentina, and Uruguay; 6,398,000 francs for trans-Atlantic and 2,500,000 additional for New York runs, we find France paying 70,438,000 francs in 1923 for mail service alone. Even at the depreciated value of the franc this grand total almost equals our mail pay bill, yet France has less than half our population. Adding to the French mail pay the actual appropriated navigation and fisheries bounties, we find France directly aiding its shipping to the extent of $5,107,104; and this in the face of a financial crisis that is the comment of all the thinking world to-day.

Norway, in proportion to its size one of the most important ocean carrying nations in the world, is so impressed with the importance of maintaining its ships on the seas that this coming year it is granting direct aid of $2,760,000, an amount per capita that is staggering and which makes our own plea for $30,000,000 for American ships fade into insignificance.

Before leaving this subject of direct aid, I will say that the value of national cooperation in business is wonderfully exemplified by little Denmark, as much a shipping country as a farming and dairy country. It was on Friday last only that I saw it stated in a shipping journal that Denmark's merchant fleet was 100 per cent active. Thus Denmark is the only nation in the world with all of its ships busy. There is much food for thought in that brief statement; but the answer lies in the intense nationalism that makes all her people only too eager to help one another and which leads her farmers to insist that Danish ships carry Danish products wherever possible.

We must not forget, too, that Japan is preparing, if she has not already done so, to grant a construction loan fund of 250,000,000 yen to her merchant-ship builders, to be spent for fast liners only—the very type of vessel most needed as naval auxiliaries. By a strange chance—I will not say design—this amount equals the $125,000,000 we wish to have in our own construction loan fund for practically the same purposes—the building in American yards of the very types of vessels now lacking in our national merchant fleet.

COMPARATIVE COST OF OPERATION HERE AND ABROAD.

Mr. President, I now wish briefly to discuss the comparative cost of operation of ships here and abroad. Much has been said and written about the difference in operating costs of American ships and those of our maritime rivals. Wage scales on our ships in foreign trades easily average 30 per cent above the scales paid by our closest rival—Great Britain. They average so far above the others—the Scandinavian, Dutch, Japanese, and German—that the difference is not worth discussing here in detail.

These facts were just as glaring before the World War as they are to-day. They operated effectively then to prevent our entrance into our own foreign carrying trade to such an extent that in 1913 less than 10 per cent of our commerce was carried in our own ships. On its face, that might seem a shameful thing for any nation with such wonderful access to the sea as we have. In extenuation of that helpless maritime condition we can only say that our men who did go to sea were better paid, better fed, better housed, and better safeguarded than the seafarers of any other maritime nation.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. RANSDELL. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Louisiana has just pointed out the large increase in the cost of operating ships in Great Britain over what it is in other countries. If that be so, then how is British shipping able to compete with the shipping of other countries?

Mr. RANSDELL. I said that the cost in this country was about 30 per cent higher than the scales paid by Great Britain, and that Great Britain's scales were higher than those in other countries. That is true. The only way I can account for Great Britain's doing so much business when the wage scales are higher is because of the very great efficiency of the British merchant marine. It is so large; it forms such a very great percentage of all the marine of the world; the British have been masters in that line for so many years, I may say for so many centuries, that they have attained a commanding position and held it; but I should like to remind the Senator that many thinkers believe that the late World War was really the result of commercial jealousy and rivalry between Great Britain and Germany. Germany had built up a marvelous merchant marine prior to the outbreak of the war, and it was said that it was cutting into Great Britain's business in many of the countries of the world. It was taking a very large percentage of that business. Now, of course, the German fleet has been destroyed. Great Britain now has a great part of that fleet. We have a large part of it. I suppose France and Italy got their portions of the fleet. I have just brought out figures here to show that Australia received quite a number of those German vessels. Since the war we have had only a comparatively few privately owned and operated vessels to compete with Great Britain. The French merchant marine never seems to have been a success for some cause or other. The Italians have had a moderate degree of success, but they are not in a position to be world carriers. To a great extent they have handled their own business, but they have not been carriers for the rest of the world. The Norwegians have been to a great extent world carriers; but they, too, have only a limited number of ships, and there is plenty for them to do and at the same time for the British to do. The Japanese have come into the world of seagoing shipping very actively during the last few years, and my prediction is that they are going to be very powerful rivals both to Great Britain and to the United States.

Unless we can build up a merchant marine on some basis to compete with England, I do not see how it is possible for us to get a fair share of the world's commerce. I think the British are so much more skilled than we are in these marine matters, so much more skilled than any other nation, that they are going to continue to do the business. That may not be a very complete answer to the Senator's question, but it is the best I can give at this moment.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, some of these reports—I think the report made by the minority members in the House; I thought I had it here; I have it somewhere—point out that the labor cost of operating our merchant marine is only 2 per cent higher than it is in Great Britain. Does that accord with the Senator's recollection?

Mr. RANSDELL. No; that is not so, as I understand it. I have here a table which I do not want to take the time of the Senate to read in its entirety, but I should like to call to the Senator's attention some of these actual cases.

For instance, I have here the ship Bantu, a United States vessel of 4,229 tons. The monthly pay of that vessel, speaking of wages now—I am not going to discuss all of these features—the monthly pay of that vessel was $3,235 for the 46 men of the crew. Compare that with the British ship Bonny, of 4,229 tons. It happens to be exactly the same size. In the crew of the British ship there were 43 men, as compared with the 46 in the American ship, and the monthly pay there was $2,466, as compared with a pay of $3,235 in the American ship.

Take the next case, the Galesburg, an American ship of 5,138 tons, compared with the Ballygally Head, an English ship of 5,179 tons. The United States ship had 39 men in her crew, the British ship 42 men. The wages of the American ship were $3,097; the wages of the British ship, $2,350.

So in quite a number of cases I give you the actual vessels of both Great Britain and America, and give you the actual wages; so it is not theory at all, but it is a plain, simple statement of facts which may be verified.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not find just what I had in mind, but here is something bearing on the subject. The report of Congressman DAVIS on this bill, when it was in the House, quotes from Mr. Lasker:

> Chairman Lasker stated at the hearings that "There has been a difference."

Note, he says—

> there has been a difference—

A difference of 25 to 30 per cent.

> There has been a difference of 25 to 30 per cent, almost constant, in the wage between the American and British ship. That difference is cut away down now.
>
> During the discussion of the question of comparative wages of American and British crews, the following question was asked and answer given:
>
> "Mr. HARDY. * * * I have a statement here showing the difference in cost of crews amounts to nothing.
> "Mr. LASKER. I do not know at the present moment that it does amount to anything."

There is a great deal of other evidence to the same effect. I realize that witnesses have testified to substantially what the Senator stated, and I am at a loss to understand why there is this difference of opinion as between experts who at least ought to have investigated this subject before they testified.

WAGE DIFFERENCE FAVORS BRITISH.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will say to the Senator that so far as my examination goes there is a very great difference between the wages paid on American vessels and those paid on British vessels. There does seem to be the difference of opinion that he states, but I have gone into the matter just as fully as I can.

I am citing the tables showing the actual wages paid, and I shall be glad to look into the matter further, if I can, to see which set of witnesses has told the exact truth in this matter. The Senator knows, as a matter of common knowledge, that wages in America are higher in nearly everything than in Great Britain. I will say to the Senator that there is another question connected with that, if we are going to go into that discussion. There is the question of better food. We are required to give our men very much better food than they do in British ships. We are required to furnish them a great deal larger amount of air space. We are required to make them a great deal more comfortable than the requirements of the British marine. There is no doubt that the expense of operating our ships is very considerably higher, when all things are considered.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I realize that our food requirements are better than they are in other nations, and they ought to be better.

Mr. RANSDELL. I quite agree with the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. There is not any difference of opinion between us on that subject; but Congressman DAVIS evidently refers here to the testimony of Mr. Rosseter, who is a man of large experience; and this question was asked:

> Mr. VARE. Have you any figures showing the cost of manning an English ship as compared with the cost of manning an American ship of the same size?
>
> Mr. ROSSETER. Yes, sir. The prejudice on account of the somewhat higher wages and of the larger manning scale amounts to about 2 per cent of our operating cost.

And at another place here:

> This feature was aptly expressed by Mr. J. S. Rosseter in a letter to Mr. E. N. Hurley, chairman Shipping Board, in 1919.

Not to quote the whole of it, he used this language—I am reading now from page 26 of Congressman DAVIS's report:

> The prejudice of higher costs of manning, by which I mean larger crews at higher pay and extra cost of victualing, can be fairly stated as amounting to less than 2 per cent of the total operating expense. This can be entirely offset, and more, by a reasonable increase in the speed of our ships and by improving loading and discharging equipment, thus reducing the time in port as well as on voyage.

At another point, I think in this same report—in any event, it appears in the testimony—it was said that the cost of manning the vessels and the cost of the foodstuffs was only a comparatively small per cent of the total cost of operating the ships. I have in mind at the present time one witness who testified that the cost of victualing and manning the ships was only 7 per cent of the total expense. Can the Senator inform me as to whether or not that is correct?

Mr. RANSDELL. I can not give the Senator any information on that subject. The Senator will bear in mind that there were a great many witnesses. This testimony was taken for several months. It went through a long, long period, and there was a great deal of difference of opinion in regard to the matter, but the best evidence, as I say, as I have been able to analyze it—I should be glad to try to go into it a little bit more in detail in response to the Senator's question—from the best evidence that I can gather it costs considerably more to man and operate an American vessel than it does a British vessel. Let me remind the Senator that even if the difference were only 2 per cent for the actual cost of operation, that is a very big item. The cost of operation is the biggest thing connected with a vessel. This subsidy that so many people are objecting to amounts, experts tell us—and I do not know whether they are stating it correctly or not—to only about one-fifth of the fuel cost of operating a vessel. The cost of operating is a tremendously expensive thing. It includes the fuel, of course; it includes the wages; it includes everything connected with a ship; and even if you take Mr. Rosseter's figures there and say that it costs only about 2 per cent more for the operating cost in America than in England, that difference alone would be a very, very large one in favor of the British merchant marine.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have been having serious trouble in coming to a conclusion as to what I ought to do on this subject. I sometimes hear the men who are insisting upon a subsidy declare that it is utterly impossible to operate without a subsidy. I find others who apparently are worthy of equal credence who tell me that it is not necessary. Now, it does seem to me that with all the actuaries we have, we ought to have some definite statement from the Shipping Board bearing on this subject, and we ought not to be left entirely in the dark about it.

Mr. RANSDELL. May I say that I quite agree with the Senator that we ought to have something a little bit more definite than we have; but I believe we have fairly definite information. The proof of the pudding is always in the eating, and we learn from the Shipping Board experts that it has been costing a considerable sum to try to operate American vessels. They have not been making money; they have been losing money. The Shipping Board has been trying its level best to operate them so as to make money, but they have told us they are losing around $50,000,000 a year, including the care of the vessels, their operation, and so forth.

Mr. POMERENE. I recognize the fact that that statement has been made, but I have no figures which will enable me to make comparisons. Of course, we recognize the fact that the shipping of the world is about as low as it can possibly be. It is not a question of financial difficulties with Government-owned ships alone but there are financial difficulties on the part of privately owned vessels.

I have information to the effect that one certain company is willing to take a number of these vessels and operate them with or without subsidy, whether this bill passes or does not pass. I am not a shipping expert, but I would like to have some evidence from some expert if I can get it which will enable me to come to a conclusion.

COST TABLES IN COMMITTEE HEARINGS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to call the Senator's attention to page 169 of volume 1 of the hearings, which gives tables submitted by the Shipping Board itself. The Senator will find the tables of wages on various ships, American, British, German, Norwegian, and so forth, giving the compensation of the crew. I gave the Senator the page, and he can examine it. I will give just one instance. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that a survey of the whole situation was made by the Shipping Board and presented to the committee. This gives the crew list, the monthly wages on similar American, British, and German steamers, as of December, 1921. The figures are as follows:

American steamship Munwood, 3,190 gross tons.

German steamship Amassia, 3,300 gross tons.

British steamship Munardan, 3,813 gross tons.

Here is a statement of the pay of the crew of the American ship, including officers, per month. It amounts to $3,107.50. On the British ship it amounts to 538 pounds and 10 shillings. If you count the pound at even $5, there is still quite a difference between the two. On the German ships the cost is 33,200 marks. I do not know how you could figure that, the way marks are now. But we can compare the British and American ships. The Senator will find several statements there with reference to that subject. Like the Senator, I am not a shipping man; I am not an expert; but these are figures which are submitted by the Shipping Board after a very careful investigation and survey of the situation.

Mr. POMERENE. I recognize the fact that it is almost impossible to make comparisons as to cost under present rates of exchange between the various countries, but it does seem to me we could get some figures which would tell us what the total cost of the operation of a ship is, what the wage cost is, what the ratio between wage cost and total cost is, and then we can probably reach some sort of a conclusion, even if it is not entirely satisfactory.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the Senator will find these figures to which I have just referred as definite as any figures anyone can hope to get. They give different exchange rates, and the Senator can figure any rate he sees fit to. If the highest possible value of the pound is taken as $5, there is still quite a difference.

Mr. POMERENE. Of course, I intend to look into this further, but it seems I can get more misinformation on this subject than upon any other subject I have been in contact with for some time, and I do not know what to depend on.

Mr. RANSDELL. This is one of the most difficult subjects this Nation or any other nation has been confronted with. We know very well that the present merchant marine was a war necessity, and that it cost us over $3,000,000,000. That is such a staggering sum that I can not comprehend it, and I do not believe anyone else can. It is a colossal study; it is a difficult study. We have been doing the very best we could to work it out, and I think the Shipping Board have been doing the very best they could to work it out, and that is a board composed of as good men as we can find. This bill is their unanimous verdict of what should be passed, and they agree unanimously on the facts in support of this bill.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not mean to reflect upon this board at all, because my judgment is that they are high-minded men, and I have no doubt but what they are doing the best they can; but when these figures are brought to me, necessarily I am prompted to inquire what information have they on the subject. Are they experienced shipping men?

Mr. RANSDELL. They have a number of shipping men in their employ.

Mr. POMERENE. I understand that; but some weeks ago the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] read into the record an opinion by Mr. Dollar, one of the very successful shipping men of the country, in which he contends that a subsidy is not necessary. I have talked with other shipping men, who have told me, as I said before, that they were ready to buy these ships, or a certain number of them, and operate them, and they did not care whether there was a subsidy or not. When I am confronted with evidence of that kind, and other men who have had no experience in shipping come and tell me it is utterly impossible to operate the ships without a subsidy, what conclusion am I to reach? Above everything else, I want a merchant marine. I think it would be a calamity if we let this get out of America's hands. I am not enamored of Government operation, either of shipping or of railroads.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator knows we have not had a merchant marine in the past. When the war broke out we were carrying only 9 per cent of our commerce, and we have the ships now, and this is the only plan that has been offered, except continuation of Government ownership. There may be some difference of opinion as to what it cost to operate a ship here and what it cost to operate a ship there; but it is a fact that nobody can deny that it has been a very expensive thing to the American people to build these ships, and we are continually losing money on them. Nobody can deny that.

Mr. POMERENE. There is no doubt about that; but my history informs me that before the Civil War we did have a merchant marine, and it was a merchant marine of which we were very proud.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator's history also tells him that we had a discriminating duty at that time, and the merchant marine was built up on a discriminating duty. If we could have the discriminating duty now I would infinitely prefer it to this. I would put this subsidy bill aside in a second if we could enforce the discriminating duty provided for in existing law.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator has brought up a subject I have been thinking a great deal about. I recognize the fact that we have authorized the denouncement of treaties so that we could have this discriminating duty, and two Presidents of the United States did not see fit to use the power which was given to them by the Congress. That has not as yet convinced me that it ought not to have been done. It has seemed to me, as I have gone into this, that there are two things we could do: One is to enforce a discriminating duty in favor of goods that are brought into this country in American bottoms. The other is to do as Germany has done—give a preferential freight rate to goods going out of the country. In that way Germany has been able to indirectly defeat the provisions in these very treaties which are in force at the present time. Other countries can do this by indirection, but I love the American way of doing things by direction.

As I have said, I am disappointed when I think that while the minority of the committee have presented their views they have not come with a concrete suggestion of some sort of a substitute measure for this bill. The fleet is here. We have to deal with it. What are we going to do with it? I want to do the best thing I can.

DISCRIMINATING DUTIES PREFERRED.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, in regard to this discriminating duty, I will say that we tried to put that into effect some years ago—I think it was in 1914 that the act was passed—and it has been on the statute books. The courts held it was in contravention of our treaties with other nations; and to overcome that, in 1920 we included in the merchant marine act of that year section 34, instructing the President to denounce these treaties—if there were any treaties in contravention, to get rid of them by denouncing them in accordance with the regular treaty arrangement. He did not do it. When Mr. Harding came in, 15 months ago, he did not do it either; and so it goes. It does not look to me as if we can get rid of them as a practical proposition; and even if we go to denouncing them under that law, I presume it would take well on to a year to get rid of them and get other treaties; and in the meantime what is going to happen to us?

I want to say to the Senator that personally I would infinitely prefer that the discriminating duties which are provided for in the law should be carried out in good faith; and if we can have that, I, for one, will never support a subsidy. But I do not know how to get it. If the Senator or anybody else can suggest a reasonable way in which we can put these discriminatory duties in force, then in heaven's name let us get them. But until we do get them, let us do the next best thing—pass this bill—for nobody else has suggested anything in lieu thereof.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator has just suggested that if we did denounce these treaties it would take a year before we could do anything. It will be a year before we get anything done under this bill that will be of any particular consequence to the country.

Mr. McKELLAR. We could not sell the ships now, anyway.

Mr. POMERENE. I may vote for this bill before we get through with it.

Mr. RANSDELL. I hope the Senator will.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not think the Senator is hoping very strongly that I will, in view of the fact that he himself confesses that he prefers some other plan to this subsidy feature. The Senator has given a great deal of study to this. I wish he would prepare a bill along the lines of what is his best thought and what harmonizes with his preferences on this subject. It would help me immensely in coming to a conclusion. I hope we will have a little more light before we get through with this discussion.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am very hopeful, with the Senator from Ohio. I know he wants to do the same thing I do. I just want to call his attention to the fact that the minority, in the views to which he has referred, declare themselves emphatically against Government ownership and operation.

I rose to call to the Senator's attention an article in the August, 1922, number of the World's Work. I heard him refer to Robert Dollar. This is an article by Robert Dollar, and I want to read to the Senator just a brief paragraph. This is at page 447 of that work. Listen to what Mr. Dollar says:

> Under present conditions it costs the American shipowner more to operate his vessels than those of any other nation. This is not hearsay; I have before me recent figures, not made up for the occasion but taken off the reports that come to me regularly for my private information, concerning vessels in our own fleet. Here they are:

Kind of vessel.	Number of men.	Monthly cost.
Shipping Board steamer (American crew)	34	$3,718.50
American steamer (Chinese crew)	40	2,124.50
British steamer (Chinese crew)	44	1,567.20
Japanese steamer (Japanese crew)	36	1,403.12

Mr. McKELLAR. I thought perhaps the Senator from Washington would be willing to take the figures as presented by the author of the bill, Mr. Lasker, and I want to read what Mr. Lasker said about the difference in labor costs. He said:

> But I do know this, that to-day the labor cost between Britain and the United States is closer together than it ever was before in the history of shipping.

Again, while he was being examined by Congressman HARDY, he was asked:

> If that is left out of this, then I do not want to go into that, except I have a statement here showing the difference in cost of crews amounts to nothing.
> Mr. LASKER. I do not know at the present moment that it does amount to anything.

In other words, Mr. Lasker admits that there is no difference in labor cost between Great Britain and the United States at this time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I merely want to suggest that I have not had the time to read all through Mr. Lasker's statement. I do know, however, that frequently and very naturally during his testimony in answer to questions he referred to the experts of the Shipping Board. Mr. Lasker is not a practical shipping man, as he frankly admits.

Mr. McKELLAR. The quotation which I cited will be found on pages 33 and 36 of the hearings.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know how easy it is to take out of the testimony of a witness sentences or clauses that support a particular view, and it may appear that this was an opinion of the man or an express statement of the man when, if one would read his whole testimony, it would be seen that it does not correctly give his view and his idea. But it is certain that what I called to the attention of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] a moment ago was prepared by the experts of the Shipping Board and submitted to the committee and perhaps to the Shipping Board and Mr. Lasker. Mr. Lasker refers to it in his testimony. But what I have just read from The World's Work came from a really practical shipping man, and he said that these are his private advices which came to him for his particular information and not to satisfy any particular occasion.

I frankly say that I do not attach very much importance to a statement of opinion from Mr. Lasker as to the wage cost on a ship, because his experts submit the testimony that they gathered with reference to the actual cost. I have not had an opportunity to read Mr. Lasker's testimony through. Taking what the Senator quoted just by itself and standing alone, of course, we see what he expresses there, but I am satisfied that is not in harmony with the report of the experts. I am satisfied, if the Senator will read the whole of the testimony of Mr. Lasker, he will see what Mr. Lasker intended to express.

Mr. DIAL and Mr. McKELLAR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I have been very indulgent, but I wish to proceed with my presentation of the subject. I was anxious to give Senators an opportunity to present their views, but I prefer that they do it in their own way and in their own time. I have been glad to have the interruptions, but I wish to go on now with what I was saying on the subject of comparative costs.

It is a matter of shame to this Nation, to every one of us personally, that we did not see to it that this field for marine endeavor was broadened by some protective measures for our shipping, so that this great opportunity for useful work would be opened to thousands of other Americans at American wage scales, under American living conditions, and to the lasting benefit of America in peace or war.

It is to give that opportunity, to gain that important field of work, that the present bill has been drawn.

MANY OTHER COSTS ARE HIGHER.

Under its protection and with Government aid shipowners will be able to partly offset this great prime differential against our ships. Of course, there are other differentials in the shipping business that react against our vessels. I need only mention the higher cost of repairs which must be made in American shipyards if the ship is to receive Government aid; the higher administrative costs, due to better paid clerks, agents, stevedores, and so forth; and all of these higher wage costs are due to our better standard of living and the broader chance for advancement this country affords to the individual. We do not wish to restrict that chance for advancement, nor would we lessen the opportunity our ways of living provide for us all. And it is to extend and perpetuate that chance and opportunity that we are seeking to assist America's shipping enterprise.

I will not burden you with the technical details of how foreign wage scales at sea cut so far under American wage scales at the present moment that oversea carrying is not profitable for us. Without objection, I will offer for the RECORD a table of American and foreign ships so arranged and compared that anyone may see at a glance how great the American handicap is in this regard. All these wage scales have been taken from the actual ships' articles, and have appeared either in the hearings on the bill or in the RECORD, and all of them are of this year's date. They speak for themselves more potently than I could speak for them and furnish ample reason by their very being for the immediate passage of this bill.

Wage scales.

Here is a mixed fleet employing 1,169 men for 13 American ships and only 960 men on the 13 British ships. The total monthly pay roll for the American vessels is $80,473.75, an average of $68.91 per month per man, while the monthly pay rolls of the 13 British ships total $49,532.70, an average of $51.90 per month per man.

In this mixed fleet we find the six American ships with a monthly pay roll totaling $27,033 for its 406 men, an average of $66 per man, while the six foreign vessels are run with an aggregate monthly pay roll of $21,185.63, or an average of $38.45 per month for each of its 551 men.

In regard to the differential against American ships, due to subsistence cost and to accommodations for the crew, you have only to look over the requirements of the seamen's law and contrast the home living conditions ashore of the American sailor and his foreign rival. There is no comparison as to quantity and quality of food served, nor can the living quarters of American and foreign ships be contrasted without everyone admitting that American standards are maintained afloat as they are ashore.

While on the subject of subsistence let me call attention to the increasing cost of Asiatics aboard British ships. The lascar makes a good seaman from the British owner's viewpoint, because he is cheaply fed and cheaply paid. Our bill bars the employment of persons not eligible to become citizens from both deck and engine-room forces and requires after a brief time that two-thirds of the crew must be citizens of the United States. This is one of the wisest and most important provisions of the bill.

OUR TONNAGE IN FOREIGN TRADE.

Mr. President, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD without reading the tabulation and statement in regard to our tonnage in foreign trade.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statement will be inserted in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

If American shipping needs no aid, if it can meet foreign competition, and is meeting it successfuly, as the opponents of the shipping bill assert, then they must have sources of information that are denied to me, and which, apparently, are denied to the Government of the United States. I have had some research made of the status of our foreign trade, from a number of angles, and no matter from what angle the situation is approached the analysis reveals one fact strikingly and unmistakably, and that is that the American merchant marine not only is not standing up under competition but is falling back steadily and continuously. This is the fruit of delay in securing legislation and the enforcement of that legislation so as to assure the permanency of an American merchant marine that will be consonant with the importance of our position in the international trade of the world. The merchant marine that we now have, under a continuance of the conditions we now have, is a helpless giant, mighty in tonnage but weak almost every way save numerically.

We need look no further than the record of the past few years. We came upon the seas, we saw an opportunity for strength where before there had been only weakness, but we did not conquer. No; we are being conquered.

The most recent figures that I have of our sea trade are for the nine months of this year ended September 30 last, and for the similar periods of the years 1919, 1920, and 1921. These figures represent the values of our imports and exports combined carried in American and foreign vessels.

In 1914 the entire foreign-trade fleet under the American flag aggregated only 1,076,000 gross tons. At the beginning of 1919 our merchant marine for sea commerce totaled about 5,000,000 tons. In 1920 it was 8,000,000 tons; in 1921, about 10,400,000 tons. At the beginning of this year it was about 10,300,000 tons, and it is now about 9,800,000 tons, or practically double what it was at the beginning of 1919, a gain in the past four years of 100 per cent. If with 1,000,000 tons before the beginning of the war we carried 10 per cent of our foreign trade, the natural thought would be that with ten times that amount of tonnage we would be in a position, so far as cargo space goes, at least, to carry all our imports and exports, especially as the volume of trade now is and has been less than it was before the war. Of course, however, a monopoly of the ocean transportation of all the commodities we exchange with other nations is neither possible nor to be desired. What we want and what we are entitled to is a fair share of our sea trade. With Great Britain transporting nearly 70 per cent of her foreign trade, how can she oppose our aspiration to carry at least half, and ultimately as much as two-thirds, of ours?

There is no reason why we should not be transporting half of that commerce right now—no reason but one, and that is that we have left foreigners in exclusive possession of advantages under which they are steadily increasing their control over the distribution of our goods. It will cost us some millions of dollars to offset these foreign advantages, but it will cost us billions if we do not take steps to overcome them and give our merchant marine a chance for existence.

Permit me to lay before you briefly the records of the past four years to which I have referred. In the 1919 period—comprising the first nine months of that year—the carriage of our sea trade was practically equally divided between three groups of shipping—one composed of our own vessels, another of British ships, and the third of the tonnage of all the other foreign maritime nations combined. The value of the imports and exports carried and the percentage for each group of carriers was as follows:

	Value.	Per cent.
American	$2,580,000,000	34.3
British	2,496,000,000	33.2
Other foreign	2,448,000,000	32.5
Total	7,524,000,000

This may be regarded as the start of the post-war race for ocean commerce. In the three-cornered contest we held a slight lead. Competition had not come into play, for there was employment for all ships that could carry cargoes. American shipyards were at the peak of production, others had not begun to catch up on their war losses of tonnage, and we were in a position to utilize the output of our yards and gain new trade before the other maritime nations were in a position to compete. To get and hold that trade meant the establishment of an adequate American merchant marine. We got it, but we did not hold it.

The record for the 1920 period shows how we got it. In 1919 our vessels carried American imports and exports valued at $84,000,000 more than those transported by British vessels. In 1920 our lead over the British jumped to $840,000,000. But a more remarkable contrast is to be found in the comparison of what our vessels carried and what those of the other than British nations did. For the 1919 period our lead was $132,000,000, while in the 1920 period it was $2,132,000,000. It is worthy of note, also, that while in the 1919 period British ships carried only $48,000,000 more worth of goods in our trade than all other foreign ships, in 1920 she led by $1,292,000,000.

These were the days of high prices and high freights and little competition. Our share of the carrying trade jumped 10 per cent in the 1920 period and Britain's 2 per cent, but the proportion for the other foreign countries dropped 12 per cent. But the 1921 period presents a very different picture. Our $840,000,000 lead over Britain was reduced to $65,000,000, and our $2,132,000,000 lead over the other foreign nations fell to $452,000,000. Competition was again under way and instead of cargoes seeking cargo space, cargo carriers were seeking cargo. Our percentage gain of the previous period was more than cut in half, while Britain held her own and the other maritime nations scored an advance of 5 per cent.

The 1922 period has witnessed the relegation of our merchant marine to second place. Instead of leading Britain by $65,000,000, as in 1921, she led us by about $20,000,000, and instead of a $452,000,000 lead over the other foreign nations we had one of $311,000,000.

Here we are, then, practically back to our 1919 status, so far as the proportion of commodities carried in our own vessels is concerned, and with the lead we then held taken over by Great Britain, and this despite the doubling of our tonnage in the four years under review. As against that 100 per cent gain in cargo space we have made a gain of 1 per cent in the proportion of cargo carried by American vessels. Already Britain is leading us and the other foreign maritime nations are enlarging their slice of our trade at a rate that, if long continued, will put them ahead of us and we shall have moved from the head to the tail of the procession. That is the record of American shipping in competition with the cheaper built and cheaper operated foreign ships, whose owners are able to keep us from getting more than a nibble of their trade, while they carry off the bulk of ours.

So long as the foreigners continue to increase their share of our carrying trade and there is no increase in the volume of that trade there can be but one outcome, and that is more idle tonnage under the American flag. Here is another phase of the situation which those who claim that the American merchant marine can meet competition will do well to study.

It is true that we lack in this country close "cooperation on the part of shippers and shipowners and people generally." Business the world over is cold-blooded. The best service at the lowest rate is the universal motto. If American ships can not give as low rates as foreign ships because of their higher capital and operating costs, they can not get cargoes. If they can not give as good service when those first costs have been equalized by Government aid, they still will not get cargoes. But in every line of endeavor—invention, manufacturing, production—American genius and ability have triumphed, and only need something near an equal chance in the competition, whether that be an international sporting event, a world-wide financial deal, or an improved process of manufacturing a general utility. The world's history in the last century has shown American success in every field of endeavor, in spite of many handicaps, and knowing this one can not fail to believe that in the contest for world trade America will win if given half a chance.

Mr. RANSDELL. I also ask to insert without reading a tabulation and statement in regard to the idle vessels here and in Great Britain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statement will be inserted in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

IDLE VESSELS HERE AND IN GREAT BRITAIN—FOREIGN SHIPS PAY DIVIDENDS.

At the beginning of July last there was said to be laid up in the ports of the world 7,750,000 net tons of shipping. On the same date there was laid up in British ports 1,112,000 net tons.

Commenting on this fact, a British publication, Syren and Shipping, in its issue of November 22, 1922, says:

"Even grouping the foreign ships in British ports to swell our total we are confronted with the pleasing fact that whereas we have under our flag two-fifths (or fourteen thirty-fifths) of the world's tonnage, we had only one-seventh (or five thirty-fifths) of the world's idle shipping on our hands. This is a gratifying tribute both to British ships and their owners."

The same publication, in the same issue, gives comparative figures of laid-up tonnage in British ports at various dates, as taken from the records of the Chamber of Shipping of the United Kingdom, as follows:

	Ships.	Net tons.
Oct. 25, 1921	742	1,296,000
Jan. 1, 1922	712	1,307,000
Apr. 1, 1922	484	836,000
July 1, 1922	583	1,112,000
Oct. 1, 1922	456	824,000

Speaking of the lessening of inactivity apparent on October 1 last, the British paper says:

"Whether the greater buoyancy which has recently characterized the trade marts of the world will be continued, time alone can show. One thing is certain, viz, that the British shipowner is better prepared than any other of his rivals to immediately exploit any market which may open out. Just as he can keep running, thanks to economical ships and efficient methods when many of his competitors are unable to do so, so is he readiest to take the field when a chance of new employment presents itself."

This tribute to the ability of British ships to meet competition and their readiness to grasp any opportunities that may be offered by the expansion of foreign trade are well borne out by the figures cited. The moral to be drawn from our share in the world's laid-up tonnage is a very different one, however.

The British shipping paper Fairplay, in its issue of November 23, gives a table showing that at the middle of this year there were laid up in British ports 1,780,000 gross tons of vessels, while for the United States the figures were 3,978,000 tons. It is pointed out that of the ships tied up in Britain not all are British, but even if they had been the total would have represented only about 10 per cent of the entire British fleet. Our 3,978,000 tons, on the other hand, does not include wooden steamers, but the total is more than a third of our seagoing fleet. In other words, Britain, with a foreign trade fleet practically double ours, had less than half the amount of tonnage tied up. It is apparent that in the competition to secure employment for ships we have lost heavily.

If we consider the position now as compared with about a year ago, the contrast between the American and the British merchant marine is striking. British figures prepared by the Chamber of Shipping of the United Kingdom show that on October 25, 1921, the laid-up British tonnage totaled 1,158,000 net tons, and that on October 1, 1922, the total was 752,000 tons. Records of the United States Shipping Board give the total for the ships of the board laid up on November 5, 1921, as 6,989,000 dead-weight tons, and on October 28, 1922, as 6,426,000 tons. It should be noted that while the British figures are in net tons ours are in dead weight, and that therefore the apparent reduction in the year of 406,000 tons of idle British ships and 563,000 tons for American vessels does not give a true picture of comparison. By applying percentages, however, it is found that the reduction in Britain's idle tonnage for the year represented 35 per cent, while the reduction for Shipping Board vessels was only 8 per cent. The ratio in favor of the British merchant marine therefore was more than 4 to 1.

Perhaps the picture will be clearer if we talk in terms of ships, and not of tonnage. Idle British vessels during the year under review were reduced from 654 to 419, a drop of 235, or 36 per cent. The Shipping Board's inactive vessels were reduced from 1,028 to 989, a decline of only 39 ships, or 4 per cent. In the reduction of inactive ships, then, Britain's gain was nine times ours.

The American figures shown take into account only the Government's steel vessels; but there is also a large volume of tonnage privately owned under the American flag which is out of commission for lack of cargoes. I have no official figures for this, but it can be conservatively estimated that at least 1,000,000 gross tons of private American shipping is inactive. That would represent about 20 per cent of the private foreign trade fleet. Of the Shipping Board's total steel tonnage two-thirds is idle, and the position has been practically unimproved during the past year. On November 8, 1921, for instance, 66.9 per cent of all the board's steel tonnage was tied up, while on October 8, 1922, the figure was 65.7 per cent, an improvement in a period of almost a year of only 1.2 per cent.

If American ships can compete on even terms with foreign ships, why are they not doing it? Let us not forget that even with only about one-third of its tonnage in operation, the Shipping Board is losing at the rate of about $50,000,000 a year. And if you say that privately operated American tonnage is competing successfully, if they, too, are not losing money, I am at a loss to understand why British and other foreign shipping enterprises are declaring dividends of from 10 to 15 per cent and American companies are giving none.

At present we have more than a thousand steel vessels tied up, each one of which costs $3,600 a year to maintain. To-day they may be worth about $200,000,000,000. Depreciation of ships not in service is estimated at 10 per cent a year. The salvage value, therefore, of the idle fleet decreases automatically at the rate of $20,000,000 a year. They are not salable without the subsidy and can not be operated by the Government without vastly increasing the Shipping Board deficits. These ships can not be sold unless the foreign handicap of cheaper operating cost is offset. Without this bill that handicap will be just as potent five years from now, and meanwhile the fleet will have been reduced in value by one-half.

If American ships can compete on equal terms with foreign carriers, they will obtain ample cargoes. Service being the same, the shipper will choose the lower rate. If foreign operating and capital costs are lower than American charges, foreign freight will be lower. If those differentials are offset by Government aid to American ships we can meet the foreigner on equal terms and obtain our share of the business.

BILLIONS PAID TO FOREIGNERS.

Mr. RANSDELL. Now, Mr. President and Senators, I call the attention of the Senate particularly to a brief tabulation which I have made about the colossal sums that have been paid by this country to foreigners during the last 100 years for carrying our goods to and fro. I hope Senators will listen to the figures as I present them.

COLOSSAL SUMS PAID IN FREIGHTS, ETC., TO FOREIGN SHIPS.

In the past 100 years foreign interests have been paid more than $28,000,000,000 in connection with the transportation by sea of American imports and exports. These figures are based on data of the Department of Commerce and the Shipping Board.

It is stated that freights, insurance, banking, brokerage, and other services connected with the shipment of goods in foreign trade approximate 25 per cent of the value of the goods themselves.

For the 100 years ended at the beginning of this year the value of American exports and imports by sea was as follows (1821–1921, inclusive):

Imports	$62,174,000,000
Exports	86,629,000,000
Total trade	148,803,000,000

The division of this trade between the vessels carrying it was as follows:

	Value.	Per cent.
United States ships	$35,631,000,000	24
British ships	56,545,000,000	38
Other foreign	56,627,000,000	38

During the century under review the shipping earnings in the carriage of American imports and exports were as follows:

	Value.	Per cent.
American	$8,908,000,000	24
Foreign	28,293,000,000	76
Total	37,201,000,000

From 1821 to 1862 an average of 80 per cent of our total foreign commerce was carried by American ships, but from 1862 to 1922 American participation decreased to an average of 19 per cent.

During the period from December 31, 1914, to December 31, 1920, the total value of our commerce by sea was $47,626,000,000, the distribution of values carried by vessels being as follows:

	Value.	Per cent.
United States ships	$12,130,000,000	26
British ships	19,810,000,000	42
Other foreign	15,686,000,000	33

The total paid to foreign interests during the 100 years was, therefore, $28,293,000,000.

From the foundation of the Republic to the present time the Federal Government has expended for improvements of rivers, harbors, and canals, exclusive of the Panama Canal, the sum of only $1,036,000,000, and for the construction of the Panama Canal, $479,000,000—a total of only $1,515,000,000.

Compare this sum of one and one-half billions paid for all our waterways, including the Panama Canal, in the 140 years of our national life with $28,250,000,000 paid to foreign ships in the last hundred years.

If we had maintained an effective merchant marine during all these years and carried one-half our foreign commerce instead of 24 per cent thereof, the sum of $9,608,666,666 out of this colossal sum of more than $28,000,000,000 would have remained in this country. One year's interest at 3 per cent on this amount would have exceeded the subsidy proposed in the pending bill. In other words, if we pay the subsidy and thereby build up a strong merchant marine, the vast sums heretofore paid to foreigners will remain at home to enrich our own people.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. It occurred to me that we ought to have an estimate as to what it would have cost us to maintain the merchant marine by subsidy during the one hundred and odd years to which the Senator referred.

Mr. RANSDELL. If we had just carried out the wise shipping policy with which our forefathers started in 1789, the discriminating-duty policy under which we built up our merchant marine from nothing during that crucial year of our history, when we were carrying less than 9 per cent, so that five years thereafter we were carrying 90 per cent and also carrying much of the commerce of other countries—if that policy, sir, could have been kept up consistently, if we had not been hoodwinked by Great Britain into making treaties with her which were favorable to her and hurtful to us, if our old-time shipping policy could have prevailed, we would have carried continuously 90 per cent of our commerce or certainly more than three-fourths of it. I have just presented figures to show that from 1779 to 1860 we carried 80 per cent of our foreign commerce in our American ships. If we had continued to do that, we would have been better off, but we got away from that old policy, the Civil War intervened and the American merchant marine was destroyed during that war, and we have never had the vision to go back to the old policy. But for that, sir, we would have had a merchant marine without a subsidy.

OLD POLICY IS PREFERABLE.

The point I have tried to make is that I prefer the old policy, but we have been unable to go back to it. We adopted a discriminating duty in 1914 and it is in effect yet. In 1920 we adopted a provision in the shipping act of that year, section 34, directing, in the most positive manner, the President of the United States to denounce those treaties and go to the discriminating duty. He has not done it. Mr. Wilson did not do it and Mr. Harding has not done it. My contention is that the subsidy is the only thing practical that is offered. If the Senator can devise any reasonable method of relief so we can go to that discriminating-duty policy, I shall for one be glad to have it. I am only taking the subsidy because it is the best thing I know of and because other countries have taken it and made a success of it.

Mr. BORAH. That is a proposition about which the Senator and I disagree, as to other countries making a success of it through a subsidy.

Mr. RANSDELL. We may disagree on that just as we are likely to do as to many things, but I have argued that fully and I am not going to go into it again. The Senator did not do me the honor of listening to that portion of my address, and I have already occupied so much time of the Senate I do not care to repeat; but I will ask him to read my speech, and, if he does so, I think he will find that a great deal of success has come to other countries from the subsidy policy.

Mr. BORAH. I read the speech which the Senator delivered before the termination of a recent session, from which I derived a great deal of information.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am very glad, indeed, to know that; and I assure the Senator from Idaho that I appreciate his statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. RANSDELL. I will yield for a question.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to do more than to ask a question. I wish to correct a mistake which I think the Senator from Louisiana has made; and it is a mistake which I know he would not want to make.

The Senator states that our great merchant marine was built up under discriminating duties prior to the Civil War, beginning almost with the commencement of our history. The historical facts are these: In our early history the merchant marine of the world was built up or was attempted to be built up by various kinds of discriminating duties; but in 1832, while Andrew Jackson was the President of the Republic, a law was passed which abolished all discriminating duties as against any nation which did not discriminate against us. It was thereafter, between 1832 and 1859, when there were no discriminating duties at all, that America made the greatest strides in building up her merchant marine. That merchant marine became so great, indeed, that it controlled nearly all of our overseas business. The Senator from Louisiana made the statement that our merchant marine before the Civil War was built up by reason of discriminating duties. He is in error in that respect. After 1832 there were no discriminating duties; and it was after 1832 that the great volume of our merchant marine was built up.

Mr. RANSDELL. There was a long period, from 1789 to 1832, a period of 43 years, which were the real halcyon days of the American merchant marine. During all that long period of 43 years, as I recall history—I have not read it for some time—we imposed discriminating duties.

Mr. McKELLAR rose.

Mr. RANSDELL. Wait a moment; the Senator will pardon me. Beyond question during that period we pursued the policy of discriminating duties. I recall the law to which the Senator refers which was passed under President Jackson.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was passed in 1832.

Mr. RANSDELL. But a wonderful impetus had been given to our merchant marine under the discriminating duty act, which was passed, if I recall correctly, in July, 1789. From the very beginning of our Government we discriminated, and we placed our flag on every sea in the world. During that 43 years our merchant marine became very strong. As the result of some treaty arrangements and the law of 1832, to which the Senator refers, we did not discriminate thereafter; but we did considerable to aid our shipping. Does not the Senator from Tennessee remember the practical subsidy which was given to the Collins Line and to other lines of those days, to which we paid very large sums?

Mr. McKELLAR. Out of which there grew a great scandal.

Mr. RANSDELL. There may have been a scandal; suppose there was; there have been many scandals in the history of the world, but we did aid our merchant marine very materially down to the very time of the Civil War. We either imposed discriminating duties or we granted mail subventions; at any rate, we always helped our merchant marine.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator from Louisiana will permit me to add by way of correcting what I think is an error on his part, the Senator will recall that after the War of the Revolution we were in a constant struggle with Great Britain for trade. Then war came on between Great Britain and France, in which the United States became very nearly involved, all of which sufficed almost to blot our shipping off the seas. Then came the War of 1812, when our shipping was driven off the seas, and from that time until 1832, instead of the American merchant marine being built up it was in the greatest confusion and we were fighting for our life on the seas. It was only after 1832, when Andrew Jackson secured the passage of the law against discriminating duties, that our merchant marine really became a vital, splendid, living thing. It increased until the Civil War, when our shipping was again run off the seas, and it has never since that time come back.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator from Tennessee thinks he has stated the historical aspect of the case correctly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely refer the Senator from Louisiana to history.

Mr. RANSDELL. Very well, I shall be very glad to look up the matter, but I do not agree with the Senator's historical statement at all. I think we had a wonderful merchant marine before 1832, and I should like the Senator to examine some of the subsidy acts which were passed by our great Democratic Congresses prior to 1859 up to the time of the Civil War. Should he do so, he will see that a great deal was done to aid the American merchant marine during those days.

Mr. McKELLAR. But it was not done by direct subsidies.

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not know what the Senator may call what was done during that time, but the aids provided were certainly very closely akin to subsidies. To me—

That which we call a rose,
By any other name would smell as sweet.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with the Senator that we ought to do everything in our power to build up a merchant marine in this country; I am just as much in favor of that as is he. The difference arises from the fact that he favors a direct cash subsidy, to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, from the taxes of the people, to the Merchant Marine Trust, while I am opposed to that form of aid.

LITTLE INTEREST FOR MANY YEARS.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am glad to know the Senator from Tennessee wishes to build up an American merchant marine. We are together to that extent, anyway. The American Congress for many years has not evinced any real interest in the American merchant marine; but there is one thing certain, namely, that we have this big asset, and I think we ought to do something with it. The Senator from Tennessee proposes to turn it over as a side issue to the Department of Commerce, if I interpret his remarks correctly. I do not want to do that.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think the Senator from Louisiana has read my remarks, or he would have understood very differently.

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not know what the Senator would do, for his remarks and those of other Senators on the subject, and their reports, are so absolutely hazy, so difficult to understand, that I do not know what they want.

If Senators who oppose the pending bill would come here with a clean-cut substitute for it and state their proposals specifically and clearly and definitely, so that a child of 10 years would understand them, I should like to see them do it, for I am confronted with the difficult problem of letting our ships go to the demnition bow-wows or of voting for the passage of the pending measure.

I do not like subsidies any more than do others, but I can not overlook the fact that in the history of this country we have given what are substantially a great many subsidies. Will the Senator please tell me what but a subsidy were our tremendous donations to the railroads of 200,000,000 acres of land, worth from five to ten billion dollars, and probably as much additional given by the States and counties and municipalities in the way of taxes, bonds, and all kinds of exemptions? What were those if not subsidies? What is the aid which has recently been given by the National Government to highways, amounting to over $500,000,000 in the last six years, and more contributed by the States and local municipalities, amounting in all to over a billion dollars? What is that, if you please, but a subsidy? What is the $479,000,000 we gave to the Panama Canal in order that transportation might be cheapened between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans but a subsidy to world transportation? What is the $1,036,000,000 we have given to the waterways of this country during our national life in order to cheapen and better transportation facilities? What is that but a subsidy? What is the protective tariff, which at least the Republican side of the Chamber stands for, but a subsidy? What is a subsidy but an aid?

The Republicans stand for a protection to our industries through the tariff law, and many a Democrat stands for sufficient aid through the tariff law to equalize the cost of production at home with the cost of production abroad. I do not hesitate to say that I am one of those who stand for measures to bring about an equality in production costs at home and abroad, even if they have to be provided in a bill which is called a protective tariff bill. What are all those matters but aid? Senators object to the pending bill because it is called a "subsidy" measure, but they have given all kinds of aid in the various directions I have indicated. They are afraid, however, to vote for this bill because it is denominated or designated a "subsidy" measure.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator is quite correct in his recounting of the number of subsidies which have been granted. I think they may all be termed subsidies. It is a study of the effect of those subsidies upon American taxpayers that has led me to believe that subsidies are a great evil.

MANY INDORSE THE SHIP BILL.

Mr. RANSDELL. Now, Mr. President, to proceed—and I have already occupied a great deal of time—the Senator from Wisconsin placed in the RECORD a list of organizations which he said were opposed to the pending bill. I wish to have inserted in the RECORD without reading a list of organizations which are just as strongly in favor of the bill. There are two sides to this question. Our great American electorate and citizenry like to take the opposite sides of many questions. There are, in my judgment, a great many more favoring this bill than are opposed to it. In connection with the list which I shall print in the RECORD I particularly call the attention of Senators to the resolution passed in the city of New Orleans on the 18th of last October by the American Legion, the boys of the Army who went overseas to fight. Some of them were anxious to get ships when we did not have any and had to have all our boys carried over to save the world for democracy in ships of foreign nations. I ask unanimous consent to insert the list in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

AMERICAN BUSINESS AND THE SHIPPING BILL.

Representative organizations of American merchants, manufacturers, and other men of business headed by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States have studied the shipping subsidy bill and give their endorsement to the bill or the constructive maritime policies of President Harding. The national chamber, after two referenda of its great membership throughout the country—business men of both political parties—states that it "repeats its recommendation in favor of the aid from the Government which is essential to the maintenance of a privately owned merchant marine. It accordingly asks that Congress expedite consideration of legislation which has in view the accomplishment of these purposes."

The American Bankers' Association at its annual meeting in October declared that "our merchant marine should be developed through individual initiative and not be placed under Government management. We approve the efforts of the President of the United States to bring about such a development."

Business men most familiar with the export trade spoke through the American Manufacturers' Export Association at its October annual meeting, declaring that "we approve the constructive policy of President Harding on the subject of the American merchant marine and pledge ourselves to devote our best energies to securing action along the progressive lines advocated by the President."

Similar action has been taken by many other national organizations of business men and also by the chambers of commerce and boards of trade of all of the larger cities of the United States and of the more important cities and towns in all sections north, south, east, and west. Support has been notably strong in the West and South through the Mississippi Valley Association, the Wisconsin Deep Waterways Commission, and the Iowa Manufacturers' Association, and boards of trade and chambers of commerce of Milwaukee, St. Paul, Omaha, Des Moines, Charleston, Mobile, New Orleans, and Galveston. It is stated that in the entire country not one commercial organization that has considered the shipping bill has failed to approve the bill or the principles embodied in it. Resolutions favoring the shipping bill adopted at the American Legion convention, New Orleans, October 16–20, 1922:

To maintain our ratio 5–5–3 it is necessary to have a sufficient merchant marine. The departments of the Navy and merchant marine should be closely connected so that both could be operated in harmony with one another at a moment's notice. In order that a merchant marine may be aided, to economize on our naval expenses, and to train our regular naval personnel on combatant ships, naval auxiliary vessels should, as far as possible, be chartered from well established merchant lines.

We are heartily in favor of the ship subsidy bill as a means to establish our trade routes. If carried out, the ship subsidy bill will automatically increase the available personnel of the Navy, add materially to the efficiency and strength of the Navy, and at the same time be a great aid to all business throughout the United States.

Since the earliest days of history the control of the trade routes has been a secret of the growth and greatness of all world power, and this country, because of the paltry sum necessary to carry out the requirements of the ship subsidy bill, must not take the place of a decadent nation.

Whereas it appears that foreigners are in command of American ships in preference to Americans, particularly those operated under the United States Shipping Board: Therefore be it

Resolved by the American Legion in national convention assembled, That we urge that the national legislative committee take necessary steps to petition Congress and the Shipping Board to give preference to American citizens in securing officers and men for all ships operated by the United States Shipping Board; and be it further

Resolved, That the posts of the American Legion located at all shipping points be urged to take an especial interest in the affairs of the American merchant marine and the interests of the American seamen.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I wish to read a little parable to the Senate. I am not its author; one of my friends prepared it for me, but it seems to me so apropos that I should like Senators to listen to it if I may have their attention:

A certain farmer with his five sons lived on an island where they raised wheat. They owned a boat big enough to carry the wheat to the mainland market. This boat should have cost not more than

$2,000, but was bought at a time when there were few to be had and it cost them $10,000. There were many boats now, and its market value had dropped to about $1,000—

Note the parity with our present situation.

Mr. BORAH. I can imagine who wrote that.

Mr. RANSDELL. To continue the parable—

The question arose in the family, What should be done about it? The boat was still in excellent condition, but it would cost $1,100 a year to operate it, and mainland boats would carry the grain for $1,000 a year. One of the sons argued that since the other boats would charge $100 less freight, it was obviously bad business to try to compete. He was for charging off the boat to profit and loss and letting it rot. Another believed the boat could be run as cheaply as mainland boats, but he could not produce any figures to show it—

We have had a great deal of that same sort of talk here—

An agent from the mainland came over and tried various arguments and schemes to induce the family to get rid of the boat, and pretty nearly succeeded—

Senators here have surely read a lot of that kind of stuff from "mainland" representatives in this country, camouflaged, of course, but I "jumped" on them so hard here last July on account of their direct accusations against us that they let up on that part of it, although I am satisfied they have been carrying on their attacks all the same—

But the old farmer after hearing all sides of the question called a family council. He said to the boys, "It is true that we paid a high price for the boat and that it can never yield an interest return on the investment—

No more can our Government shipping expenditures yield an interest return—

"but we do own the craft. So the best thing to do is to write off its cost and start afresh. It is true that it will cost $1,100 a year to operate it; but, after all, we own everything necessary to keep it going. It is also true that we can get the same service from the mainland for $1,000. But if we run our boat we can keep that $1,000 in the family, and as a family we will be out only the $100 difference on the cost of shipping our wheat. As a matter of fact, the whole $1,100 will be coming right back to us."

I have just shown you that we have paid out $28,000,000,000 to these foreigners during the last 100 years for carrying our commerce, insurance charges, brokerage, and other things connected with it.

He went on to say that they nearly went broke one year when they had no boat and there was trouble over on the mainland.

SHIP SHORTAGE OF 1914 RECALLED.

I should like my friend from Tennessee, whose constituents nearly went broke because they could not ship their cotton in 1914——

Mr. McKELLAR rose.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am not going to yield now. I will yield to the Senator later as much as he pleases.

Mr. McKELLAR. All right. I want to tell the Senator something about my constituents and their experience with the Shipping Board.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am not going to let the Senator break in on my speech. He took several hours here, and I want him to take all he wants in his own time; but this is my time now.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, if the Senator will not yield I will not say what I had in mind.

Mr. RANSDELL. I was a cotton planter that year, too, and the Senator had a lot of cotton-planter friends, and I know that cotton went down to 5 cents a pound because we did not have any vessels in which to ship it. There was a good deal of demand for it, and if we had just had the ships it would not have gone down that way. That was in the fall of 1914.

There was trouble over on the mainland, and all their shipping was in use carrying soldiers and supplies, and there was none available to run to the island. Another time he wanted a lot of lumber to build a barn. Lumber was cheap on a neighboring island, but having no boat he had to buy it on the mainland at double prices.

The old man's view prevailed. By unanimous vote the family agreed to run their own boat, subsidize it for $100 a year, and thereby save $900 to the family coffers.

Now, are we going to take the old man's advice—use our own ships and put the freight charges in the national pocket, or are we going to quit in the middle of the job and let our competitors ship all that freight money out of the country?

Senators, that is a nice little parable. I hope you will read it carefully, and if it has any fallacies about it that you will pick them apart.

Mr. BORAH. I should be glad to know the author of it, and then I would have more respect for it.

Mr. RANSDELL. He is a very good man, and he is not connected with the Shipping Board. I see what the Senator is driving at. He has no connection with the Shipping Board. The Shipping Board does not know that there is such a document as that which is in my hand.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will he be one of the beneficiaries of the Board.

Mr. RANSDELL. Absolutely not. He is an official of this Government of high rank but not connected with the Shipping subsidy?

NATIONAL DEFENSE THE CRUCIAL POINT.

Now, Senators, I come to the crucial point of this debate, in my judgment. It is not going to be very long. I will not tire you much longer. There is one thing that has not been emphasized much here yet, and that is, What position does our merchant marine occupy in connection with our national defense? Can we maintain a Navy that will enable us to hold our proper place among the naval powers of the world unless we build up and maintain a strong merchant marine? I say "no," and I am going to give you my reasons for it in as clear language as I can.

Situated geographically as we are our national defense rests upon our sea power. The only means of applying our power to influence the action of those who might seek to do us injury is by way of the sea. Bear in mind, Senators, that with the exception of Canada and its few millions to the north, and Mexico with its few millions to the south, all of our intercourse with mankind is by way of the sea. We must carry on our great commerce with the world in ocean-going vessels, except to a limited degree with Canada and Mexico. The only means of insuring our prosperity is through our ability to sell to the rest of the world the surplus products that we can not ourselves consume, and this we can not do except by way of the sea.

We have to-day a foreign trade that has increased by leaps and bounds in the last 10 years. Our foreign trade in 1914 was about $4,000,000,000. In 1920 it was $13,000,000,000, with exports of over $7,000,000,000. We American people are engaged in a foreign trade that is the greatest business in the history of the world, and history shows that such a trade can not long endure without adequate means to maintain and protect it.

War itself is but an ultimate form of economic competition, and for all great wars of the past it is not difficult to trace a basic cause in the friction and bitterness engendered by economic conditions that involve the question of trade. This was preeminently true in regard to the late World War.

A great power, to be truly independent and free from commercial subserviency, needs a great merchant marine to carry its commerce. During peace, with the commercial organization and standards of life as they exist in our country, we must to-day have foreign trade. In order that we may not pay toll to foreign shipping and have our foreign trade at the mercy of competitors, we must have a fair share of our foreign commerce carried by our own merchant marine.

When war comes, and the entire military strength of the Nation is to be exerted, the Navy must draw vessels from the merchant marine for Navy use—cruisers, transports, supply ships of all kinds, and so forth. In addition, the merchant marine must continue the transportation of articles of commerce essential to the welfare of the people as a whole. When we organize for war the Navy and the merchant marine become practically one service administratively. During the World War 95 per cent of our merchant shipping was under Government control, particularly as to cargoes and routes.

As an addition to naval strength, the personnel of the merchant marine—a body of men with the sea habit—is a naval asset, whether in war it be employed on regular naval vessels, or merchant vessels converted to naval use, or whether it remains on merchant shipping for naval or merchant service. When we entered the World War practically our entire fleet had to devote itself to the training of raw recruits in the most elementary duties of the seamen, because we had no merchant reserve to call upon.

All great maritime nations have made provision in some way for taking merchant shipping into the naval service in time of war. This has taken the form of subsidies or subventions, direct or indirect, discriminating rates to further the growth of the merchant marine, and so forth. At least the merchant ships can be listed and classified and plans made for their transfer to the Navy. In 1898 we armed the few large passenger lines we had for distant scouting and general cruiser service. They did what they could, but due to lack of numbers Cervera's fleet cruised at liberty in the West Indies, and was discovered only after it had been in Santiago for some time. Other passenger and freight vessels were converted for blockade and patrol duty. Yachts, and even tugs, were armed and used for blockade and general duties devolving on small craft in war. In addition, there were hospital ships, transports, repair ships, and the entire service of supply—this with a war at our very doorstep, and against a power that was even worse off than we were.

VALUE OF MERCHANT CRUISERS IN WAR.

In the employment of converted merchant ships as cruisers many conditions may arise. Our Navy may be employed in protecting trade routes used by our merchant marine. It may be engaged in raiding the sea lanes used by the enemy, or denying him the use of them. Its operations may or may not lead to fleet actions. Our merchant marine may be carrying on foreign trade, or it may be shut up in port. In any case, the Navy will be short of regular cruisers, and the converted merchantmen must fill the deficiency. As the regular Navy is reduced, the importance of the converted merchantmen increases. A large merchantman, converted to a fighting ship, may carry a battery formidable for a cruiser and have a great fuel endurance, and if there are no regular cruisers available for operations in a particular theater the converted merchantman becomes of prime importance there.

It would be impossible by agreement to prohibit or limit the use of merchant ships as converted vessels of war. Even without previous preparation, a vessel can be converted simply and quickly in about two weeks at a navy yard. The main items of purely military character needed are the guns, mounts, and ammunition, and these are generally in store.

Should navies become small by agreement, and remain so, nations that have funds available will seek to increase their naval strength by adaptation of their merchant shipping to purposes of war. Subventions are given to induce shipping companies to build with reference to war use, and at the same time to foster the growth of the merchant marine, as was done in the case of the Cunard line.

When our old cruisers are scrapped for age we will have only 10 cruisers of the Omaha class. It needs no argument to show that even with such assistance as can be given by destroyers, submarines, and a few aircraft carriers this number will not suffice in war. To supplement the deficiency it will be necessary to convert merchant vessels into auxiliary cruisers for the supply of the fleet, which will by so much reduce the merchant marine for commercial purposes.

Should all regular navies disappear, the large, fast, armed merchantman would be the most powerful fighting ship, and therefore the capital ship.

Secretary Denby said:

If we sank every ship of war in the world at this moment, Great Britain would rule the world beyond a question of doubt. Therefore, from a military standpoint, it seems to me that the creation of an American merchant marine is a vital necessity to our country.

Let me beg, Senators, that you pay close attention to those wise words of our Secretary of the Navy, that from the military standpoint alone a powerful merchant marine is essential to the safety of our country.

BRITAIN'S POWER FOUR TIMES OURS.

The following table brings the situation sharply in relief. The number and speeds of passenger vessels able to make 15 or more knots belonging to the United States, Great Britain, and Japan are tabulated below. I will not read all of them, but just a few of them. I find that the Mauretania, with a speed of 27 knots, belongs to Great Britain. We have no such vessel. The Majestic, with a speed of 26 knots, belongs to Great Britain. We have no such vessel. The Leviathan, with a speed of 25 knots, belongs to us. Great Britain has no counterpart of the Leviathan, but two vessels, the Mauretania and the Majestic, with a speed of 26 to 27 knots, respectively. The Aquitania belongs to Great Britain. She has a speed of 24 knots. The Berengaria and the Olympic belong to Great Britain, each of them with a speed of 23 knots. As an offset, we have one, the H. F. Alexander, with a speed of 23 knots; and so on down the list. I ask to have the balance of the table inserted, without reading.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Speed.	Great Britain.		United States.		Japan.
	Number.	Name.	Number.	Name.
					Number.
27 knots	1	Mauretania
26 knots	1	Majestic
25 knots			1	Leviathan
24 knots	1	Aquitania
23 knots	2	Berengaria and Olympic.	1	H. F. Alexander
22 knots			2	Mount Vernon and Agamemnon.
21 knots	2	Empress Asia and Empress Russia.
20 knots	1	Empress France
19 knots	1	Royal George	1	George Washington	1
18 knots	22		2	Resolute and Reliance (Panama flag).
17 knots	40		19		5
16 knots	47		9		2
15 knots	76		15		15
Total	194		50		23

Mr. RANSDELL. From this it will be noted that Great Britain possesses 194 steel merchant steamers of seagoing charactertistics able to make 15 knots or more, the United States 50 vessels, and Japan 23. Each of that 194 is a potential auxiliary naval cruiser in time of war, and Great Britain has four times as many, practically, as we have. Consequently, in case of war, she would be substantially four times as strong as the United States.

Vessels over 25 years of age have been excluded, for whereas, if not nearly useless, they soon will be. It will readily be seen that Great Britain possesses four times as many fast passenger vessels as the United States. These can readily and quickly be converted into troop transports, scouts, commerce destroyers, and airplane carriers, for which in time of war every big nation would have immediate need. The possession of such ships enables a nation to keep its fighting forces at sea intact and not be compelled to detach units for other than fighting purposes. The possession of a big, fast seagoing merchant marine would enable this country greatly to hamper the foreign and seagoing commerce of an enemy and maintain an economic blockade in an efficient manner. The ability of Great Britain during the past war to accomplish this played a large part in the eventual strangulation of lines of supply into Germany. The comparative impotence of the United States would greatly hamper, if not indefinitely delay, the carrying out of the important naval strategy of any war in which we might be engaged.

Aside from the many auxiliary needs of the fleet, such as colliers, tankers, munition ships, repair ships, hospital ships, tenders, refrigerator ships, distilling ships, and so forth, any big nation at war in the future will find an urgent and enormous need for the transportation of scouting and fighting planes, possibly in vast numbers. Coast-defense planes will play hereafter as little part in modern war as coast-defense guns did during the last conflict. A nation in arms will have need for fast airplane carriers capable of great speeds and radius of action, carrying in their holds great numbers of airplanes for scouting, bombing, and fighting purposes. Certain ships of the passenger type will be peculiarly suited and readily convertible for these purposes. A nation in possession of such possible aircraft carriers will be able to take the offensive at sea without difficulty, and because of its far-flung battle line of air scouts be enabled to make its strategic and tactical dispositions to its own advantage, denying at the same time to the enemy information of the disposition, location, and size of the opposing fleets.

OUR SHIPS LACK THE SPEED.

With the exception of tankers and cargo carriers but few of our merchant vessels possess the requisites necessary to fit them for auxiliary service. Most of them lack speed sufficient for scouts or airplane carriers, while many of these same ships have insufficient radius of action for any duty they would probably be called upon to perform. It is not likely that this country will ever be at war with a power on this continent. Without bases in the area of probable operations great radius of action will be a sine qua non for our auxiliaries.

Neutral shipping may not be available to us for the transportation of the rubber, nitrates, manganese, and tin we are forced to import. Even if available the shipping will only be so at war-time prices. Bottoms enough we now possess, but they are inactive, and those not now considered worthless will soon be so through lack of use and care.

Personnel to man a great merchant fleet will come with the arrival of the ships themselves. In time of national peril we must have them, for the first operations are inevitably those at sea. During the last war the Navy of this country manned hundreds of ships, which should have been manned by sailormen taken or recruited from the merchant marine or a reserve. Without the possession of either class this country was suddenly forced to denude its fighting craft of men long trained to fight and place many of them upon vessels not destined to be combatant. Hundreds of thousands of green men were trained ashore and afloat, seriously handicapping the war vessels and rendering many of them incapable of taking part in a successful action. What our suddenly expanded Navy would have done without the buttress of the English Grand Fleet while we were using our seamen for the personnel of transports, cargo carriers, tankers, and other noncombatant ships can only be conjectured. Great Britain, on the other hand, with a large population long accustomed to the sea, either as merchantmen sailors or as fishermen, soon fell back upon a trained reserve. This is another cogent reason for a merchant marine.

When President Roosevelt in 1907 sent the United States Atlantic Fleet around the world, this fleet consisting only of 16 battleships, 6 destroyers—that went only as far as the Pacific coast—and 3 auxiliary vessels, there were at that time only 5 United States colliers with which to fuel the fleet. To make this voyage possible we were dependent on the services of 50 colliers under foreign flag that supplied a total of 320,390 tons of coal, whereas our own colliers supplied over 26,418 tons. This was in a time of profound peace, when the fleet received a friendly welcome in every port and was able to purchase its food and supplies in every market. The impossibility of performing such a feat in time of war was apparent to none more than to President Roosevelt, who repeatedly called the attention of Congress to the military necessity of a merchant marine in support of the Navy.

It is estimated that in time of war to maintain our fleet in Philippine waters would require a minimum of 200 colliers and tankers for fuel alone. This leaves out of consideration vessels required for cargo ships, ammunition ships, repair ships, hospital ships, distilling ships, and so forth, that would be required to maintain the fleet itself, without directly supplementing its fighting strength, and which we should rely on obtaining only from our own merchant marine.

When we entered the World War in April, 1917, after that war had been in progress for nearly three years, we were confronted with the problem of transporting an army to Europe. Although there were ultimately transported 2,079,880 troops across the Atlantic, 1,027,300 of them were carried in foreign ships, principally British. By using our own battleships and pre-war transports we were able to transport only 76,812. Thanks to our use of the ex-German vessels, which, fortuitously, had sought refuge in our ports in 1914, there were transported 566,921. Ultimately, by the seizure of the Dutch vessels, which were also lying in our ports, we carried an additional 36,949. Privately owned American vessels transported 237,371, and the Shipping Board was able to transport 34,728, making a total of 925,781 eventually carried across by these various agencies that we were operating. Were it not for these peculiar circumstances, which we can not reasonably hope would ever be repeated, there would have been probably transported not more than 300,000 men, which would have been too few to have effected military results. We may well shudder to think what the neglect of our merchant marine might have meant to us and to the world.

When war breaks out every navy must turn at once to its merchant marine to supplement the fighting strength of its fleet. Large numbers of vessels are required at once as mine layers, mine sweepers, submarine tenders, destroyer tenders, patrol vessels, subchasers, and the like. In addition, as we have seen, an enormous transport service would be required if the operations were to be conducted overseas.

At the opening of the war there were in the Navy 344 vessels of all classes, with 75,074 men. When the war ended there were 2,202 vessels, with a total of 500,000 men. Eighteen months were required to assemble a force that should have been immediately available. Due to antisubmarine operations, the numbers of vessels in the British fleet was probably over double this number.

CRUISERS MOST SERIOUS MATTER.

But the situation of the United States as affects the national defense is most serious, when we consider the question of cruisers. Of modern cruisers capable of making 27 knots or better the United States has none, Great Britain has 44, and Japan has 10. Of those building or projected, the United States has 10, Great Britain 4, and Japan 15.

When we consider that Great Britain has, in addition, 194 modern passenger vessels capable of making 15 knots or better, all of which are capable of transformation into cruisers, while the United States has only 50, we at once see how fallacious is our estimate of equality of naval strength with Great Britain. If we consider the great passenger vessels of 18 knots or above, which would be capable of overtaking and destroying 99 per cent of the merchant ships afloat, we see that Great Britain has 31, where we have but 7. In addition, the naval bases which Great Britain has established all over the world, providing fuel and repair facilities, gives her great merchant fleet a mobility that none of our ships could enjoy.

The object of a navy in time of war is to gain control of the sea in order that one's transportation may proceed uninterrupted while that of the enemy is immobilized. To obtain this control it is necessary to fight for it and destroy the enemy's offensive power. But once command of the sea is achieved, it is necessary to have a very large force of cruisers in order to exercise that control. There is no military object to be gained in the destruction of the enemy's fleet if we are not prepared to reap the fruits of the victory by driving his merchant fleet from the ocean. It is not probable that we will ever have cruisers enough to accomplish this end, so our only recourse is to have at hand sufficient fast merchant ships on which to draw in time of war to supplement our cruiser force so that the sea may be made safe for our trade. What other guaranty have we that our vast foreign trade in which we are engaged—the greatest in the history of the world—shall not collapse in time of war. For if we are not able to drive the enemy's cruisers off the sea the billions of exports and imports, which are the lifeblood of the Nation, will be lost by us to the enemy.

The ship subsidy bill is a plant of national defense insurance. It hurts no interests that are our interests. What we pay to foreigners for carrying our freight is nothing more or less than a subsidy to the foreigner. Why pay him and deny our own people? The powerful interests that are seeking to dissuade the United States from maintaining a merchant marine are playing their own game. They are not seeking our welfare but their own. In time of war they would be found ranged alongside our enemies. At a stupendous cost this merchant marine was constructed. If it is not maintained, another fleet, at extravagant cost, must be constructed sooner or later. But the advantage of maintaining the fleet that we have and not waiting for war to build another is that, while adding to our national prosperity, we are providing a national insurance against future disaster and possible defeat.

Mr. President and Senators, I thank you for your patient attention to me.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, bearing upon the proposition suggested by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], I want to call attention to page 124, volume 1, of the hearings where is set forth the report of a survey of the Shipping Board's people with reference to the differential in wage and subsistence cost between American and foreign vessels. Then there will be found the tables on page 167 to which I cited the Senator from Ohio a moment ago.

On page 458 of the hearings will be found a statement of wages in national currency. This shows the wages on Shipping Board vessels, wages on privately owned vessels, and wages on British, Japanese, French, Spanish, Italian, and German ships.

Then on page 161 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of November 24 of the last session will be found several statements with reference to various ships, showing the wages paid on American and British ships, and so on.

I understand that these tables were prepared by the Shipping Board people and they are brought right up to date, and that they are taken from the actual pay rolls of the vessels coming into our ports at the close of their voyages. I think they will furnish just as definite information to the Senator from Ohio and to the Senate with reference to wages paid crews on ships as can be found.

I want to call attention to the fact that it will be found from the tables referred to that not all the difference, but the great difference, in the pay of the crews of British ships and American ships comes from the difference in pay of the licensed officers of the ships. For instance, from the table it is found that the licensed officers of an American ship are paid $1,390 a month in the aggregate, and the licensed officers of a British ship are paid $746.70 a month in the aggregate. There is a difference against the American ship of $643.30 a month, or for the year a difference against the American ship in operation of $7,719.60.

Mr. McKELLAR. In reply to the statement just made by the Senator from Washington it seems that the principal difference in the cost of labor is in the cost of the labor of the officers of the ships. That could be obviated by the Congress itself if it so desired without interfering with the general labor at all.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does the Senator mean that Congress should reduce the pay of officers on American ships?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think so. It seems to me that $16,680 a year is a pretty good salary for an officer on a ship. It is more than twice as much as a Senator gets and more than the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States gets. These salaries of the licensed officers should not be included in estimating cost of labor on our ships. I take it that the $35,000-a-year chief of operations felt he must be liberal in fixing the salaries of the licensed officers. All of which goes to show how easy it is to be liberal with the taxpayers' money. No wonder the present Shipping Board is confessing that it can do nothing but lose money on our shipping operations.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the motion which is now before the Senate, as I understand, is the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to displace the ship subsidy bill by the bill which he has introduced with reference to agricultural legislation. I want to address myself briefly to the motion, but before I do so I am going to digress for a moment to consider the last argument presented by the able Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] that the ship subsidy proposition is, in fact, another phase of preparedness and that the necessity for greater preparedness is an unanswerable argument for the building up of a merchant marine at the expense of the American taxpayer. It would seem that the strongest argument they have to present is that we prepare at once and hastily for war.

If that be true and if that is the strongest argument in favor of it, then the ship subsidy ought to be able to wait until we can deal with another interest in this country which can not very well wait. I observe in the President's message delivered to the Congress a few days since this paragraph, which ought to dispel the increasing alarm of the Senator from Louisiana:

> I bring you no apprehension of war. The world is abhorrent of it, and our own relations are not only free from every threatening cloud but we have contributed our larger influence toward making armed conflict less likely.

Now imagine, Mr. President, the dire distress of the advocates of subsidies, arguing it on the basis of preparedness, in the face of that message from the Chief Executive and the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States. "No cloud in the sky; no threat anywhere." In fact, while it was assuring, it was not necessary for the President to tell us that. He only repeated what is apparent to all who observe the present situation. And yet the closing appeal of those arguing for the ship subsidy is that we must prepare for war.

I read another sentence from the message of the Chief Executive:

> The four-power pact, which abolishes every probability of war on the Pacific, has brought new confidence in a maintained peace, and I can well believe it might be made a model for like assurances wherever in the world any common interests are concerned.

The four-power pact was a pact offered by the President and his advisers to insure peace on the Pacific. Although it has not yet been ratified, we are told that its influence has been such that peace has preceded the ratification of the treaty and that the Pacific, from whence it was supposed some threatenings of difficulty were to be heard, is now in a peaceful status. Everything is peaceful, the war clouds have been chased out of the sky, and still millions more must be hurriedly put upon the taxpayer to make ready for war.

Where is the necessity, Mr. President, for going further into the Treasury of the United States upon the question of preparedness? Is there danger from Germany, which is slithering down day by day to deeper ruin and misery? Is there danger from Russia? Is there danger from England, from France, from Japan? From what source comes the menace that there should be heard here in the Senate Chamber day after day and from the rostrum throughout the country week after week this cry of preparedness? Tax the American people a little more. Lay on an additional burden. War is imminent. It occurs to me, Mr. President, that it has reached a point of sublime absurdity. If the gentlemen who are arguing it do not think so they had better present it again in the coming campaign to the American voter, who is already overburdened with unbearable taxes.

Let me call your attention to the fact that this year, according to the Budget presented, we are to spend about $300,000,000 on the Navy. Is it necessary to go beyond that, in view of the fact, as the President tells us, that there is no threatening cloud anywhere? In 1914 we expended less than $170,000,000 upon the Navy. Now, four years after the World War, at a time when the whole world is in distress and overburdened with taxes, when the real disturbance is not that of war between nations but war between peoples and governments on account of oppression from fearful burdens of debt, we are expending $300,000,000 upon the Navy. We are told, in addition to that, that the just argument for a departure from our national policy in granting subsidies to ships is to increase our preparedness. While we are expending $300,000,000 this year for the Navy we are expending $24,876,000 for agriculture.

How long, Mr. President, can we continue that kind of program? I advise my friends, in all seriousness, that if this subsidy proposition can not be sustained upon the theory that it is to aid American business, American agriculture, to aid in the restoration of those activities which are absolutely essential to the economic life of the Nation, it had better be abandoned. We shall expend this year, Mr. President, for war purposes, $2,650,000,000; for agriculture, $24,876,000; for the public health, $15,877,000; for promotion of education, $10,151,000; for labor interests, $4,718.00; to study the causes of and the remedy for war, not one cent.

However, it was not my purpose, Mr. President, to do other than to refer briefly to the real merits and demerits of the measure to-day. Later, if the bill remains before the Senate, I shall discuss the merits.

I have stated a motion has been made to displace the pending bill and to take up another kind of legislation, designed to aid in some way the agricultural interests of the country.

The pending measure was withheld from consideration prior to the election. It was so withheld, as we all understood and as we all know, for the reason that it was thought unsafe and politically inexpedient to force it to a vote prior to the election. It seemed to be a matter of reluctance upon the part of the other body to vote upon the measure and to go home at once to see their constituents with reference to returning. Therefore, while the other House had ample time in which to consider the measure—much more time at their disposal than they gave to it when they did come to consider it—they passed it by until after the election. Now it is proposed, between the time when the election took place and the time in which the new Congress comes into power, to pass this measure; a thing which, to my mind, is not only unjust and unfair but, if one may consider it from the other standpoint, politically most inexpedient.

If this measure can rest upon its merits, can stand the test of debate, if it is in accordance with the wisdom and the wishes of the American people, there will be ample time to pass it after the Congress has come into power which was elected after the ship subsidy question was made an issue in this country. I am aware, of course, that Congress has technically the right to legislate just the same between now and the 4th of March that it had previously, and upon all ordinary legislation and routine matters, of course, it would make no difference; but here is a measure which has to do with establishing, in a sense, a new policy in this country, a measure upon which there is a wide difference of opinion and one upon which the voters of the country feel deeply. Such a measure should await the new Congress. A great national policy should not be forced in a way that savors of bad faith with the people who have to pay the heavy taxes to maintain the policy. Aside, therefore, from the technical right to enact the measure, if we have the votes to do so, it is certainly inexpedient to force a change of policy in the country between the time the election is held and the new Congress is coming into power.

Mr. President, that is not the most serious feature of it. It is not only proposed to enact this legislation by a dying Congress, but it is proposed, in so far as it is in the power of those favoring the measure to do so, to take out of the hands of the new Congress or of any other Congresses the power to control the execution of the bill when it becomes a law. It is proposed to take from Congress the power to control by appropriations the money necessary to execute the law. Every method and means possible for a bill to carry has been written into the pending measure to make it impossible or embarrassing for the future Congress in any sense to control its execution. It is not, therefore, alone the proposition of enacting such a measure, but the terms of the bill are such as to make it obnoxious, for the reason that it is an attempt to control the action of future Congresses. I now read a statement from the report of the committee, which is found upon pages 2 and 3, and which is as follows:

> The provision in the House requiring specific appropriations from the merchant-marine fund to be made annually by Congress has been stricken from the bill. This is vital to its success. One main object of the bill is to bring about the purchase by private parties of the ships owned by the Government. This will require capital, which must be secured from banks and those who are willing to invest in shipping securities. This can not be borrowed by proposed purchasers and operators of the ships if there is the least uncertainty of the payment of the compensation provided in the bill. By reason of the changing of the political complexion of Congress and because of the bitter opposition to aid of this kind to shipping, no man would loan his money upon security of this kind, and thus one of the great purposes of the bill would be defeated.

In other words, Mr. President, recognizing the opposition in this country to the bill, recognizing the opposition to the policy which it involves, and recognizing the possible change of political complexion, both without our party and within our party, after it comes into power on the 4th of March, it is stated that the right to control the appropriations incident to the bill is absolutely vital to its success; that, if possible, the power must be taken away from future Congresses. This is the most interesting confession I have ever seen recorded in the solemn archives of this body, "change in political complexion;" in other words, the people must not be permitted to change this sacred law, it must be put beyond the reach of the taxpayer. He is to be yoked to his task and only the merciful consideration of those who are to receive the subsidy shall remove the yoke. A dying Congress is to fasten on the burden and the new Congress is not to be allowed to lift the burden.

I submit to my Republican friends upon this side of the Chamber, we have trifled with our 7,000,000 majority about as long as we ought to. In the short space of two years we have about dissipated a majority of 7,000,000. My friends, it takes two things to make a party: First, you may have your organization; but, secondly, it is absolutely necessary to have votes; and the program which it is now proposed to carry out, an attempt to put over a measure which it is conceded the next Congress in all probability will not enact, is about as inexpedient politically, aside from its injustice and its unwisdom, as anything I can well imagine.

It is not for me to advise those who have in hand the running of the party of which I am an humble member, but there are some things, Mr. President, so utterly plain that a wayfaring man, though a fool, may see; and one of those things is that the passage of this measure between now and the 4th day of March will not settle the question at all and will arouse the already pronounced opposition to greater opposition. If the new Congress, which has been elected upon this issue, should pass its judgment upon this matter, the American people, recognizing the right of a majority to legislate, would in all probability accede to that judgement; but a dying Congress, a Congress elected upon another issue, undertaking to tie the hands of the incoming Congress, will not settle this question at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I will yield in a moment. I venture to say that if there shall be an extra session after the 4th of March, at that extra session, should this bill pass, there will be a bill to repeal it introduced before the extra session is 24 hours old.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course, the Senator is in the highest degree possessed of intellectual integrity. I know that; I have known it for years and I am glad to know it; but is not the Senator unconsciously making a little misstatement there?

Mr. BORAH. Perhaps so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is not the same thing, because if this bill is passed now under this accidental majority and the next Congress should by a majority repeal it, as it undoubtedly would, it would require a two-thirds majority to overcome the President's veto, and the President is committed to the measure.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator carried my argument a little further than I carried it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I carried it to the constitutional limit.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; but what I said was that the passage of the bill at this time would not settle the question, for, whether we have votes enough to pass it or not, it would be a live issue here and a matter of agitation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It would be a live issue and a matter of agitation, but it would not be a live issue as a matter of legislation, for it would remain upon the statute books, because, although a majority might want to repeal it, they could not muster a two-thirds majority to overcome the President's veto.

Mr. BORAH. Of course the Senator is correct in his construction of the matter if he carries it to that extent, and as a matter of logic it must necessarily go to that extent. I concede that proposition.

But, Mr. President, another equally serious proposition in regard to this legislation at this time is this:

We have only until the 4th of March to pass the appropriation bills and to legislate on other subjects during the time when we are not actually considering appropriation bills. It is very clear that if this bill stays upon the calendar we are not going to have any time to consider as they ought to be considered other measures. We may pass through some hurried legislation with reference to farm credits or the agricultural interests, or with reference to transportation; but no one knows better than those who are dealing with those subjects that if we should give all the time between now and the 4th of March to those two subjects, which are absolutely essential to the economic life of this country during the next few years, we would not have sufficient time to deal with them effectually or properly.

There is no more intricate or difficult question with which to deal than that of rehabilitating the agricultural interests of this country. There is no more vexed or involved problem than that of providing sufficient and efficient transportation for this country; and yet while those two matters wait, pushed aside, we are hastening to pass a subsidy bill which will not in the least, in my opinion, as I shall undertake to show later, assist those whom a proper transportation system or a proper agricultural system would assist.

When are we going to legislate upon those two subjects? The President has told us that he does not want an extra session. Is it seriously proposed to take up practically all the time between now and the 4th of March to pass appropriation bills and a ship subsidy bill, and to let Congress stand adjourned until the 3d of next December and leave the farmers of this country in the situation in which they are now found? Why, my good friends, if you do that you will not have enough votes at the next election to count. Ship subsidy, whatever its merits or demerits may be, can wait. It will be just as beneficial to the people six months from now as it is now; and, notwithstanding the argument, not a dollar will be saved in the meantime with reference to the running of the ships by reason of its passage. The farmer, however, can not wait. The cropping time is coming. He must have his security, he must have his aid, he must have his outlook for better transportation, or the decrease in acreage in this country during the next year will be startling to the American people. Therefore, whatever the merits of this bill may be, it should be put aside until we can deal with those things which are immediate, imminent, and menacing if measures to deal with them are not perfected.

What is it that the American farmer just now needs? First of all, he needs to get to the seashore, to the ports, or to the markets. It is transportation by land which is now bothering the American farmer more than anything else.

I have here, I think, if I can put my hand upon it, a statement of something of the condition which confronts the farmers of the far West with reference to freight rates. There is no need of building ships under the present condition of affairs if it is impossible under the land transportation condition to reach the ships. In order to keep from freezing to death we are charged $202.50 for every 50-ton car of lump coal brought to us from Utah; that is, to Idaho from the near-by State of Utah. Seven hundred dollars is demanded for every car of binding twine shipped to us; $704 is demanded for every 40-ton car of wheat which leaves the station headed for Galveston—the seashore. Those are the conditions; and that, of course, is simply an indication of what the conditions are with which we ought to deal, if we can, and deal immediately.

The able Senator occupying the chair [Mr. CUMMINS in the chair] has given a vast amount of time to this subject of freight rates and railroad legislation; and no immediate, quick remedy seems to be in sight. It will take some time to deal with it; but we have bills pending relieving another situation with reference to the agricultural interest which ought to be taken up and considered.

The second thing which the farmer needs above all things is a market. After he reaches the seashore and after he has found his market there is an abundance of ships to carry it from the seashore to the markets. But where are the markets? There are now 22,000,000 gross tons of shipping lying idle, waiting to carry the products of the American farm or the products of the American producer to the markets if the markets can be found. It is not a want of transportation across the water; it is not a want of water carriage; it is inability to reach the seashore on account of freight rates and inability to find a market which is now distressing the country from one end of it to the other.

So, Mr. President, it occurs to me that it is only the part of expediency, the part of justice and of wisdom, to put aside this measure now, and take up the bill which is proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS.] If it is not satisfactory, it can be made so by discussion and debate or by substitution; but we ought to address ourselves to the question of legislating upon those subjects of farm credits and railroad transportation rather than to deal exclusively with a matter which ought not to come up at this session at all, and which, if it is to come up at any time, can just as well come up after the new Congress comes into power.

Mr. President, I said that the thing which the American farmer desires now to find is a market. It is not carrying capacity upon the water that is wanted. The trouble is not the inability to find shipping; it is the inability to find a market abroad and the inability to reach the farmer's own home market by reason of freight transportation. There is no reason which occurs to me why this measure should be pushed in ahead of this other legislation. Of course I would not be misunderstood for a moment as being in favor at any time of a ship subsidy; but, if I were in favor of it, it seems to me that I would be willing to let it go to a test before a Congress which was elected after the issue was raised and after we had disposed of legislation which is far more imminent and far more necessary at the present juncture of affairs.

The farmer will soon be planting his crops, if he is going to plant at all. With his crops now rotting in the ground from last year's planting, with his potatoes rotting, with inability to find markets, with no assurance as to credit to carry him over, with no assurance as to transportation, what do you think the effect would be upon the farming interests of this country if we should adjourn upon the 4th of March without doing anything except imposing some additional taxes?

Later, Mr. President, I shall discuss the merits of the bill, if necessary; but this is all I desire to say at this time. I feel most sincerely that we ought to give all the time at our disposal from now until March 4 to relieving the agricultural conditions and to the vital problem of transportation. These matters are pressing. If relief is not had and speedily the loss, the widespread injury, will be almost incalculable. We have promised to deal with these matters and let us speedily and in good faith keep our pledge.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate closes its business for the day it recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow. I suggest the hour of 12 o'clock because of the meeting of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent that when the Senate closes its session to-day it take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] desires to address the Senate. Just a few minutes ago he went out after some documents and papers; and I think, in order to give him notice, I will suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	France	Lenroot	Robinson
Ball	Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Sheppard
Bayard	George	McKellar	Shortridge
Borah	Glass	McKinley	Simmons
Brookhart	Gooding	McLean	Smith

Curtis	Kendrick	Phipps	Wadsworth

Dillingham	King	Pomerene	Weller
Ernst	Ladd	Ransdell	Williams
Fletcher	La Follette	Reed, Mo.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BROOKHART obtained the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa has just hurried in, and he will excuse me a moment while I make one or two statements with reference to this motion, while he is arranging his data before proceeding.

I hope the motion made by the Senator from Nebraska will prevail. In saying that I do not mean to say that I am in favor of the bill reported by the Senator from Nebraska just as it is. I do not understand that the Senator from Nebraska insists that that bill shall pass without the change of a word or a sentence in it. I do believe that if an amendment can be offered to the bill which would better it in any respect the Senator from Nebraska would welcome such an amendment. I am in favor of taking the bill up because it brings the whole subject of agricultural finance before the Senate, and that is a subject of vital importance to-day.

When that bill is laid before the Senate, as I hope it will be, then it will be open to such modification and changes and to such discussion as will result, I believe, in legislation which will relieve the distressing conditions which prevail with reference to agriculture all over the country, and which is fairly well set forth in the report of the Secretary of Agriculture which has recently been submitted.

I therefore hope the motion will prevail, in order that this whole subject may come before the Senate now, and may be fully discussed and considered, with the prospect that legislation beneficial in character, and meeting the needs of the farmers of the country, will result before this session closes.

I wanted to say that, in explaining that while I shall vote for the motion to take up the bill as reported by the Senator from Nebraska, it does not follow that I shall support all the provisions of that bill, or shall not support amendments or modifications which may be suggested, which I believe the Senator himself would welcome.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BROOKHART. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will ask the Senator to permit an interruption for about three or four minutes. As the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] just explained his position, I want to explain mine; not that I think the country cares a particle about my position. On the 4th of March I am going out, and I rather thank God that I am.

Mr. President, I did not think it was within the power of human ingenuity to originate any sort of a bill to present to this body, while I was a member of it, for which my vote was asked in preference to the ship subsidy bill that I would not vote for; but the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has accomplished the impossible. I think of all the bad things I know of, a ship subsidy bill is about the worst, and when I see a man who pretends to belong to the holy, sacred new party which is standing for special privileges to none and equal opportunities to all, and find him advocating a bill even worse than the ship subsidy while he is opposing the ship subsidy upon the ground that it is special privilege and a taxation of equal opportunity, I find myself in an awful sort of a fix.

For me, I could not imagine a worse position than being reduced to a condition of nonaction. I have always thought that the Scriptures were right about the neutral; he is the most contemptible creature in the world. A man ought to be on one side or he ought to be on the other. He ought to vote with God or he ought to vote with Mammon, and I find myself to-day where I am absolutely a neutral and self-contemptible.

Nobody who is a Democrat, nobody who believes in special privilege for none and equal opportunities for all, could vote for the ship subsidy bill, and nobody who believes that this is a Government of limited powers and delegated powers could vote for the Norris bill, which involves the idea that the Federal Government is to become a commission merchant at a possible percentage to deal in agricultural products, to buy and sell them, and an owner and operator of elevators and a warehouseman—mighty near as bad as—

> The bo'sun tight and the midshipmite,
> And the crew of the captain's gig.

The old Ocala platform which the Populist Party adopted 30 years ago in this country was an angel of light in comparison with the Norris bill. After nearly 30 years of public service I have the honor to say that I still believe that the best government in the world is the government which a man exercises over himself. I still have the honor to believe, with Thomas Jefferson, and even with George Washington, that the power of government over the individual and over business ought to be restricted; and I still believe with Thomas Jefferson—not to the extent to which he went, but to some extent, at any rate—that "the least-governed people is the best-governed people."

I would not want to live in a country where the State government under which I lived, much less the Federal Government, should be my commission merchant and my warehouseman and elevator dealer. Government is one thing; individual affairs constitute another thing. I never for one moment have surrendered to the idea that government has a right to carry on private business. I do not mean by that that I have not gone very far in the other direction during war times. Government has a right then to carry on a lot of things which hitherto have been called private business. I believe the Government has a right then to carry on a lot of quasi public business of every sort. But to put the Government in the pawnbroking business, to put the Government in the warehousing business, to put the Government in the elevator business, to put the Government out as a competitor against every man in the world engaged in any sort of business strikes me as an absolute prostitution of the purposes of all government.

Mr. President, government was not intended to be you and me. Government was intended to restrain you and me from transgressing against one another. Government was not intended to carry on the business of a nation. Government was to see that in carrying on the business of a nation justice and fair dealing and honor were maintained. I say honor, although, so far as I know, the idea that honor should be maintained in private business has never been suggested as a question of government regulation, but I believe in it. I believe, Mr. President, that the State or the municipality or the Federal Government or somebody ought to provide that whenever a man tells a lie in selling anything he ought to be subject to being sent to the penitentiary for having "got money under false pretenses" when he told the lie. That is rather a new ground, too. But that is at least a Government regulation of private enterprise in order to bring about honesty between A and B and C and D in carrying on private enterprise.

But to prostitute the Government to being a pawnbroker, to being a commission merchant, to being an elevator owner or elevator seller or elevator warehouseman is a totally different thing. So far as I am concerned, I would just as soon live in Prussia as to live in any country, whether my own or any other, that undertook to say that the Government had the right to carry on with me every sort of business.

Mr. President, Senators may say that they are not contending that the Government has a right to carry on any sort of business or every sort of business; but if they say by law, as the Norris bill will say if it is ever enacted, that the Government has the right to be a warehouseman or elevator owner, that it has a right to buy and to sell agricultural products for export or for import or for domestic storing, then they have substantially said that Government ought to take the place of the individual citizen in every private enterprise.

God knows I did not know that there was anything mean enough, contemptible enough, low enough, radical enough, sovietistical enough to make me hesitate when the question was presented as to whether I should vote for it to take the place of a ship subsidy bill; but the Senator from Nebraska, out of his own radical ingenuity, has originated something that does bring me to that point. Mr. President, I want to announce that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], with whom I am paired, is at perfect liberty to vote on this question. I would consider myself absolutely disgraced if I ever voted to let the ship subsidy bill keep its place against the Norris bill or if I ever voted to allow the Norris bill to take the place of the ship subsidy bill. I shall, therefore, not vote for either of the eternal and everlasting monstrosities from the standpoint in which I have been taught to view them.

I have been taught by my English-speaking ancestry in Great Britain and here to believe that man was not made for government, but that government was made for man, and that government is a mere instrumentality which man exercises in the interest of the liberty and of the freedom and of the happiness of all, and not for the sake of the special privilege of any. And believing that, I could not vote for a ship subsidy which would give to a class already enjoying a monopoly of the coastwise trade of America in shipbuilding and in ship operation and in ship owning, to the utmost extent the Federal power could give it, a likewise monopoly in foreign commerce. Speaking of special privileges, it is the worst that I can dream of. Thinking that about it, Senators can imagine how astonished I was to learn that even the Senator from Nebraska could originate something that could vie in infamy, in my opinion, with its infamy.

There are men who do not believe in a protective tariff because it gives special privileges to certain classes by enabling them to tax the entire people through the higher prices of their products. But I find some of these same men want to extend the monopoly of the shipbuilding business beyond the coastwise trade, where it already has infamous lodgment, to the entire commerce of the world, so far as the United States Government can extend it.

When the question comes as to my selection of which of those two bills is the greater evil I shall solemnly confess in the presence of God and of all men that I do not know, and therefore I shall not vote upon the question, but I shall leave the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] free to vote as he pleases without my pair.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, the pending motion to proceed with the immediate consideration of the agricultural marketing bill and thereby displace consideration of the ship subsidy bill gives to the Senate itself the direct power to determine whether the short session of Congress shall be used to consider the great questions of agricultural credit and marketing as against the question of changing a government merchant marine to a private merchant marine sustained by Government aid.

The question is presented under peculiar and unusual circumstances. It follows a general election in which both the agricultural and merchant marine questions were at issue. The universal result of the election was an emphatic demand for immediate and effective relief to agriculture by legislative action upon both credit and marketing. At the same time by a very large majority the people decided against Government aid to privately owned shipping. Good proof of this is found in the vote of the House of Representatives when the shipping bill passed by but 24 majority. Sixty-nine Members voting for the bill will be displaced in the next Congress by new Members opposed to it, thus giving a real majority of 90 against it.

This voice of the people, so clearly expressed at the ballot box, is the sovereign power of our Government. It is entitled to more than mere respect and consideration. It is entitled to obedience from every department of the Government. In spite of this sovereign command from the people of the United States, the President has seen fit to call the Congress in extra session and to urge the passage of the shipping bill to the practical exclusion of agricultural legislation. Republican leadership in both Houses has adopted the same view. I regret this exceedingly, and I can only regard it as a filibuster against the sovereign voice of the American people. I do not believe in the filibuster, and, above all, I do not believe in a filibuster against the supreme mandate of the people themselves. The issues in this case are so great, and the subject of such vital and urgent importance to the farmers of the United States, that I shall fight the filibuster to the utmost. I am ready to fight it upon its own ground and with its own weapons. Its only chance of victory is in the technical rules keeping retiring Members here until the 4th of March. Its sure defeat is in the technical rule of unlimited debate. When the Republican leadership places itself beyond and above the voice of the common people, it is not only inviting defeat in this Congress, but abdicating its right to organize the next, and is pulling down upon itself dire disaster in the elections that follow.

This voice of the common people is not new, but it is becoming exceedingly efficient. The common people may now be definitely identified as the farmers, the laborers with hand or brain, the soldiers, and the mothers, united upon a common ground for the common purpose of achieving the political and economic rights of the common people. This collective thought has decided that Government aid to private enterprises for profit is fundamentally wrong. It has further decided that present economic conditions are disastrously oppressive to agriculture and in a large measure are produced by improper laws and unwise governmental action.

One of the best illustrations in support of this conclusion is the transportation act. This ill-fated law is the first great Government grant of subsidies to the profits of private enterprises, and in this case for the operation of a public utility. Under the common and constitutional law the public utility has a guaranty of the right to charge rates high enough to yield a reasonable or adequate return upon its honest investment, subject, however, to the paramount rights of the public. Under the transportation act this rule of rate making is changed and the paramount rights of the public are eliminated. The commission is now commanded to levy the rates high enough to yield a return of 6 per cent upon a valuation of $18,800,000,000, and for the first six months the deficit is guaranteed out of the Treasury of the United States. No reactionary leader in Congress and no reactionary newspaper ever called this state socialism; but if the farmers could have had a like guaranty during the first six months of their deflation it would have saved them $7,000,000,000 and would have prevented widespread agricultural bankruptcy. Such a "wild" act as this, however, would have made the thrones of Wall Street tremble and filled its sympathetic newspapers with the red ink of Bolshevism. The guaranty of a half billion dollars to 8,000 millionaires to keep full the measure of their war profits is a wise, businesslike, conservative, and patriotic use of the Public Treasury, but the guaranty of the cost of production to 7,000,000 farmers for a crop produced at the command of their Government at the oppressive cost of war prices is unwise, socialistic, and treasonable. This distinction is easily explained by the corporation lawyer, whose supermind lifts it up into a superworld of legal thought, but the common sense of the common man will never understand it.

For the next year and a half the commission was commanded without discretion to levy rates that would pay all operating expenses and yield a net return of 6 per cent upon this full valuation.

This it tried and failed, because the operating expenses climbed up to the sky and the common people went broke and were unable to pay the bill upon any rates whatsoever. Since then the rate has been reduced to 5½ per cent, and if the farmers and laboring people ever get money enough it will all be collected.

The valuation of $19,000,000,000, in round numbers, as the basis of rates is unjust. It was made under the rules set forth in this law. Since it was made the railway executives themselves published a statement of the editor of the Wall Street Journal to the effect that the total railway securities were selling on the market for $12,000,000,000. This means that all the stocks and all the bonds representing the entire value of all the railroads in all the United States can be bought on the market for $7,000,000,000 less than the valuation fixed by this law.

This is the first time that watered value has been legalized. We have always had watered stocks and watered bonds, but they had to shift for themselves. This water value is now given the sanction of law, and it will cost the American people $400,000,000 a year to pay the return upon it. The transportation act should be repealed, and the water pumped out by the simple provision that the valuation of the railroads shall not exceed the market value of their securities.

The law makes no attempt to stop the capitalization of the unearned increment of property value of the railroads. This value is created by the general public, the same public that must guarantee the reasonable or adequate return to the railroads. It belongs to the public, and its capitalization should be prohibited by affirmative provision of law.

What has accrued in the past may become a vested right, but even that is disputed by good lawyers and by better common sense. In the future it will amount to three hundred or four hundred million dollars a year; and the capitalization of that the law can prevent.

The railroads are now getting over $10,000,000,000 of the bonded portion of their capital at less than 4½ per cent. Under the present transportation law we must pay them 5½ per cent, or a bonus of about $150,000,000 a year. This is unjust. The law should define an adequate or reasonable return so that it shall not exceed the interest rate on the bonded portion of the capital.

Other gigantic items are excessive profits of subsidiary corporations and the waste of competition. These certainly amount to several hundred million dollars per year. Altogether there is an excessive charge upon the American people of perhaps more than $1,200,000,000 per year, without considering the wages of any man who works.

I have not taken up the railroad law with a view of discussing it in full detail, but only for the purpose of showing that under that law the Government itself has imposed these excessive burdens upon the American farmer and is to that extent to blame for his present plight.

I wish to conclude this part of my statement with a review of the psychology that produced this law. The roads were being operated by the Government. I do not question the integrity of the Director General of Railroads; he was both able and loyal to his country; but down below him, perhaps, below his possible personal touch, were managing officers who were neither loyal to him nor to the Government of the United States. They served the owners of the railroads. They wanted to discredit Government operation so that the roads would be turned back. They were traitors as truly as was Benedict Arnold. They deliberately muddled and mixed up the service. They hired excessive numbers of inefficient employees and paid them excessive wages for the deliberate purpose of increasing operating expenses. They advertised their own crimes as the evils of Government operation. They created a general sentiment and demand for a return of the roads to their private owners. With that they coupled the demand for this law. Then the propaganda went forth that it was either this law or continued operation by the despised Government of the United States.

Everybody forgot that the law authorizing the Government to take over the railroads also provided that the President should turn them back under the same law which had sufficed them for a whole generation. The President even issued a proclamation ordering them back on the 1st of March, 1920; but everybody forgot that. Even a Senator in this Chamber told me he voted for the conference report on the transportation act because he understood there was no alternative between this law and Government operation. The law never should have been enacted. The roads should have been turned back under the old law. A railroad manager stated to me that that would have meant bankruptcy to many roads. Perhaps it would to some, but nobody came along with a special privilege law to keep the farmers out of bankruptcy. Furthermore, we had 44,000 miles of railroads in the hands of receivers before the war, but they did not stop running. The Great Rock Island system was one of them. Dishonest private management had wrecked it, but a United States court restored both its solvency and efficiency in a few months.

In spite of the disloyalty and inefficiency in Government management, in spite of the increased and unnecessary expenses, the first year after the roads were turned back the private owners further increased their operating expenses by over $1,400,000,000. About $480,000,000 of that amount was represented by wages, but the other $926,000,000 must be attributed to the causes heretofore described. Since that time wages have been reduced in a lump sum by over $400,000,000, and by a further reduction which caused the machinists' strike, but the rates until recently have been reduced less than $100,000,000.

A similar situation and a similar propaganda is now developed in reference to shipping. The principal difference is that the Government did not own the railroads but it does own over 10,000,000 tons of shipping. The first demand of the shipping propaganda is that American shipping must sail under the American flag. It wraps itself in the garb of superpatriotism; it breathes the inference that now our flag is not on the seas and that the present situation is un-American and unpatriotic.

It is a strange and weird psychology when the mind refuses to see before its very eyes the flag nailed to the masthead of every ship by the hand of the Government itself, and it is more strange and more weird if our patriotism shall not become genuine until it is garnished and supported by unfurling the yellow flag of Wall Street above the Stars and Stripes. I believe the most patriotic ship is a Government ship, manned by Americans, and operated under the American flag in its own right. No American will complain of a small deficit when patriotism is at issue, but in the present case the deficit is not a loss to the American people, and especially to the American farmer.

I inquired of the Shipping Board as to the general rates before the war and at the present time, and I have the following letter from Chairman Lasker dated December 8, 1922:

DEAR SENATOR: Responding to the oral inquiry from your office with regard to comparative freight rates prior to the war and to-day, it gives me pleasure to furnish you the following information:

Taking our chief export, grain, the rate from North Atlantic ports to the United Kingdom in 1913 was approximately $3.50 per long ton. This rate declined until in 1914, just prior to the outbreak of the World War, it reached approximately $2.25. The rates to the continent were approximately 50 cents higher than these rates. Flour in 1913 was approximately $3.80 per ton to the United Kingdom, and in 1914, $2.69. General cargo over the same run approximated $4.50 per ton, weight or measurement, ship's option.

In 1922 the rate for grain from North Atlantic ports to the United Kingdom approximated $2 per ton of 2,240 pounds—

And grain is the largest item of our ocean cargoes, says this letter, and I may add the most important item to our farmers—and the flour rate about $3.50. The general cargo rate is difficult to give because of the large number of commodity rates now prevalent. As an estimate solely, $6 would probably represent the average rate.

The foregoing rates are based upon an estimated average for the last 12 months. The actual rates of to-day are in most cases much lower. For instance, the grain rate, which was 5 shillings per quarter on July 1, 1921, was but 2 shillings on October 1, 1922. Similarly, flour was 25 cents per hundred pounds on July 1, 1921, and 15 cents per hundred pounds on October 1, 1922.

In the same period the cost of operations has tremendously increased. The cost of shipbuilding is nearly twice the pre-war level. Bunker coals are more than twice the 1914 price, and wages of crews have increased about 50 per cent.

I hope this information is that which you desire, and that you will not hesitate to call upon me for any further assistance I may be able to render.

Yours very truly, A. D. LASKER, Chairman.

The principal proposition of the situation, as disclosed by this letter, is that on grain the rate before the war was $2.25, and for an average of last year it was $2, and at this time it is considerably reduced, from 40 to 60 per cent below that. This has been done at the same time that ships have been operated with higher wages and higher costs in every respect, and at the same time the President informs us that they have reduced the deficit from $16,000,000 a month down to $4,000,000 a month. Viewing this matter from the standpoint of the farmer, I want to say that that four millions of deficit is not badly spent. It is worth while. It has accomplished something perhaps several times its value to agriculture in this country.

If that be true, why should any farmer want a ship subsidy which would turn these ships over to private interests and turn the rate-making power over into their hands? There is nothing in this bill which in any way regulates rates. There is nothing in this bill reaching out to say how these rates shall be controlled. We have had enough experience with the great financiers who will take over these ships to know that about one week is all the time they need for an agreement within the country or without, and rates will be made at their sweet will, and there will be no governmental power to compete with the schedules which they may establish.

On this basis alone I say, then, these ships are now worth to the United States all they are costing. Of course, I do not know just what the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] will do. He is 50 per cent with me and he is 50 per cent against me. He is 50 per cent for everybody and 50 per cent against everybody. He will vote against the ship subsidy bill, and that will leave these ships in the control of the Government of the United States, which, if I understood the trend of his remarks, is also a very offensive situation to him, but it is not to me.

I want to speak this voice of patriotism: I want to say it is an unpatriotic position for officers of their government to be denouncing it as inefficient in the management of its business and its enterprises. If that situation be true, it is the patriotic duty of officers of the Government to see that it is corrected. I believe, so far as the Government operation of these ships is concerned, that it can be efficiently and economically done; and with the power it gives them over doing justice in rates and doing justice in commerce generally there is no question in my mind but that the highest patriotic duty demands that we keep them exactly where they are now.

There is no hurry about disposing of these ships. The new Congress will come in after the 4th of March. There will be only $8,000,000 more lost up until that time, and the new Congress has the right to determine the question better than this Congress, because the new Congress was elected upon this issue; and in that proposition I agree most heartily with the eloquent Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

I believe from these facts it is evident that the rates on grain are greatly reduced as the result of our having the Government-operated ships. The farmers are saving many times more than the deficit. What would happen to rates if this Government shipping were turned over to private—which means Wall Street—control? That crowd never operates at a loss when a combination can be made. In one week it would reach an understanding that would boost rates to a point far higher than the present deficit. There is no provision in this law, as I have set forth, for the control of rates.

There is one other view of this deficit which I desire to present, and that relates to taxation to pay it. I have reached the definite conclusion that excess profits are the excess evil of this generation. Profits taken by the power of monopoly are taxation without representation just as truly as the tax on tea which started the American Revolution. There is no source of Government taxation so much justified as the source of excess profits.

I desire to present a few newspaper references in regard to recent financial operations in our country. I have here one statement which is headed:

Stock dividends voted in one day throughout country make vast sum. Total now $1,600,000,000.

These same stock dividends are collected in profits charged to the American people in the operation of the various businesses. It makes no difference whether they are collected in one year or carried over from year to year; they are collected in the same way, and then when they are turned back to the stockholders in the form of stock certificates their property and their holdings are increased by that amount.

I should like to have these clippings inserted in the RECORD. They show a long list of these companies, with their names and with these stock dividends. I think it is well that the American people should have the best possible opportunity to contemplate what is going on in this direction, so I will ask that they be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, Tuesday morning, December 5, 1922.]

1922 STOCK DIVIDENDS NOW OVER $1,000,000,000—STANDARD OIL COS. DECLARED OVER THREE-FOURTHS OF THIS RECORD-BREAKING FIGURE—TOTAL OF DECLARED STOCK DIVIDENDS MAY SOON REACH $1,500,000,000 IN PAR VALUE IF STOCKHOLDERS APPROVE PROPOSED STOCK INCREASES—PRACTICALLY ALL THIS YEAR'S STOCK DIVIDENDS ARE SPECIAL EVENTS.

Over $1,000,000,000 in stock dividends have been declared since January 1, 1922, by 79 corporations.

The greater part of this vast total can be credited to Standard Oil companies, as follows:

	Par value.
Standard Oil of New Jersey	$393,353,200
Standard Oil of New York	150,000,000
Standard Oil of California	100,971,111
Ohio Oil	45,000,000
Vacuum Oil	45,000,000
Atlantic Refining	45,000,000
Standard Oil of Kentucky	2,000,000
Total	781,324,311

When Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey was ordered dissolved, the $100,000,000 capitalization was selling for about $400,000,000. Stock dividends declared over the last 11 months by Standard Oil companies have a par value almost double that.

STOCK DIVIDEND NO DISBURSEMENT OF ASSETS.

A corporation that declares stock dividends out of accumulated surplus loses nothing. It is simply capital adjustment made possible by added value. As a rule the greater part of the corporation's earnings are spent for new construction and acquisitions and added to working capital to take care of expanding business.

Thousands of additional men are put to work in new mills, factories, mines, etc. One corporation for a number of years has been averaging around $60 a share annually on its stock. Stockholders have received an average of not much more than $10 annually. Surplus after dividends were put in working capital and new construction and the pay roll increased year by year. Had the management disbursed $50 a share annually in dividends and spent $10 a share for construction, etc., few men would have been added to the pay roll and little headway made in efficiency and economy. No progress in reducing costs would probably mean higher prices to the consumer.

RETAINED EARNINGS BENEFIT EMPLOYEES.

One manufacturer says: "A tax on accumulated surplus would mean a tax on efficiency and labor. It would mean hundreds of millions taken from new construction. It would mean smaller dividends, and the tax on dividends makes up a big per cent of Government revenues."

It is well known that prosperous companies pay the largest wages and take better care of their men. They experience less labor trouble than less prosperous companies. Labor troubles are almost unknown to Standard Oil companies. Few of the 79 corporations in the list accompanying this article have experienced serious labor troubles, partly due at least to continued progress and prosperity.

DIVIDS HIGH-PRICED SHARES INTO POPULAR VALUES.

Stocks selling for, say, $200 to $1,000 and above a share, are looked upon as rich men's investments. They are out of reach of the average investor and the employee who wishes to share in the profits of the company employing him. Splitting up the shares into smaller units through stock dividends places them within their reach. Employees who purchased Standard Oil shares over the last 15 years have seen some of their stocks increase in value 1,000 per cent. This is correspondingly true of scores of other companies, although no group of industrial companies can boast of an appreciation in value as great as that of Standard Oil. From an investment of several hundred millions less than two decades ago, Standard Oil's properties and working capital have grown to several billions. Number of men employed has grown proportionately.

Stock dividends mean little to the shareholder of record. He gets, say, 10 new shares for each old one. Nothing is added to the value of his holdings and nothing is taken away from his company.

Scores of corporations would be warranted in declaring stock dividends, and many may over the next 12 months. Few corporations that have been over liberal in paying cash dividends to shareholders at the expense of new construction and working capital are in a position to declare large stock dividends.

Corporations like United States Steel, Baldwin Locomotive, American Locomotive, American Car & Foundry, National Lead, General Electric, and United Fruit are among those in a position to declare large stock dividends.

MORE STOCK DIVIDENDS TO COME.

There are also proposed capital increases awaiting approval of stockholders. For example, Prairie Pipe Line's proposed stock dividend will be $54,000,000 and that of Prairie Oil & Gas $30,000,000. If these and others contemplated go through, they should aggregate about $500,000,000, which would bring the year's total above $1,500,000,000.

Following table shows for 79 companies stock outstanding January 1, 1922, or at the time dividend was declared, dividend in per cent, and par value of the stock dividend.

Some companies, as American Light & Traction Co. and General Electric Co., have paid stock dividends regularly for several years (General Electric Co. since January, 1918). Others listed are all special dividends.

[From the Sun, Baltimore, Wednesday morning, December 6, 1922.]

$211,500,000 GIVEN TO STOCKHOLDERS—STOCK DIVIDENDS VOTED IN ONE DAY THROUGHOUT COUNTRY MAKE VAST SUM—TOTAL NOW $1,600,000,000—TWO OF STANDARD OIL GROUP EACH DECLARE 300 PER CENT DISTRIBUTION.

NEW YORK, December 5.—Stock dividends totaling $211,500,000 were announced to-day by seven large industrial corporations and banks, bringing the total stock dividends declared in the last few months to more than $1,600,000,000. These sums, in virtually all cases, have been provided for out of undistributed surpluses, apparently in anticipation of unfavorable tax legislation in the next Congress.

The Studebaker Corporation increased its capitalization $15,000,000 by declaring a 25 per cent stock dividend. Directors expected that the customary annual 10 per cent dividend would be continued.

$45,000,000 SURPLUS DIVIDED.

The Vacuum Oil Co. distributed $45,000,000 of surplus in the form of a 300 per cent dividend. The William Wrigley, Jr., Co. declared a 10 per cent stock dividend of $1,500,000 to common-share holders.

The Bank of Manhattan Co., one of the oldest in the country, increased its capital from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000 by capitalizing surplus and declaring a 100 per cent stock dividend. The Equitable Trust Co. announced plans to increase its capital from $12,000,000 to $20,000,000, one-half of which would be a 33⅓ per cent stock dividend and the remainder a new issue of stock to which holders of the bank stock might subscribe.

The E. I. du Pont de Nemours Co. declared a 50 per cent stock dividend amounting to $20,000,000. The Whitman Mills, of New Bedford, called a stockholders' meeting to consider a stock dividend of 50 per cent by increasing the capitalization from $2,000,000 to $3,000,000.

ANOTHER STANDARD OIL DIVIDEND.

The stockholders of the Standard Oil Co. of California to-day authorized a stock dividend of 100 per cent and increased the capital stock from $115,000,000 to $250,000,000.

The directors of the Standard Oil Co. of Kansas declared a stock dividend of 300 per cent payable December 30 to stockholders of record December 16. The State charter board yesterday authorized the company to increase its capitalization from $2,000,000 to $8,000,000.

$1,200,000,000 STOCK DIVIDENDS TO DATE—MANY MORE DISTRIBUTIONS AWAIT APPROVAL—STANDARD OIL COMPANIES PAY BULK OF MELONS, WITH SEVERAL YET TO BE HEARD FROM—TABLE GIVES DATA.

Stock dividends totaling more than $1,200,000,000 have been declared since the first of the year, and numerous proposed capital increases are awaiting the approval of stockholders.

Standard Oil companies have accounted for the major portion of the vast total and all of them have not been heard from. The New York, New Jersey, California, Kentucky, and Ohio companies, together with the Vacuum Oil Co. and Atlantic Refining, alone declared stock dividends amounting to $781,324,311. To this will be added the Prairie Pipe Line Co.'s $54,000,000 proposed stock melon and the $36,000,000 distribution of the Prairie Oil & Gas Co.

The following table shows the stock dividends announced by 79 companies, the stock outstanding January 1, 1922, and the par value of the stock melons:

Mr. BROOKHART. Great combinations in our country have reached such a position of economic power and such a position of mutual understanding that they seem to be entirely able to charge whatever profit they deem just, and the common people of the United States have no voice in those profits.

Here is the American farmer, with a capital investment of nearly $80,000,000,000. Collectively the American farmer is the big business man of the United States, and yet in the price which he receives for his product he has no voice. He can add in no expense. He can charge no profit. His price is fixed by other agencies of less capital investment, and of a mighty small personnel compared to the 7,000,000 farmers and their families. On the other hand, the American farmer has no voice in the price which he will pay for the industrial products which he must use. That price is also fixed by other agencies beyond his power and beyond his control. There is no other business on this earth that could survive one year or one month under such an economic situation; and it is that great question of giving to the farmer a voice in the marketing of his product, some voice in the credit for the control of that market, which is before the Senate in the determination of this motion.

The other question which I desire to discuss briefly before I conclude relates to the administration of the Federal reserve bank in reference to agriculture.

The distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] said that we had established a Federal reserve bank for the purpose of assisting business; that it was the agency that would help business in a general way; and that a ship subsidy would in some way do for shipping what the Federal reserve bank was doing for business. Apparently, the distinguished Senator omitted the consideration of the biggest business in this country when he referred to the beneficial effects of the Federal reserve bank. He apparently omitted agriculture entirely, because I think it can not be said that the Federal reserve bank has been an agricultural bank in any particular.

As I view that situation, the foundation for all credit, of the whole banking system, is deposits. It is the deposits put in the bank by the common people, the people of the country, upon which the bank is built. Withdraw the deposits and there is no bank. It has no need then for anything but a receiver. The receiver, of course, would wind it up. The first story on top of the deposits is the ordinary bank as it is organized, and that is the first story which I described of the credit structure. A large number of these banks being organized, they are required by law to keep reserves, and they have funds which at times they would like to redeposit in order to get some use of those funds and some return upon them. That redepositing is the reserve business. That is the upper story of the credit structure, all resting upon this same foundation of deposits.

During the war we had big things to finance. They needed to be financed quickly, and it was decided that it would be well to collect these redeposits into one great reservoir under the control of one board in order that these things might be more efficiently handled. I have no objection to that idea, and the Federal reserve bank was established upon it and upon these same deposits. The farmers' deposits were included among those. The farmers' deposits were the biggest item among them. Figuring it out upon the best evidence I could, taking the estimate of my own State as a basis, something like 40 per cent of the deposits of the country are made by the 7,000,000 farmers in the United States, laborers deposit more than 25 per cent, and little and big business the balance. Yet this great structure, built upon those deposits, had no farmer on the board, no laboring man upon the board, and was mainly controlled by those representing the big interests of the United States.

What did they do to the American farmer by their administration? In our State they first looked us over, and decided that we needed inflating. They decided that would be a good thing for us. No; first they established a dead line of credit allotment, I should have said. Under that rule Iowa received an allotment of $36,000,000. One bank in Chicago had $80,000,000, and one bank in New York had $145,000,000, but the whole State of Iowa, ranking fifth in resources among the States of the Union, had the small allotment of but $36,000,000, based upon this arbitrary rule of deposits of member banks. Then, having decided to inflate us, they overloaned us, as they called it, up to $96,000,000 at one time; at the time of which I speak it was $91,000,000.

Then they looked us over again and decided that we needed deflating, and they sent a representative out in the State of Iowa to perform the operation. He came out from the Chicago branch and held meetings around over the State. I attended his meeting at the city of Ottumwa, and I know what was said and done. He said to the assembled farmers, "We have been too good to you out here. We have overloaned you. You are $55,000,000 now above your allotment." That was in the fall of 1920, the corn-husking time. He said, "You will have to sell this corn and reduce these loans, because the time has come when the people who are entitled to this money must have it." Then I stood up and asked him who those folks were who were entitled to that credit and would get it as the farmers were forced to sell their stuff at harvest time and pay the money in. He did not answer that question. I repeated it, and he did not answer it. I never did get an answer from him.

The banks throughout our State, following that direction, notified the farmers that their loans must be paid when they came due, in order to reduce this obligation to the Federal reserve bank. Then started the panic in farm prices, and, as Senators all know, there never was such a panic in the United States. Did they have to call those loans? They did the same thing in California, they did the same thing in Kansas, they did the same thing over all the agricultural portion of the country. At the very time those loans were called the Federal reserve bank had more than a thousand million dollars of unused credit, which it could have loaned to the farmers of the United States instead of calling those loans. That policy perhaps avoided a panic of the banks, but it handed the farmers of the United States the worst panic in the history of agriculture.

I was talking with a distinguished member of the Chamber of Commerce of New York the other evening about that proposition, and he said to me that the deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board was wrong. But he said they did not intend to do that thing; that it went further than they figured. I said, "If they are as inefficient as that, it is the most powerful argument for my theory of turning those fellows out of that board and putting upon it 3 farmers, 2 laboring men, 2 men of little business, and 1 man of big business."

I believe something of that kind must be done in reference to the control of credit throughout the country. The farmers even in my own State deposit enough in the banks for their own credit, but under this banking organization it is taken away from them and is used to back other enterprises. If my estimate of 40 per cent is correct, or anywhere near correct, in 1920, according to the comptroller's report, the farmers deposited more than $4,000,000,000 in all of the national banks of the United States, and at the same time they were allowed $1,998,000,000 for use in agriculture. Therefore it has occurred that the panic in farm prices and the destruction of agriculture, wrought by that panic, have been brought about through the impounding of the farmer's own money and denying him the use of it in his own business. I call that a strike; I call it a credit strike, a money strike. That credit strike of 1920 did the farmers of Iowa and of the United States generally more damage—it did them ten times more damage—than all of the industrial strikes the laboring men have organized in the whole history of the United States.

There is something wrong about that situation. It has brought agriculture to the verge of ruin. The thing we are going to consider now, if this motion carries, is the remedy for that situation. I will not attempt to discuss the merits of the Norris bill, but it is the only measure proposed in Congress which affords a chance for immediate and speedy relief. It is drastic, I will concede. Perhaps in the end it means the ultimate organization of cooperative marketing, which the farmers of the United States are entitled to have; but cooperative marketing, cooperative anything, is a matter of growth, and there would be no immediate relief from a purely cooperative bill, and immediate relief is demanded by the farmers of the United States.

I hope this motion will carry. I hope this question will come before the Senate, and I hope we will no longer be bothered with this little question of saving twenty-five or thirty million dollars a year upon these ships which are being operated by the Government, and which were built for safety in war.

Now a word in reference to the national defense. I believe in national defense. There never was a time my country called that I did not volunteer to serve it. If the occasion should arise again, I would resign from the Senate to serve it again. I believe in all that. Yet why this strange agitation for national defense when those ships now belong to the Government itself, the place they would have to go if they were used for national defense? Yet somebody wants to sell them, and turn them over to somebody else in the interest of national defense. To me that is the most ridiculous proposition which has been advanced upon the floor of the Senate.

It is not national defense; it is moving a long distance away from national defense. The national defense consists in making this Government a more efficient, a more American, a more patriotic Government in its business affairs and its economic affairs, as well as its military affairs.

I desire to inquire of the Senator from Washington in reference to a situation in his own State which was brought to my attention by the Farmers' Union recently. They say that about one-third of the apple crop in that State is being destroyed because it will not bring price enough to pay the freight rates, and because there are no marketing facilities. The Farmers' Union, they told me, are getting ready to dump 6,000 bushels at one time into the Columbia River, and to take a moving picture of those apples as they go into the river. Is there such a situation as that out there?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Six thousand bushels? I would not be surprised if it were 6,000 carloads.

Mr. BROOKHART. They told me there would be 10,000 carloads dumped into the river altogether.

Mr. JONES of Washington. With regard to that, I will say that I do not think the condition is overdrawn. When I was in Wenatchee in the fall there were about 9,000 carloads of apples in the warehouses there, and many of those apples were rather early apples, which need to get to the market very early. It had been impossible, apparently, for them to get cars to carry them off. They should have gotten them to market by about the 1st of December. They were getting about 100 cars a day; they should have had at least three or four hundred cars a day. It looked then as though there would be six or seven thousand carloads of apples lost at that one point. So I am afraid the picture is not overdrawn.

Mr. STANLEY. Are they the same beautiful apples for which we are paying 10 cents apiece here now?

Mr. JONES of Washington. They are.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I interrupt the Senator to inquire whether it is possible to store those apples, or can they be kept?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is possible to store the apples, but they have not the cold-storage facilities at the point to which I am referring. They have cold-storage facilities for about 700 carloads of apples. They have warehouses for the others but not cold-storage facilities. I would like to suggest right here, in this connection, that those farmers very likely would have relief if we had refrigerator ships which could meet their apples at Seattle, about 150 miles away.

Mr. BROOKHART. I would suggest that we send some of the idle ships around and get them, take them over to New York, and feed the people there.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They have not the refrigerator ships. That is the trouble.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I do not want to get the Senator off the subject, but has he investigated the action of the National Fruit Co., or whatever agency it is that gets western apples, and is preparing to throw them into the sea on one seaboard, and is selling them on another part of the continent at exorbitant prices? It surely does not cost at the rate of 10 cents apiece to ship apples from the State of Washington to the city of Washington by any kind of transportation. Somebody has a trust and a graft in the handling of that fruit.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator from Kentucky has touched on the question I was going to ask. What is the price being demanded for those apples by their owners who are about to dump them into the Columbia River?

Mr. BROOKHART. I understand they would be willing to take any price.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Have they been willing to take any price for the apples, or have they demanded a considerable price?

Mr. BROOKHART. I think they have been willing to take any reasonable price.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is a very interesting question. I am not asking it to impugn anybody's motives, but I am very anxious to have the question answered. I would like to know the prices which have been demanded and received for that part of the crop which has been marketed, and since the Senator is in touch with the gentlemen who are supposed to know, I hope he will enlighten us.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, I do not know of my own personal knowledge, but I was informed, when I was out there last fall, that for many of the apples which had already been sold and gotten to the market the farmer had received about 5 cents a box, after the freight was paid, and after the expenses of picking, of boxing, and of packing were paid. Of course, our apples are wrapped in paper, separately, and then packed in the boxes. After all those expenses were deducted, the farmer got only about 5 cents.

I will say to the Senator that these men have not kept their apples there because they have not gotten what they demanded. Their apples must come to the eastern market largely. They send them, I think, to the commission houses and take a chance of having a bill come back for freight rather than having a check come back for the proceeds of the apples.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Who handles the apples at the shipping point?

Mr. JONES of Washington. They have warehousemen who put them in their warehouses, and they have commission men there who sell them or consign them on commission. A good many of the farmers or apple raisers, however, probably ship the apples themselves. They put them in the warehouse and have them shipped out. I really do not know so much about the details of that part of the transaction.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Is there an association of fruit raisers?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; they have associations of fruit raisers, and they handle the fruit through them in many instances.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not want to be understood as antagonizing the people who have fruits. I am merely trying to get some information.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a suggestion?

Mr. BROOKHART. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. It may be that the difficulty encountered in Washington was what we encountered during the last few months in California. There was a car shortage which was absolutely ruinous to us and our production, particulary with regard to fresh fruits, and the like. It is possible that the same difficulty occurred in the State of Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I stated they were getting only 100 cars a day when they should have had 300 cars a day.

Mr. JOHNSON. We have not had the cars in the West with which to transport our products.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If that is the difficulty, it is so easily met that we need none of us get excited about it. I am as ready as anybody else to help meet it. A condition where railroad companies over long periods of time fail to secure the necessary amount of cars to handle the business of the country is an intolerable condition and points directly to incompetence somewhere. I will not at the present moment say where. It may be we are part of the incompetence.

But I am still interested in knowing whether the apples for which we pay exorbitant figures here are marketed in the East at unreasonable figures and the increased price comes at this end, or whether the price is a result of car shortage or a monopoly exercising a control at the source of supply, or a monopoly exercising a control at the source of distribution, or whether it is the result of all these conditions. While I suppose the Senator is not prepared at this moment to answer, I would like to have these questions answered. If he will permit me further, we have in the last five minutes disclosed abundant reason for Congress giving serious consideration to the whole question.

Mr. BROOKHART. I am prepared at this moment to answer in a general way the question suggested by the Senator from Missouri. As a representative of the National Farmers' Union I attended the investigation conducted by the joint committee of the House and Senate and made the opening statement of the farmers' case in that investigation. In the course of that statement I said to them that out of the dollar which the laboring man paid for products of the farm the farmer gets 38 cents. That statement was somewhat challenged. Then they investigated the proposition. They spent several months and took a large amount of testimony, investigating the matter everywhere.

I will say to the Senator from Missouri that that figure includes all the great average of farm products of every kind.

At the end of that investigation they found and reported that I was wrong. Yes; they found and reported that out of the dollar which the laboring man paid for the products of the farm the farmer gets 37 cents. That situation means that something is intolerable in our marketing distribution in the United States.

A similar situation obtained in Denmark 30 years ago. The farmers then organized their cooperative credits and cooperative banks and cooperative processes. They have 46 cooperative packing plants under their control in that little kingdom at this time. They can outsell the Beef Trust in a competitive market everywhere, because they produce better products. Now, at the end of that development they have reduced the cost of distribution until, instead of 63 cents, as in our country, it is from 25 to 28 cents in their country. The margin ought to be narrower in our country than in theirs, because we produce a larger volume of larger stuff. Our great volume of grain and live stock ought to reduce the cost of distribution below their cost.

I say now, as I indicated somewhat in pointing out the big profits that are being assembled by certain large financial institutions, that it has become a question with the farming business of the cost of distribution over and above all other questions. That question will have direct consideration in the Norris marketing bill, and it will again have full consideration in the rural credits bill when it reaches us from the Committee on Banking and Currency. At any rate, we have reached the time when it seems to me that it is little short of a gross neglect of our duty if we proceed further upon this question of whether or not we shall figure out the $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 saving upon ships when we have this great question, of vital interest to all the millions of Americans, which ought to be solved this winter.

Then there is the Federal land bank, held down by restrictions and limitations until it can not function. The $10,000 loan limit ought to be removed. The other restrictions ought to be taken away. That law ought to be amended at this session and before the 1st of March, when all those loans fall due, so as to relieve the farmers of the country somewhat from the great burden of exorbitant interest that is now put upon them.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Iowa a question?

Mr. BROOKHART. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do not understand that the ship subsidy bill now before the Senate will affect the coastwise trade of the United States in any particular. Does the Senator from Iowa so understand?

Mr. BROOKHART. I do not so understand it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Of course, the passage of the ship subsidy bill would have no effect whatsoever in regard to the transportation of apples from the State of Washington around to the city of Washington, but I understand that the ship subsidy bill relates wholly to international trade. Much has been suggested in favor of the ship subsidy bill because of its supposed added transportation facilities for farm products. Am I to understand that anyone has suggested that the bill, if enacted into law, would reduce the present freight rates on farm products from this country to any European country?

Mr. BROOKHART. I have offered an amendment to the bill providing for a rebate of 10 per cent of the rates to the farmers. That is the only suggestion I have heard made along that line.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If I understood the Senator from Iowa correctly in his very able address, to which I took great pleasure in listening, the freight rates for the transportation of farm products across the ocean now are considerably less than prior to the war, and no one has suggested, so far as I have been able to learn, that the passage of the bill would tend to reduce present freight rates on farm products in international trade.

Mr. BROOKHART. In talking with members of the Shipping Board, a former member of the Shipping Board said that he believed the rates would surely be increased. They claim they are not getting living rates at this time, so it would not reduce the rates, but is almost sure to increase them.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then the farmer certainly can not be interested in the passage of the ship subsidy bill with the expectation that he would derive any material present profit from the passage of the bill or have any hope of profit from the bill in the near future.

Mr. BROOKHART. No; I think the farmer will pay the added freight.

[At this point Mr. BROOKHART yielded the floor for the day.]

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, has the Senator from Iowa concluded his remarks?

Mr. BROOKHART. I should like to conclude to-morrow if I may do so. There are a few matters that I desire to present at that time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I supposed the Senator from Iowa had concluded. I gave notice the other day that I should ask the Senate to remain in session until half past 5 anyway. How much longer would the Senator desire to-morrow?

Mr. BROOKHART. There are some matters which I desire to present that I have not with me at this time.

Mr. NORRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Washington that it is a quarter after 5 now, and we have been in session since 11 o'clock this morning. It is not an unreasonable request that the Senator from Iowa makes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I appreciate that. The Senator said he has some papers in his office relating to matters he desires to present. I do not intend to press him unduly, but I think I have been extremely lenient in reference to the bill. Indeed, I have been criticized by some because I have not kept the bill more before the Senate. I am not disposed to press the Senator if he has some papers that are not here, but I do hope that Senators will realize that we are getting to a point where we must insist on the bill being kept before the Senate. Senators who desire to speak I think should be prepared to do so, because we want to press the bill to a conclusion one way or the other as soon as possible. I will consent that the bill may go over and the Senator may conclude to-morrow. A brief executive session is desired this evening.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I was just going to say that I thought it was entirely in order for the Senator from Iowa to suggest that he has material which he proposes to present, but has not with him at this time. It is now a quarter after 5——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know the Senator has some papers that he wishes to use, and they are not with him. I do not want to press him unduly, but I think I have been extremely lenient in reference to this measure.

Mr. FLETCHER. So far as concerns the suggestion of the Senator from Washington about being lenient is concerned, I think the Senator from Washington has had the bill discussed every minute to-day. No one has delayed it a moment to-day. The speech on the other side of the question consumed somethink like four hours to-day. I do not think the Senator can intimate at all that any one opposed to his view of the measure has taken up any unnecessary time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have not said that. What I am complaining about is that we have not taken enough time on the question; that we have not been keeping the bill before the Senate enough hours during the day.

Mr. FLETCHER. We started at 11 o'clock this morning and the bill has been before the Senate ever since.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I understand that.

Mr. CURTIS. I understood that the Senator from Iowa had yielded the floor and that he will proceed to-morrow. It is understood that he is to have the floor to-morrow morning when the Senate convenes, and I desire to submit a conference report.

Mr. BROOKHART. That course is satisfactory to me.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND JUSTICE.

Mr. CURTIS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13232) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 6, 7, 11, 13, 15, 21, 22, and 23.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 8, 9, 10, 12, 16, 17, and 18, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$925,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon amendments numbered 1, 2, 5, 14, 19, 24, and 25.

CHARLES CURTIS,
F. E. WARREN,
H. C. LODGE,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JAMES W. HUSTED,
ROBERT E. EVANS,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the unfinished business may be laid before the Senate so that it may be pending.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously made, took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 19, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 18, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by Mr. LONGWORTH as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, our heavenly Father, Thou hast not promised us joy without affliction, calm without the storm, nor the sun without the cloud. But blessed be Thy holy name, Thou hast vouchsafed unto us sympathy, strength, and unfailing love. O, then, let Thy light be our guide, Thy service our delight, and Thy peace our richest blessing. To-day direct our words that they may do no harm, and may our hearts feel no wrong desires. Let our labors be for our country's good and our acts a help to our fellow men. In Thy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

INCOMES FROM SECURITIES.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD to-day the joint resolution that will be considered to-morrow with an amendment which I expect to offer at the proper time, so the House may have the entire matter before it to-morrow.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I think that is very proper.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the way indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment is as follows:

Page 1, line 13, after the word "income," strike out the remainder of the section and insert "which the United States has power to tax."
Page 2, line 9, after the word "income," strike out the remainder of the section and insert "which the United States has power to tax."

The joint resolution as amended would read as follows:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"'ARTICLE —.

"'SECTION 1. The United States shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of any State, but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income ~~derived from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of the United States or any other State~~ which the United States has power to tax.

"'SEC. 2. Each State shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived by its residents from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of the United States; but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived ~~from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of such State~~ which the State has power to tax.'"

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution (S. J. Res. 255) for the relief of sufferers from fire in the city of Astoria, Oreg., and as it is an emergency matter; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate Joint Resolution 248 to provide for the payment of salaries of Senators appointed to fill vacancies, and for other purposes, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

CONSOLIDATION OF STATISTICS, FOREIGN COMMERCE, DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE (S. DOC. NO. 276).

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report on the bill (S. 3295) to consolidate the statistics of foreign commerce in the Department of Commerce. The parliamentary clerk has the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3295) to consolidate the work of collecting, compiling, and publishing statistics of foreign commerce of the United States in the Department of Commerce.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Ordered printed under the rule.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire also to present a unanimous consent request in connection with it. This was a Senate bill which was passed by the House that made amendments in date made necessary by the time that had elapsed before getting it through the House. The Senate at first disagreed to those amendments. Now, as the conference report will show, the Senate has receded entirely, and I ask unanimous consent that the conference report be read for the purpose of immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa presents a conference report and asks unanimous consent that it be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I think we will have better expedition by following the rule of printing it in the RECORD and have it go over until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Ordered printed under the rule.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3295) to consolidate the work of collecting, compiling, and publishing statistics of the foreign commerce of the United States in the Department of Commerce, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, and 3, and agree to the same.

J. W. FORDNEY,
W. R. GREEN,
W. C. HAWLEY,
JNO. N. GARNER,
J. W. COLLIER,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. L. JONES,
KNUTE NELSON,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3295) to consolidate the work of collecting, compiling, and publishing statistics of the foreign commerce of the United States in the Department of Commerce, submit the following written statement:

The Senate has receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the House.

J. W. FORDNEY,
W. R. GREEN,
W. C. HAWLEY,
JNO. N. GARNER,
J. W. COLLIER,
Managers on the part of the House.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman withhold that until I ask unanimous consent. I want to ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter I have received from Mr. Winthrop L. Marvin, asking me to place the letter in the RECORD.

Mr. STAFFORD. To what does the letter refer?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Marvin thinks I did not fairly represent him in my speech on the ship subsidy bill, and I wish at his request to place the letter in the RECORD and my reply to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I submit for the RECORD the following letters:

AMERICAN STEAMSHIP OWNERS' ASSOCIATION,
New York, December 12, 1922.

Hon. RUFUS HARDY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Not until to-day did I learn from your speech of November 25, published December 4, that in that address you had made a reference to me, in connection with an assertion by you that "I do not believe there was a paragraph in this bill that was not framed by the Steamship Owners' Association and sponsored by them," as follows:

"Mr. HARDY of Texas. Let me say right here that Winthrop L. Marvin was introduced before our committee and an article was read written by him in which he claimed most of the credit of having written the bill, and he boasted of his handiwork."

I wish to say that this statement is absolutely without foundation. Before your Merchant Marine Committee, at the public hearings April 27, page 1014, I said:

"I would like to explain to the committee, because in reading the testimony I have noticed here and there a suggestion that I was one of those who drafted the bill; that I had nothing whatever to do with the drafting of the bill that has been laid before you; that I was not consulted with reference to a single line in the bill. I would have been glad to be consulted, possibly; but I was not consulted, and I never saw the bill until it was published in the New York newspapers."

Instead of having "written the bill" and having "claimed most of the credit" of having written the bill, as you assert, it is a matter of public record before your committee that I did not write a line of the measure and did not see it when it was in process of preparation. I was asked to give my opinions, as others supposed to have some technical knowledge were, and did give those opinions. But with the actual framing of the bill I have already declared, and declare again, that I had absolutely no connection whatsoever. That the shipping bill was not dictated by the Steamship Owners' Association is instantly apparent to anyone who compares the bill with the views and recommendations of the association as submitted to your committee April 26 and 27 last in response to its formal invitation. The bill does not include and never has included many of the suggestions that were proposed. It does include and has included many features unsuggested and unheard of by us, and at some points it runs directly contrary to our recommendations.

You have so gravely misrepresented my position that I must ask you to do me the justice of inserting this letter in the RECORD of the House of Representatives.

Sincerely yours,
WINTHROP L. MARVIN,
Vice President and General Manager.

DECEMBER 15, 1922.

Mr. WINTHROP L. MARVIN,
Vice President American Steamship Owners' Association,
11 Broadway, New York.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of December 12 received. I very gladly place that part of it in the RECORD which relates to my speech. I certainly do not wish to do you any injustice by giving you too much or too little credit as to the subsidy bill. The error you complain of in the sentence you quote from my speech was corrected in the colloquy that followed immediately between Messrs. Edmonds, Nelson, and myself. Of course I do not mean that you literally wrote the bill. The whole of the sentence complained of and the colloquy referred to is as follows:

* * * * * * *

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Let me say right here that Winthrop L. Marvin was introduced before our committee and an article was read, written by him, in which he claimed most of the credit of having written the bill, and he boasted of his handiwork.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Was there not a committee of shipbuilders and ship operators that went before the Shipping Board—I do not know whether it came before your committee or not—and formulated a specific series of demands? And are they not practically all incorporated in the bill?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The gentleman is right, and Winthrop L. Marvin's testimony shows that this bill was gotten up for and by the United States Ship Owners' Association, of which he was the paid representative, with the assistance, I do not doubt, of able men like my friend from Pennsylvania. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. EDMONDS. No steamship owners' association assisted me in framing the bill.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. It is recorded in the Journal of Commerce, and you will find it in the library, that this shipowners' association did meet with the gentleman from Pennsylvania. His name is specifically mentioned, as well as that of the chairman of the other committee, and they discussed these demands with him.

Mr. EDMONDS. That is true.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The real fact is that this is the shipowners' bill.

Mr. EDMONDS. I want to say to the gentleman right now that the 10 per cent limitation was put in by myself. It was never suggested by the shipowners.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. What limitation?

Mr. EDMONDS. The 10 per cent limitation on profits.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That was very kind of you.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Oh, I do not doubt there is some little trimming here and there, some little something that you did not get from them; but ask Winthrop L. Marvin and he will say that substantially all the demands of the shipowners' association are in this bill and that 10 per cent limitation you speak of is one I would be ashamed to father. Why, it requires the Government to subsidize ships up to 10 per cent net profit, and the Esch railroad bill had been damned by the people because it directs the Interstate Commerce Commission to let the railroads earn a 6 per cent profit.

Mr. EDMONDS. There are 15 or 20 sections of this bill written by the subcommittee that aided me in drafting the bill—the subcommittee of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. We talk to those favoring a measure and get their views and demands and become so permeated with their views and desires that they might just as well be handling the pen as you or me. [Applause.]

* * * * * * * *

That is what I said about the matter in my speech you complain of.

Now, since I am putting your letter in the RECORD and the colloquy also I will comment briefly.

Mr. EDMONDS, of Pennsylvania, claims some credit, I think justly, for the actual framing and writing of the bill and especially for the 10 per cent limitation clause.

This clause is the one providing that when any owner of a subsidized ship makes in any one year exceeding 10 per cent profit one-half of the excess shall be paid back into the ship subsidy or merchant marine fund (not into the United States Treasury) until the entire amount of the subsidy received by that ship in the year is paid into that fund. It seems that if a certain ship costing $1,000,000 should receive during the year $10,000 in subsidy and that ship should earn during that year $20,000 net profit after allowing for all overhead and interest, depreciation, and repairs, then it would pay back into the subsidy fund $5,000 to be used for the payment of subsidies to other ships. Knowing the ability of great corporations in bookkeeping and in shuffling and shifting of the profit and loss account and capital account I think the whole provision is simply a delusion or fraud, if that is not too harsh a term to use.

In order to determine whether the sentence in my speech which Mr. Marvin complains of really does him any injustice I present the following extracts from the hearings before the committee:

"Mr. DAVIS. You, of course, holding the position you have for the past two or three years, have taken a very considerable interest in the Government merchant marine and Shipping Board affairs?

"Mr. MARVIN. I have.

"Mr. DAVIS. You have kept up with it pretty well and have undertaken to keep your association members advised of that situation? Now it was upon the recommendation of you or your association that Mr. Lasker appointed the three experts, Messrs. Love, Schmull, and Frey, was it not, Mr. Marvin?

"Mr. MARVIN. We favored the appointment of these gentlemen.

"Mr. DAVIS. You were requested to select certain men whom you could recommend, and you did select and recommend those gentlemen and they were appointed?

"Mr. MARVIN. We believed that they were eminently fit for this important post. We recommended their appointment and Chairman Lasker, after his appointment, conferred with the shipping men of New York and of other cities with regard to those technical posts.

"Mr. LISSNER. That is not a fair statement to say that they selected those men, though. I do not think that Mr. Marvin will say that.

"Mr. MARVIN. No; I will not say that, I simply say that we favored their appointment. The choice of these gentlemen was entirely by the Shipping Board.

"Mr. DAVIS. I will ask you if you were not requested to make recommendations of men for those positions?

Mr. MARVIN. Yes, we were asked to designate to the Government gentlemen of experience and capacity in the shipping business for these important positions.

"Mr. DAVIS. And thereupon you did designate and recommend those three gentlemen?

"Mr. MARVIN. These three gentlemen were among those whom we named to the Government as worthy of these responsibilities. Other names were considered.

"Mr. DAVIS. Did you recommend any other names or were you requested to?

"Mr. MARVIN. We recommended other gentlemen also as worthy of consideration by the Government.

"Mr. DAVIS. You, of course, have been called into consultation frequently by Chairman Lasker and others connected with the Shipping Board, have you not?

"Mr. MARVIN. As occasion required, not frequently.

"Mr. DAVIS. You were on the committee, as has been shown, that got together the data and details for the compilation of the studies and the preparation of the bill?

"Mr. MARVIN. Yes, sir.

"Mr. DAVIS. Now you wrote an article that was published in April, 1922, number of Marine Engineering, under the title of 'The merchant marine bill of 1922 analyzed. One of the experts who assisted the Shipping Board in framing the bill outlines its merits. By Winthrop L. Marvin'?

"Mr. MARVIN. Yes, sir. I would like to say on that point, Judge, you have probably sometimes observed the poetic license indulged in by the writers of headlines. I had nothing to do with the latter part of the statement and I think most of the committee thoroughly understand that.

"Mr. DAVIS. You speak so low that I can not catch your answer.

"Mr. MARVIN. I had nothing to do with the framing of the bill as I have already stated to the committee, perhaps quite unnecessarily, because I think the committee generally understands that I had nothing to do with the framing of the bill.

"Mr. DAVIS. Not being a lawyer, you were not called upon to aid in drafting the bill.

"Mr. MARVIN. No.

"Mr. DAVIS. However you did discuss with them in the discussions that were held by the committee with regard to the policies to be embodied in the bill, did you not?

"Mr. MARVIN. The committee was appointed for the purpose—and I hoped fulfilled the purpose—of gathering data in the way of information and of making suggestions as to the best methods of upbuilding the American merchant marine.

"Mr. DAVIS. And you did discuss with them the provisions which were ultimately embodied in the bill, did you not?

"Mr. MARVIN. I discussed with my fellow committeeman; yes, surely.

"Mr. DAVIS. And you gentlemen in that discussion discussed the various aids, direct and indirect, which you thought should be embodied in the bill?

"Mr. MARVIN. We went over the whole field, so far as that was humanly possible.

"Mr. DAVIS. And then did you make a general recommendation as to what should be embodied in the bill?

"Mr. MARVIN. There was an agreement among the committee as to certain policies, certain ideas, general lines to be followed in the building up of the merchant marine. That was the duty for which we were appointed.

"Mr. DAVIS. Now, in this article appears the following, in part:

"'A second important amendment of the Jones Act is provided in the new bill by the specific naming of the sum of $125,000,000 as a construction fund which may be availed of either for the building of vessels of the best and most efficient type, equipped with the most modern, the most efficient, and the most economical machinery and commercial appliances, or in the equipment of vessels already built with machinery and commercial appliances of the type and kind mentioned. Under this provision it is anticipated that powerful aid will be given to the construction of fast liners, in which we are so notably deficient, and to the construction or equipment of motor ships. This is a fair interpretation of the purpose in the minds of the authors of the present measure. Very liberal are the limitations that no loans shall be for a greater sum than two-thirds of the cost of the vessel to be constructed or of the value of the vessel when thus equipped, nor shall any loan be made at a rate of interest less than 2 per cent per annum.'

* * * * * * *

"Mr. DAVIS. In the same article, and referring to the deduction from the taxes of the freight money paid by shippers shipping in American bottoms, you state, 'This is an ingenious new departure intended to serve the purpose of a part of the preferential duties of the original Jones Act, but as a matter of fact it is far more valuable and effective, for it would apply to all merchandise dutiable or free, inward or outward.'

"The provisions of the original Jones Act to which you refer is section 34?

"Mr. MARVIN. Section 34; yes, sir.

"Mr. DAVIS. Which both Presidents felt it inadvisable to enforce?

"Mr. MARVIN. Yes, sir.

* * * * * * *

"Mr. DAVIS. You further state:

"'These elastic features of the compensation portion of the bill, together with the limitation on profits in one of the paragraphs of section 702, are unique in American shipping legislation. A State-aided ship may not realize a net operating profit of more than 10 per cent. This is a legislative experiment that may prove unwise in its results, though it will undoubtedly facilitate the passage of the bill by Congress. Mid-Western Senators and Representatives are frankly recognizing this new bill as "something different," the words "something different" being in quotation marks, and as satisfying their scruples against excessive subsidies. However reluctant the seacoast States may be to recognize this statutory limitation, it may perhaps prove to be the winning of the law.'

"Now, your committee discussed a good deal about what provisions would appeal to the public and aid in winning the bill, did you not?

"Mr. MARVIN. Certainly all practical men, Judge—and I need not say so to you, who are practical men—give great weight to such considerations, and rightly so, as I believe.

"Mr. DAVIS. Then later in the article you say under one of the provisions under section 701:

"'Oil-tank carriers and like craft owned by great producing companies are required to hold open until 10 days before sailing substantially one-third of their cargo capacity for use as common carriers in order to be eligible to the compensation provided. Here, again, a provision is manifestly inserted to smooth the passage of the bill to meet objections certain to be raised by a certain class of lawmakers,' etc."

From the foregoing I really invite the reader to draw his own conclusions as to whether the subsidies of the bill was or was not devised by Mr. Marvin or his employers, the American Steamship Owners' Association.

As to the claim in your letter that the bill is at some points directly contrary to your association's recommendations, I can only say that none of you tried to get any changes in the bill, so far as I know. The only change suggested by any of you was that perhaps the basic subsidy ought to be larger. That, I think, is amply met by the provision that the board can double the basic subsidy if they wish to do so. A board so kindly to your association, I think, would not hesitate to double the subsidy "in a proper case." Some of you also may have objected to Mr. EDMONDS's ingenious 10 per cent limitation of profits clause, but I don't think they did. Certainly not seriously. It will never worry them, and may help pass the bill, as you suggested in your article.

Very truly,

RUFUS HARDY.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I renew my point of order.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman withhold that until I can correct the RECORD?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Two hundred and seventy gentlemen have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request. On the 12th day of this month the court rendered a decision in the case that is known to the tax commissioners and bankers of the United States as the Hanover case in regard to the tax on shares of stock in national banks. I ask unanimous consent that the decision be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as it is of interest and in general demand by State taxing commissioners and by the national banks of the country. I do not put it in with any view of approving or condemning the decision, but for the reasons I have given so as to be available.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to print in 8-point type the decision referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I do not know that I shall, I would like to inquire of the ranking Democratic member of the Committee on Banking and Currency as to the status of the House bill which passed the House some time ago to relieve that situation?

Mr. WINGO. That bill is in the Senate. This decision I have just referred to was handed down in New York and is subsequent to the decision of the Supreme Court in the so-called Richmond case. It goes into the question very clearly and cites the authorities and there is quite a demand for the decision. I have only been able to get hold of the decision this morning, as I happened to meet one of the attorneys in the case.

Mr. SNELL. What is the date of that?

Mr. WINGO. December 12, 1922.

Mr. STAFFORD. The decision was printed almost in full in last Thursday's issue of the New York Times. But I have no objection to printing it.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman will appreciate why I want to have it in the RECORD.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am more concerned by the fact that the Senate has not responded to the relief of the States in accordance with the House proposition. I am with the gentleman on that, or on one portion of it.

Mr. WINGO. No; on one question we are not agreed.

Following is the decision referred to:

(Decision.)

DECEMBER 12, 1922.

TAX ON CAPITAL STOCK OF NATIONAL BANKS INVALID.

Opinion reported here because of its collateral bearing on the including of dividends on national-bank stock in gross income for income-tax purposes.

COURT OF APPEALS—PEOPLE EX REL. HANOVER NATIONAL BANK, OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK, APPELLANT, v. HENRY M. GOLDFOGLE ET AL., RESPONDENTS.

Appeal from order of the appellate division, first department, affirming order of special term dismissing writ to review tax assessment.

Martin Saxe for appellant.

William H. King for respondents.

Charles D. Newton, attorney general (Edward G. Griffin of counsel), for State of New York, intervening.

Pound, J.: Relator, a banking corporation organized under the national banking act of the United States, seeks to review an assessment of its capital stock for taxation for the year 1921 on the ground that taxation thereof by the State is at a greater rate than is assessed on other moneyed capital in the hands of individuals. A national bank is an agency of the National Government. The State has no constitutional power to lay any tax upon it. Its shares of stock are taxable by the State only when and as Congress permits. (McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316; People ex rel. Bridgeport Sav. Bank v. Feitner, 191 N. Y. 88, 92; Van Allen v. Assessors, 3 Wall. [U. S.] 573.)
